[Forty-second Congress—Second and third sessions.]

S. C. POMEROY AND ALEXANDER CALDWELL, of Kansas.

April 8, 1872, a report of a joint committee appointed by the Kansas legislature to investigate charges of bribery and corruption connected with the Senatorial elections of 1867 and 1871 was presented and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Pomeroy had been elected in 1867, and Mr. Caldwell in 1871. May 11, the Senate resolved that the committee be authorized to investigate these elections. June 3, the committee reported in regard to Mr. Pomeroy's election that there was no evidence that Mr. Pomeroy had used money to influence any vote in his favor, except hearsay, and that was plainly contradicted by direct testimony; that the charges of bribery and corruption against Mr. Pomeroy, connected with his election, totally failed to be sustained by competent proof, but seem to have been urged for some purpose unknown to the committee beyond that of correcting existing evils. Two members of the committee did not concur in the last conclusion. The committee reported the testimony taken, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of Mr. Pomeroy's case.

February 17, 1873, the committee reported in regard to Mr. Caldwell's election that they could "not doubt that money was paid to some members of the legislature for their votes, and money promised to others which was not paid, and offered to others who did not accept it;" that it was a subject of discussion in the committee whether the offenses of Mr. Caldwell should be punished by expulsion, or go to the validity of his election, but that a majority were of opinion that they went to the validity of his election and had the effect to make it void. The committee submitted the evidence taken and recommended the adoption of a resolution that Mr. Caldwell was not duly and legally elected. March 24, after long debate on the resolution, before a vote was taken, Mr. Caldwell resigned his seat.

February 10, 1873, on motion of Mr. Pomeroy, the Senate resolved that a select committee investigate charges of bribery and corruption in the Senatorial election held in January, 1873, relating to the alleged purchase by Mr. Pomeroy of the vote of A. M. York, a State senator. (Mr. Pomeroy had been a candidate for re-election in January, 1873.) February 18, a memorial of B. F. Simpson was presented, praying that the committee be authorized to investigate certain other general charges of bribery against Mr. Pomeroy. The Senate resolved that the committee be directed to inquire into these general charges. March 3, the committee reported the evidence, and the conclusions that "none of the charges preferred by Mr. Simpson were sustained"; and that, in regard to the charges of Mr. York, he "had not sustained his charge by sufficient proof, contradicted as it was by the evidence of Mr. Page and Mr. Pomeroy." One member of the committee did not agree with the report. No further action on the subject was taken.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 42d Cong., 2d and 3d sess., and the reports of the committees, references to which are given in foot-notes.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

TUESDAY, March 5, 1872.

Mr. Pomeroy submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That all papers and communications relating to the election of Senators in the State of Kansas in the years 1867 and 1871 be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that they be directed to report to the Senate, after examination, what action, if any, should be taken by the Senate in relation thereto."

Mr. Pomeroy presented a printed paper, purporting to be the report of a committee of investigation of the legislature of Kansas on the Senatorial elections in that State in the years 1867 and 1871, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The reference of the paper being objected to,

Ordered, That the paper lie on the table.

On motion by Mr. Hamlin that the Senate reconsider its vote agreeing to the resolution of Mr. Pomeroy in reference to the election of Senators in the State of Kansas in 1867 and 1871, it was determined in the affirmative; and,

On motion by Mr. Hamlin,

Ordered, That the resolution lie on the table.

MONDAY, April 8, 1872.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a report of a joint committee appointed by the legislature of Kansas to investigate charges of bribery and corruption connected with the Senatorial election in that State in 1867 and 1871; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Pomeroy presented a report of a joint committee appointed by the Kansas legislature to investigate charges of bribery and corruption connected with the Senatorial elections of 1867 and 1871 in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

SATURDAY, May 11, 1872.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to investigate the election of Senator C. S. Pomeroy by the legislature of Kansas in 1867, and the election of Senator Alexander Caldwell in 1871; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that the chairman or acting chairman of said committee or any subcommittee thereof have power to administer oaths, and that the committee be authorized to sit in Washington or elsewhere during the session of Congress and in vacation."

MONDAY, May 13, 1872.

Mr. Morton presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying an investigation of the election of Hon. Alexander Caldwell as Senator from that State.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to employ a stenographer in the investigation which it has been directed to make into the Kansas Senatorial elections."

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times, by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That the sum of $10,000 be appropriated from the contingent fund of the Senate, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of the investigation into the Kansas Senatorial elections, ordered by the Senate to be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time, by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

MONDAY, June 3, 1872.

Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of May 11, 1872, to investigate the election of the Senators from Kansas, submitted a report (No. 224) thereon.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION OF MR. POMEROY IN 1867.*

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JUNE 3, 1872.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred a certified copy of the report of the joint committee of investigation appointed by the Kansas legislature of 1872 to investigate all charges of bribery and corruption connected with the Senatorial elections of 1867 and 1871, met on the 20th of April, 1872, and directed the clerk of said committee to prepare an abstract of the evidence furnished by the said report of the legislature of Kansas. On the 23d of April your committee met and adjourned over until the 24th, when, on account of sickness in the family of Senator Thurman, the case was postponed until he should return from a visit home.

On May the 11th your committee met and adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the chairman of the committee do ask the Senate for leave to send for persons and papers in reference to the elections of both 1867 and 1871, and that the committee have leave to sit in the vacation, and to take testimony by either the whole committee or a subcommittee, at Washington or elsewhere; that, in asking for authority as aforesaid, the chairman be requested to state that the committee express no opinion upon the subject."

* Taken from Senate Reports, 2d sess. 42d Cong., vol. 1, No. 224. The testimony accompanying the report is here omitted.

On the same day the Senate, in response to the request of the committee, adopted the following resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 11, 1872.

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to investigate the election of Senator S. C. Pomeroy, by the legislature of Kansas, in 1867, and the election of Senator Alexander Caldwell in 1871; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that the chairman, or acting chairman, of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, have power to administer oaths; and that the committee be authorized to sit in Washington, or elsewhere, during the session of Congress and in vacation.

Attest:

GEO. C. GORHAM,
Secretary.
By W. J. McDONALD,
Chief Clerk.

On the 13th of May your committee met, and, in accordance with the authority conferred upon them by the resolution of the Senate, directed all witnesses in reference to the charges against S. C. Pomeroy, Senator from the State of Kansas, to be summoned to appear forthwith and testify in reference to said charges, and also the clerk of the committee was directed to make inquiry who is the present custodian of the books and papers of the late Perry Fuller, of Washington, D. C., and, if such information can be had, that the party having possession of his account-books, check-books, and bank-books, for the time between December 1, 1866, and February 1, 1867, be summoned to appear with them.

On motion, the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

On the 21st day of May your committee were called together for the purpose of proceeding with the examination, a portion of the witnesses having arrived.

Senator Caldwell, of Kansas, appeared and urged an early examination and disposition of the question in reference to his election in 1871. Your committee, however, considering the time too short during the sitting of Congress to thoroughly investigate both Senatorial elections, concluded to proceed only with the investigation of the election of Mr. Pomeroy in 1867, leaving the case of Mr. Caldwell to be examined during the vacation of Congress, or at such time as may be agreed upon by your committee.

The examination of the witnesses in the case of Mr. Pomeroy was then proceeded with, and continued from day to day until the case was closed.

Your committee respectfully submit all the testimony, and report as follows:

1. That it appears from the evidence that two United States Senators were elected by the Kansas legislature in 1867, Mr. S. C. Pomeroy for a full term of six years, and Mr. Ross for an unexpired term of four years from the 4th day of March, 1867; that the candidacy of Mr. Pomeroy was generally understood by the people of Kansas during the election of members of the legislature who were to elect Senators for the State of Kansas, and that the election of Mr. Pomeroy as one of those Senators was generally conceded; that all candidates against Mr. Pomeroy for the long term withdrew from the contest, save Mr. A. L. Lee. Mr. Pomeroy, in joint convention of the two houses of the legislature, received 84 votes; Mr. Lee received 25 votes; the disparity of votes being so great as to preclude of itself the idea that the election of Mr. Pomeroy, against the will of the constituents of those who voted for him, was procured by corrupt means.

2. There is no evidence that Mr. Pomeroy, or any one for him, used any money or other valuable thing to influence any vote in his favor, or in any manner to bring about his election, except hearsay, and this is plainly contradicted by the direct testimony of the parties either to whom or by whom it is alleged such considerations were given.

3. The evidence that Mr. Pomeroy's canvass for Senator cost him considerable money is clearly shown to be the expenses paid by him for himself and friends during the Senatorial canvass, for hotel accommodations, disconnected entirely with the vote of any member, either for or against him.

4. The evidence shows that some of the friends of Mr. Pomeroy have been appointed to office under the Government of the United States, but fails to show that they were appointed in consideration of any vote or any influence used by them in procuring the election of Mr. Pomeroy; and your committee beg leave to say that they can find no fault with Mr. Pomeroy or any one else (when they recommend for appointment to office) that they recommend their friends instead of their enemies.

5. It appears from the evidence that Mr. Pomeroy engaged, for a compensation to be made, the services of the Lawrence State Journal to advance the interests of the Republican candidates and of the Republican party in the State of Kansas in the year 1866; but it also appears that said Journal broke its engagement, and supported the Conservative or Democratic ticket.

Your committee, therefore, after maturely considering the testimony adduced before them, are clearly of the opinion that the charges of bribery and corruption against S. C. Pomeroy, connected with his Senatorial election by the Kansas legislature in 1867, totally fail to be sustained by any competent proof, but seem to have been urged for some purpose, unknown to your committee, beyond that of correcting existing evils. Your committee, therefore, beg to be discharged from the further consideration of the same.

O. P. MORTON,
B. F. RICE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
H. B. ANTHONY,
MATT. H. CARPENTER,
Committee.

We concur with the other members of the committee in the finding that there is not evidence before us sufficient to show that Mr. Pomeroy's election was procured by the use of corrupt means; and having no definite, reliable information leading to the conclusion that further investigation would develop such evidence, we concur in the recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. Here we think that our duty ends. We do not think it proper to impugn the motives of those who urged this investigation. The subject was brought to the notice of the Senate by the general assembly of Kansas, and, as it seems to us, a proper respect for that body precludes an imputation of improper motives.

We cannot, therefore, concur in the last paragraph of the report, and there are other passages that do not meet our approval. For these reasons we have preferred to state our views in our own language.

MONDAY, February 17, 1873.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to investigate the election of Alexander Caldwell, a Senator from the State of Kansas in 1871, submitted a report (No. 451) accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Alexander Caldwell was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Kansas."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION OF MR. CALDWELL IN 1871.*

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Hill, Anthony, and Trumbull.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 17, 1873.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

On the 11th day of May, 1872, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to investigate the election of Senator S. C. Pomeroy by the legislature of Kansas in 1867, and the election of Senator Alexander Caldwell in 1871; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that the chairman or acting chairman of said committee or any subcommittee thereof have power to administer oaths; and that the committee be authorized to sit in Washington or elsewhere during the session of Congress and in vacation."

In obedience to this resolution the Committee on Privileges and Elections have had under consideration the election of Alexander Caldwell to the Senate of the United States in January, 1871, have taken testimony, and beg leave to submit the following report:

It is testified by Mr. Len. T. Smith, a former business partner of Mr. Caldwell, his active friend at the time of his election and during this investigation, that he made an agreement with Thomas Carney, of Leavenworth, by which, in consideration that Mr. Carney should not be a candidate for United States Senator before the legislature of Kansas, and should give his influence and support for Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Caldwell should pay him the sum of $15,000, for which amount notes were given and afterward paid, at the same time taking from Mr. Carney a written instrument in which he pledged himself in the most solemn manner not to be a candidate for the office of Senator in the approaching election.

This instrument is in the words following:

"I hereby agree that I will not under any condition of circumstances be a candidate for the United States Senate in the year 1871 without the written consent of A. Caldwell, and in case I do to forfeit my word of honor hereby pledged. I further agree and bind myself to forfeit the sum of $15,000, and authorize the publication of this agreement.

"THOS. CARNEY.

"TOPEKA, January 13, 1871."

Mr. Smith's testimony is fully corroborated by that of Mr. Carney, who admits the execution of the paper, the making of the arrangement, the taking of the notes, and the subsequent receipt of the money. The notes for the money were signed by Mr. Smith, but paid by Mr. Caldwell; and one of them, for $5,000, was made contingent upon Mr. Caldwell's election. The substance of the whole agreement, only a part of which was expressed in the writing, was that Mr. Carney should not be a candidate for the Senate against Mr. Caldwell, that he should use his influence for Mr. Caldwell, go to Topeka, meet the legislature, and do all he could to secure his election.

The first question to be considered is: Was this arrangement corrupt? Was it the use of corrupt means on the part of Mr. Caldwell to procure his election? The committee are of opinion that it was corrupt; was against public policy; was demoralizing in its character; directly contributed to destroy the purity and freedom of election, and not to be tolerated by the Senate of the United States as a means of procuring a seat in that body.

To understand the full nature of the transaction we must consider the character and position of Mr. Carney. He had been a governor of Kansas; he had once been elected a Senator of the United States by the legislature of that State, but the election was premature, being at the wrong session; he had been a candidate for the Senate at another time, and had come within 10 votes of being elected. He was well known throughout the State, had a large body of active friends, many of whom were warmly devoted to his political fortunes. His being a candidate would greatly endanger the success of Mr. Caldwell, if not certain to result in his defeat. He was from the same city with Mr. Caldwell, and his candidacy would be the more dangerous on that account. When Mr. Caldwell agreed to give him $15,000 under this arrangement it was an attempt to purchase the votes of the friends of Mr. Carney. He doubtless expected that Mr. Carney, through his influence over his friends, could bring them over to his support. They would naturally become friends to the man with whom Mr. Carney was friendly. It was, at least, a tacit part of this arrangement that Mr. Carney should conceal the mercenary part of the transaction, and place his withdrawal from the canvass and his support of Mr. Caldwell upon personal and political considerations that were honorable to himself and would be attractive to his friends; and this he did. Mr. Carney went to Topeka before the Senatorial election and remained there until it was over, working industriously for Mr. Caldwell, and exerting all his personal and political influence to secure his election. Looking at the transaction in its real character it was a sale upon the part of Mr. Carney of the votes of his personal and political friends in the legislature, to be delivered by him to Mr. Caldwell as far as possible. If it were legitimate for Mr. Caldwell to buy off Mr. Carney as a candidate, it was equally legitimate to buy off all the other candidates and have the field to himself, by which he would exert a quasi-coercion upon the members of the legislature to vote for him, having no other candidate to vote for. It was an attempt to buy the votes of members of the legislature, not by bribing them directly, but through the manipulations of another. The purchase-money was not to go to them but to Mr. Carney, who was to sell and deliver them without their knowledge. That Mr. Caldwell did procure the votes of members of the legislature, friends of Mr. Carney, ignorant of the fact that Mr. Carney was making merchandise of his political character and influence, and of their friendship for him, for which he was to receive a large sum of money, the evidence leaves no reasonable doubt.

Buying off opposing candidates, and in that way securing the votes of all or the most of their friends, is in effect buying the office. It recognizes candidacy for office as a merchantable commodity, a thing having a money value, and is as destructive to the purity and freedom of elections as the direct bribery of members of the legislature.

A candidate for the Senate without strength or merit may by purchasing the influence and support of all or a part of his competitors and withdrawing them from the canvass succeed in an election, thus not only committing a fraud upon the friends of the candidates who were purchased off, but a greater fraud upon the people of the State, who may be thus saddled with a representative in the Senate of the United States about whom they know little, for whom they care nothing, and who possesses little ability to represent their interests.

Mr. Smith, the friend of Mr. Caldwell, testifies that he paid Mr. Carney the further sum of $7,000 while at Topeka and just before the Senatorial election to meet Mr. Carney's alleged expenses while there, and through fear that Mr. Carney would after all withdraw from the arrangement and become a candidate.

Upon the check for this sum the money was drawn from the bank at Topeka in the evening by one T. J. Anderson, who testified that he gave it to Mr. Carney, and that he was ignorant of the consideration for which it was paid. Other testimony impeaches that of Mr. Anderson and raises a strong presumption that he was engaged in the purchase of votes for Mr. Caldwell, and for which this $7,000 was used, and that for his services he afterward received the sum of $5,000 from Mr. Caldwell. Mr. Carney swears positively that he did not receive this $7,000 or any part of it, but he indorsed the check at the request of Mr. Smith to enable him to procure the money from the bank; that the money was to be used in procuring votes for Mr. Caldwell, and that a package containing this money, as he believes, was placed by Mr. Anderson on a table in Mr. Carney's room, where it could be and was conveniently carried off by the parties for whom it was intended.

Taking all the testimony together, the probability is that Mr. Carney did not get the $7,000, as no good reason was presented by Mr. Smith why when Mr. Caldwell was holding Governor Carney's written promise not to be a candidate and Mr. Carney holding notes to be paid by Mr. Caldwell for $15,000 a new arrangement should be made by which Mr. Smith should pay Mr. Carney $7,000 more, making $22,000 in all.

We now come to the consideration of the transaction with Mr. Sidney Clarke. He had been a member of Congress, had been a candidate for the United States Senate during the preceding canvass before the people, and many members of the legislature were elected upon personal pledges to vote for him for Senator. When the first vote was taken in the separate houses Mr. Clarke received 27 votes, the largest number given for any candidate but one; but the votes satisfied him and his friends that he could not be elected. An arrangement was concluded between Mr. Caldwell and a Mr. Stevens, a friend of Mr. Clarke, at a late hour in the night before the joint convention of the two houses, by which Mr. Caldwell was to pay Mr. Clarke's expenses in the canvass, estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000, and Mr. Clarke was to withdraw in favor of Mr. Caldwell. At a caucus of the friends of Mr. Clarke, held at 9 o'clock on the morning of the joint convention when Mr. Caldwell was elected, Mr. Clarke made a speech and urged them to vote for Mr. Caldwell, and in joint convention his name was withdrawn and all his friends but one voted for Mr. Caldwell. Subsequently in this city Mr. Clarke had several conferences with Mr. Caldwell, in which the latter promised to comply with his engagement with Mr. Stevens and pay Mr. Clarke's expenses, estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000, but never did. Mr. Clarke was unwilling to admit that he had made an agreement to transfer his friends to Mr. Caldwell in consideration of the latter's promise to pay this money, but taking all the testimony together the committee have no doubt that the transaction between him and Mr. Clarke was as has been stated. Mr. Caldwell's subsequent refusal to pay the money to Mr. Clarke does not relieve the character of the transaction, and very probably resulted in the exposure of Mr. Caldwell and the institution of this examination.

There was nothing in the evidence to show that Mr. Clarke's expenses in the Senatorial canvass or in the preceding canvass before the people amounted to half the sum which Mr. Caldwell was to pay him.

Mr. Carney and Mr. Clarke each testifies that Mr. Caldwell told them after the election that his election had cost him $60,000. Mr. Anthony, the mayor of the city of Leavenworth, testified that Mr. Caldwell admitted to him that the election had cost him over $60,000. Mr. Burke, editor of the Leavenworth Herald, and a supporter of Mr. Caldwell in his canvass, testifies that after the election Mr. Caldwell told him that the money he had paid Mr. Carney was not more than 10 per cent. of the whole amount which the election had cost him, and on another occasion that the election had cost him more than twice his entire salary.

The committee have had much difficulty in tracing the money transactions; but the evidence shows that various sums, amounting to over $50,000, were drawn under circumstances that make it probable they were used to procure Mr. Caldwell's election. The sum of $15,000 paid to Mr. Carney has already been stated. The second sum of $7,000, which Mr. Len. T. Smith swears was paid to Mr. Carney, and which Mr. Carney denies receiving, and testifies to circumstances showing it was used for the bribery of members of the legislature, has also been referred to. It is further shown that three or four days before the election took place Mr. Caldwell's agent went into the banking house of Scott & Co., at Leavenworth, and drew the sum of $10,000 upon Mr. Caldwell's check for the avowed purpose of taking the money to Topeka by the train that morning, which was given as the reason for presenting the check before bank hours. Mr. Jacob Smith, banker at Topeka, testified that at 9 o'clock in the evening before the election took place, Dr. Morris, of Leavenworth, a very active friend of Mr. Caldwell, drew $5,000 from his bank, and that Judge Crozier, of Leavenworth, an influential supporter of Mr. Caldwell, and then at Topeka laboring for his election, drew $1,200 from the bank after banking hours at the request of Mr. Smith, which was handed over to Mr. Smith. The testimony left no doubt upon the minds of the committee that the bankers who honored these different checks at Topeka after banking hours understood that the money was to be used for political purposes. The evidence further shows that Mr T. J. Anderson subsequently received from Mr. Caldwell the sum of $5,000 for his services in the election. A draft for $10,000, drawn by the solicitor of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company upon the treasurer of that company, was presented at the Kansas Valley Bank of Topeka by Mr. T. J. Anderson on the 23d of January, the day before the election, and the money drawn upon it under circumstances which taken in connection with other testimony make it probable that the money was used for Mr. Caldwell's election. The committee have no reason to believe that they have traced all the money that was used, and in the foregoing statement have taken no account of several small sums shown to have been paid by Mr. Caldwell for the expenses of his friends while at Topeka.

Mr. William Spriggs, a former treasurer of Kansas, testified in regard to a self-constituted committee of six of Mr. Caldwell's leading friends who met from time to time at Topeka during the day and evening for five or six days before the election to confer and report progress in electioneering for Mr. Caldwell; that during the meetings of this committee it was reported by Mr. Smith what members of the legislature had been secured to vote for Mr. Caldwell, how much was offered to others, and how much was asked by others. We quote from his testimony:

"We usually met at 10 o'clock in the morning. We had a roll of the senate and of the house and kept them, and we would compare notes, and then such a member of the committee would be sent that day or at such a time to see such members of the house and such another one to see somebody else, whoever we thought would be the best man for that particular place, and then we would meet again at such another hour and report what we had done and what success we had had, and in some quite a number of times—I do not know how many. In making the report and comparing notes there was one member of the committee would report; in calling over the names he would come to such and such a man and he would say, 'We had better not count that man yet; that is under negotiation and he is a little too high; I think I can bring him down some.'"

This witness testified to several interviews with Mr. Caldwell, and we quote from his testimony:

"I will just tell you what Mr. Caldwell said to me about it. He asked me if I knew any members of the legislature that could be influenced by the use of money for their votes, and I told him that I knew two members I believed that had the reputation of having been influenced in their votes on former occasions."

And further on:

"He said if I found any members that wanted a little money for votes to send them to him and to Len. Smith.

"Mr. Caldwell said there was another class of high-toned gentlemen there in the legislature that would not sell their votes, but they put it in this way: that they had been to a pretty heavy expense in carrying their election and they would want their expenses paid, and if I met with any of that class to send them to him or to Len."

The testimony of Mr. Spriggs is very full and shows that the canvass of Mr. Caldwell was thoroughly corrupt and that money was the chief argument relied upon. Among many other things he stated that T. J. Anderson told him that he had paid Mr. Crocker, a member of the house, $1,000 for his vote; that Mr. Crocker afterward backed out and handed the money over to a Mr. Carson to be returned to Mr. Anderson; that Carson got on the cars, went home, and kept the money. Carson was afterward called by the committee and corroborated the statement, admitting that he had received the $1,000 back from Mr. Crocker to be returned to Mr. Anderson, but that he had kept the money himself for his services to Mr. Caldwell. Mr. Carney testifies that in an interview with Mr. Caldwell after the election in which he was urging him to procure an appointment for one of Mr. Carney's friends who had voted for him, Mr. Caldwell took from his pocket a memorandum-book and appeared to run over a list of names, and coming to the man referred to, said, "That man has been paid;" and Mr. Carney understood from his manner that he had in this memorandum-book a list of members with the sums paid to each; that Mr. Caldwell told him upon another occasion that he had paid Mr. Bayers the sum of $2,500 for his vote and Mr. James F Legate the sum of $1,000 for his vote. Mr. Anthony also swears that in a conversation with Mr. Caldwell that gentleman admitted to him that he had paid $2,500 for the vote of Mr. Bayers. There is much testimony showing that Len. T. Smith, Frank Drenning, James L. McDowell, George A. Smith, and T. J. Anderson, among the most active friends of Mr. Caldwell during the canvass, admitted at different times that they had offered money to members of the legislature to vote for Mr. Caldwell, in some cases specifying the members to whom it was offered and paid and in other cases that offers had been made that had not been accepted, and that negotiations were on hand with others which had not been completed. These men have denied before the committee all conversations and admissions of this character and all payment of money to members or offers to pay them, and several members of the legislature who were implicated have expressly denied that they received the money or that offers were made them.

Mr. Caldwell offered testimony showing that Mr. Carney had made threats to have him ousted from the Senate; that Mr. Anthony was hostile to him; that Mr. Burke had a lawsuit with him growing out of money furnished to Mr Burke about the time of the election; and to contradict several statements of Mr. Clarke. The most important contradictions of the testimony produced against Mr. Caldwell are made by members of the legislature who were themselves implicated or by the agents of Mr. Caldwell who were directly charged with taking a part in these corrupt practices; and there are some contradictions made by witnesses against whom there is no cause of suspicion. But taking the testimony altogether, the committee can not doubt that money was paid to some members of the legislature for their votes, and money promised to others which was not paid, and offered to others who did not accept it.

By the Constitution, each House of Congress is made the judge of elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

If a person elected to the Senate has not the constitutional qualifications, or if the election is invalid by reason of fraud or corruption, the jurisdiction to examine and determine is expressly vested in the Senate.

Another clause of the Constitution authorizes the Senate to expel a member by a two-thirds vote. The causes for which a Senator may be expelled are not limited or defined, but rest in the sound discretion of the Senate.

It has been a subject of discussion in the committee whether the offenses of which they believe Mr. Caldwell to have been guilty should be punished by expulsion or go to the validity of his election, and a majority are of the opinion that they go to the validity of his election and had the effect to make it void. Wherefore the committee recommend to the Senate the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That Alexander Caldwell was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Kansas.

In conclusion the committee remark that while Mr. Caldwell did things to procure his election which can not be tolerated by the Senate, they believe he was as much sinned against as sinning. He was a novice in politics and evidently in the hands of men who encouraged him in the belief that Senatorial elections in Kansas were carried by the use of money.

INVESTIGATION OF THE CHARGES OF BRIBERY PREFERRED AGAINST MR. POMEROY IN THE SENATORIAL ELECTION OF 1873.

MONDAY, February 10, 1873.

Mr. Pomeroy rose to a question of privilege, and having addressed the Senate upon the subject of certain charges made in connection with the recent Senatorial election in the State of Kansas, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the charges of bribery and corruption in the late Senatorial election in the State of Kansas, relating to the alleged purchase by the Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, United States Senator from Kansas, of the vote of A. M. York, a member of the senate of that State, be, and the same are hereby, referred to a special committee to be appointed by this body, consisting of five members; and that the said committee be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the same; and for that purpose to send for persons and papers, summon witnesses, employ a stenographer, and make such report to this Senate as in their judgment shall be justified by the law and the facts."

Whereupon

The Vice-President appointed as such committee Mr. Frelinghuysen, Mr. Buckingham, Mr. Alcorn, Mr. Thurman, and Mr. Vickers.

THURSDAY, February 13, 1873.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, from the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the expenses of the select committee appointed on the 10th instant to inquire into certain charges of bribery and corruption in connection with the recent Senatorial election in Kansas, is hereby directed to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, under the order of the chairman of said select committee, the vouchers therefor to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

MONDAY, February 17, 1873.

Mr. Frelinghuysen submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the select committee appointed to inquire into charges of bribery and corruption in the recent Senatorial election in Kansas have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

TUESDAY, February 18, 1873.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the memorial of B. F. Simpson, representing, as attorney, A. M. York and others before the select committee of the Senate to inquire into certain allegations against the Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, praying that said committee be authorized to receive the statements of certain members of the legislature of the State of Kansas that they were offered money or other valuable considerations by the agents and friends of the said Pomeroy at the recent election of Senator in Kansas.

On motion by Mr. Sherman that the said memorial be referred to the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. S. C. Pomeroy,

After debate,

Mr. Sherman having withdrawn the motion submitted by him,

Mr. Ferry, of Connecticut, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the committee charged with the investigation of the charges against Hon. S. C. Pomeroy be directed to inquire into any allegations of bribery or corruption by said Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in the recent election for United States Senator by the legislature of Kansas."

SATURDAY, February 22, 1873.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a resolution of the legislature of Kansas, declaring that it is due to the dignity and honor of that State that Hon. S. C. Pomeroy should resign his office of United States Senator; which was referred to the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. S. C. Pomeroy.

MONDAY, March 3, 1873.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, from the select committee appointed to inquire into certain allegations against S. C. Pomeroy, submitted a report (No. 523) thereon.

Mr. Vickers and Mr. Thurman, members of the committee, each submitted his views concerning the charges against Mr. Pomeroy; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report (No. 523).

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CHARGES OF BRIBERY PREFERRED AGAINST MR. POMEROY IN THE SENATORIAL ELECTION OF 1873.*

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 3, 1873.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, from the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, submitted the following report:

The committee appointed to investigate the charges of bribery in the recent Senatorial election of Kansas, preferred against Senator Pomeroy by A. M. York and by B. F. Simpson, respectfully report:

That without any avoidable delay they have performed the duty imposed upon them.

The charges preferred by Mr. Simpson consist of a number of alleged specific acts of bribery or attempts to bribe. The charge of Mr. York is that of a single act of bribery.

I. Attention is first invited to the charges of Mr. Simpson.

Mr. O'Driscoll, a member of the legislature, testifies to four different attempts to bribe him. These charges are contested by the testimony of Asa Lowe, David Payne, J. S. Hoke, S. P. Brown, and other witnesses referred to hereafter.

Frank Bacon, a member of the Kansas legislature, speaks of two attempts to bribe him, and his charges are contested by Albert H. Horton and other witnesses referred to hereafter.

William H. Bond, a member of the Kansas legislature, speaks of three attempts to influence him improperly. These charges are contested by the testimony of John J. Murphy, Albert H. Horton, C. A. Rohrabacker, and two other witnesses referred to hereafter.

C. A. Rohrabacker makes the allegation in his testimony that Senator Pomeroy told him to give Mr. Davis, a member of the legislature, two or three hundred dollars. That this charge is entitled to no weight sufficiently appears by the examination of Mr. Rohrabacker's evidence.

The committee are unanimously of the opinion that even if the foregoing transactions were made out as cases of bribery, there is no sufficient evidence to connect Senator Pomeroy with any of them. Mr. William Simpson, a member of the legislature from the neutral lands of Kansas, testifies that he went to Senator Pomeroy's rooms on the 28th of January, as the election was to occur on the 29th and 30th of January, to inquire about the bill in Congress for the relief of the settlers on those lands, and that Senator Pomeroy told him that if he would vote for him he would pay the expenses of Mr. Laughlin, the agent of those settlers at Washington, and who was supported by the voluntary contributions of those settlers; that the number of settlers is about 25,000, and that Mr. Laughlin's compensation is small. On this charge there is some difference of opinion in the committee; the majority of the committee holding that if the charge was uncontradicted and unexplained, while it would unquestionably present the case of an improper appeal to "motive," it is at least questionable whether it would be the crime of attempting to bribe—not because of the small distributive amount of Mr. Simpson's contribution, but because he was under no obligation to pay anything. If the sum Mr. Simpson was to pay was a tax, the case would be different. But Senator Pomeroy opposes his evidence to that of Mr. Simpson, and testifies that Mr. Simpson told him how little money Mr. Laughlin, the agent, had, and that he had so written him, and that he had no means to continue at Washington save by voluntary contribution, and that he (Pomeroy) told Simpson he was a friend of the settlers and would in any event contribute to his support, and that when he reached Washington he did accordingly give Mr. Laughlin $50; and Mr. Pomeroy then adds in his testimony, "and hence it is certain that my contribution had no relation to any man's vote."

A majority of the committee are of opinion that under this state of facts, and under the evidence, this charge of bribery is not affirmatively sustained. The witnesses, Judge Albert H. Horton, George T. Anthony, John A. Martin, and Mr. Legate, the confidential friends and advisers of Mr. Pomeroy in the canvass, and in a position where they would naturally know, state that they have no knowledge of Mr. Pomeroy using, or authorizing to be used, any improper influences in the election.

And Mr. Pomeroy most positively denies that he ever, directly or indirectly, paid or promised to pay any individual one dollar, or any other sum, for his vote for him at the late Senatorial election.

* Taken from Senate Reports, 42d Cong., 3d sess., No. 523. The evidence accompanying the report is here omitted

A majority of the committee are of opinion that none of the charges preferred as aforesaid by Mr. B. F. Simpson against Mr. Pomeroy have been sustained.

II. We now come to the consideration of the specific charge of bribery made by Mr. A. M. York.

Mr. York's statement is that Mr. Pomeroy gave him, on Monday, the 28th of January, $2,000, and on Tuesday, the 29th of January, $5,000, as a bribe to vote for him in the joint convention on Wednesday.

Mr. Pomeroy's statement is that he did give him the money at the times and in the amounts stated, not as a bribe, but to carry to Mr. Page as a loan from Pomeroy to aid Page in the purchase of thirty bonds of the United States of the denomination of $1,000, Page having $25,000 in currency.

The question the committee is to determine is not which, if either, of these two statements, painfully irreconcilable, is in all its details true; but the question is whether, taking all the testimony together and weighing it, Mr. York has sustained his charge.

There are circumstances that legitimately affect the credibility of Mr. York in this transaction. John M. Holmes testifies to hearing Mr. York say after the Senatorial election that "he had determined to defeat Mr. Pomeroy, cost what it might, and that his exposure of Mr. Pomeroy was the work of time." Mr. York testifies that he, W. A. Johnson, G. C. Horton, Major B. F. Simpson, spoken of as a candidate for the United States Senate, had a consultation on Monday evening, January 28, and it was agreed that if Pomeroy should offer York money he was to take it and expose him in the convention on Wednesday. It was, in the language of Mr. York, the conclusion of those gentlemen there, at that time, that there was no other way of defeating him, and that he would be elected; and it was further there agreed that the money should be appropriated to the school fund of Kansas, and they pledged themselves to secrecy.

Chester Thomas says that Mr. B. F. Simpson, who acted as counsel for Mr. York in this investigation, and is named by him as above, said to him, "Well, we could not afford to have Pomeroy elected; we had to defeat him some way; we were beat, and we had to do something."

I. L. Sharp gave like testimony. It appears that the plan was kept secret until Wednesday at the joint convention, when an excited exposure was sprung upon that body and the money was exhibited by Mr. York, and he made the statement that members of the legislature had Mr. Pomeroy's money burning in their pockets, of which fact we not only have no proof, but it appears that Mr. York had no such knowledge. It appears that an effort was made by members to adjourn and also to have a recess for an hour or two, that the truth of the allegations made might be ascertained, and that Mr. York resisted these efforts, for fear, as he says, that Mr. Pomeroy might be able to appoint his own successor. Thus, even if Mr. York's, and certainly if Mr. Pomeroy's, statement be taken as true, Mr. York was the principal actor in an effort not only to betray and defeat Mr. Pomeroy, but to deprive the State of Kansas of its free and deliberate choice of a Senator.

These circumstances do not prove that Mr. Pomeroy did not bribe Mr. York, but they do impair the credibility of Mr. York as a witness, for when a line of deception has been entered upon no one can say when it is dropped and the golden thread of truth adopted.

The truth which the committee seek is as to what occurred in the room on Monday and Tuesday when Pomeroy delivered the money to York. They were alone, and contradict each other. There is, however, evidence relating to Mr. York's purpose in going to Mr. Pomeroy's room. Mr. York says that Mr. Hairgrove told him that Mr. Pomeroy would be glad to have a business interview with him, and that invitation assured him (York) that Mr. Pomeroy was about to offer him money, and was the reason of the private consultation, before alluded to, with William Johnson, B. F. Simpson, and J. C. Horton, when the plan of operations was adopted. William Johnson says Mr. York said at that consultation that Hairgrove had invited him to Pomeroy's room on a business matter, or to have a business interview, that night, and from that they all concluded that that meant a money proposition. J. C. Horton says York did not give the name of the person who had invited him to Mr. Pomeroy's room. B. F. Simpson, the other person present at the consultation, acted as counsel for Mr. York before the committee, and was not sworn.

Mr. Hairgrove says he did not give any invitation to Mr. York to call at Mr. Pomeroy's room; that he had a conversation with Mr. York and told him that if he wanted to see Mr. Pomeroy he would so tell Pomeroy, but that he never took any message from Mr. Pomeroy to Mr. York.

Mr. J. Q. Page testifies that after his interview with Mr. Pomeroy on this Monday he saw Mr. York and told him that Mr. Pomeroy would probably give him a package of money for him (Page) and that he wanted him (York) to bring it to him. This York denies.

Mr. York's testimony is, in effect, though not in words, that on Monday evening before he had the interview with Pomeroy he not only supposed he was about to bribe him, but was so certain and so assured of it that a pledge of secrecy as to it was entered into with his associates as to the coming event; that it was determined that the bribery should not be disclosed on Tuesday in the senate or house, but should first be made known in joint convention on Wednesday; that it was assumed the amount was to be so considerable that it would be a suitable contribution to the school fund, to which it was by agreement destined, and that to make proof thereafter clear that he had received the money from Mr. Pomeroy he was searched at 7 p. m. and found to have but about $40 on his person; after which search, it may be remarked, York went about the town and saw some two hundred persons before he saw Mr. Pomeroy at 12 p. m., and the only foundation for this assurance of the coming bribe, according to Mr. York, was the fact that Mr. Hairgrove had invited him to a "business interview" to be had with Mr. Pomeroy that evening; and this, as before stated, Mr. Hairgrove denies.

The committee are at a loss to discover from whence Mr. York derived this assurance that he was to be bribed, and that it was to be that night, and to be in a large sum, from any fact consistent with his statement. If it be true, as Mr. Page testifies, that he had that afternoon told him that Mr. Pomeroy would probably give him a package of money to bring to him, one can more readily understand this confidence that he was to receive money. But that he had any such notice Mr. York denies. If Mr. York was acting on information Page gave him, there is no evidence that he communicated that information to his associates.

Another improbability in Mr. York's statement is that Mr. Pomeroy gave him $7,000 in cash, not for his unconditional support in the senate on Tuesday and in joint convention on Wednesday if there should be a vote there, but that on Monday night he agreed to give him $8,000 for his vote under a stipulation that he might vote against him in the senate on Tuesday (when his vote might be as desirable as on Wednesday), and that he was at liberty even to reconsider his conclusion as to voting for him on Wednesday, and that on such an understanding he paid him on Monday $2,000, and on Tuesday, after he had that day voted against him, $5,000 more. And Mr. Pomeroy did this while it appears in evidence, beyond question, that he was either honorably refraining from all corrupt influences to promote his election or that he was carefully on his guard against being entrapped in the use of money, and while it appears that Mr. York was attending the anti-Pomeroy caucus, acting as its secretary, and known by Mr. Pomeroy to have been opposed to him.

Now we come to the consideration of the statement of Mr. Pomeroy that he gave Mr. York this $7,000 to take to Mr. Page to enable him to purchase bonds of the United States to aid in the establishment of a national bank.

In considering this statement Mr. Pomeroy is entitled, to the extent that other men are, to the presumption of innocence—a presumption somewhat strengthened by the fact that his accusers have failed to sustain their other charges of bribery against him in the same election.

Mr. Page was a man of means and a banker, living at Independence. Mr. McBartney, of the national bank at Junction City; Mr. Shaw, of the Paola National Bank, and Mr. Legate, the clerk of Mr. Pomeroy's committee, all heard Mr. Page conversing with Mr. Pomeroy during the Senatorial canvass at Topeka about starting a national bank at Independence, part of the conversation relating to the amount of capital required, but not as to Mr. Pomeroy advancing any part of the capital.

Mr. Maxson testifies to Mr. Pomeroy inquiring of him prior to 27th January as to Mr. Page's pecuniary responsibility; that he told Mr. Pomeroy that he was responsible and trustworthy.

Mr. Page lived in the same town with Mr. York, and they were friends. It appears by Mr. York's testimony that he called on Mr. Pomeroy with Mr. Page some ten days before the occurrence to which our investigation is directed. Mr. Page testifies that he requested Mr. Pomeroy's influence to obtain a national bank at Independence; that Mr. Pomeroy told him it would require $50,000, but if he had $30,000 in United States bonds he could pay the balance in installments. Page said that he could raise $25,000 in currency, and that Mr. Pomeroy said he would help him to the balance, as he had helped other young men, and that Mr. Pomeroy said he expected to have money before the election, and would let him have it.

On Monday, Mr. Page says, he went to Mr. Pomeroy and told him he was going home, and it was arranged that Mr. Pomeroy was to send him the money by Mr. Bell or Mr. York. It is to be observed that Mr. Pomeroy then had in his possession the $7,000; and that fact should receive its weight as affecting Mr. Pomeroy's statement. And Mr. Page says that, on the same day, he told Mr. York that it was probable that Mr. Pomeroy would hand him (Mr. York) a package of money for him; and if so, he wished him to bring it to him.

Mr. Page says that he on Monday told Mr. Hairgrove, who was also a promoter of Mr.

Pomeroy's election, that he was going home, but was persuaded by Mr. Hairgrove to stay; that he did not stay at the same hotel with Mr. Pomeroy, and did not see him again to speak with him while at Topeka, though he did see him from the door of Mr. Pomeroy's room.

Mr. Pomeroy states, on his oath, that Monday evening, January 27, Mr. York called on him, having sent word that he was coming, and informed Mr. Pomeroy of what was going on at the anti-Pomeroy caucus; spoke of the favor Mr. Pomeroy had granted his friend Page, and said that Page had requested him to get the money and forward it to him at Independence, and that he (York) would leave soon after the election for home.

Mr. Pomeroy told him he was not prepared at that time to furnish it, although he said he had promised it to Page before he (Pomeroy) left the city. Mr. York said perhaps Mr. Pomeroy had no confidence in him. Mr. Pomeroy assured him of his confidence and said that he could furnish $2,000 at any time, and thought he should be able to pay the $5,000 next day, and paid him $2,000 then. It is proper to notice that on this Monday Mr. Pomeroy had the $7,000 with him.

During the next day, Mr. Pomeroy says, he sent Mr. Knight and Mr. Lemuel Pomeroy to look for Mr. Page to inform him of the transaction, if he had not left the city, and to see if it was all right. They could not find him. Neither Lemuel Pomeroy nor Knight was examined on this point. That on the afternoon of that day (Tuesday) Mr. Pomeroy paid Mr. York the $5,000 in currency, in packages of $1,000, with the bank-mark on them.

When the alleged exposure was made in the convention, Judge Horton, who was present, says that when a recess was refused, as soon as he could get out of the crowded house, he went to Mr. Pomeroy's room and told him what had happened; that Mr. Pomeroy was overwhelmed; that no one defended him, and said he had done nothing wrong; that while they were talking a messenger came in and said that the convention was voting for Senator; that there being much excitement at the hotel, Mr. Pomeroy went to a private house, and as soon as there Mr. Pomeroy told him substantially what Mr. Pomeroy has stated before this committee—that Mr. Pomeroy said that he supposed Mr. Page, now thinking he was going to lose the money, might go back on him and he would have trouble; but if Page would stand up to the agreement there was no question that before the country and his friends he would be fully vindicated.

There are several questions that arise in this transaction which are not satisfactorily explained.

Why did not Mr. Pomeroy deliver the entire $7,000 to Mr. York on Monday, instead of $2,000 on Monday and $5,000 on Tuesday?

It is true Mr. Pomeroy says the $5,000 was locked up in his valise and the key with his clerk, but the clerk was near; and it is also true that Mr. Pomeroy says he sent out on Tuesday to find Mr. Page, if he was in town, to see that it was all right, and could not find him; and he says that when he hesitated in paying Mr. York anything on Monday evening he considered it a want of confidence. The same difficulty exists, too, if we adopt Mr. York's statement. On the theory of his story, why did not Mr. Pomeroy pay the whole $7,000 on Monday? He says he only paid him then $2,000.

Why did not Mr. Page, who was present at the convention when the alleged exposure was made, state that Mr. York was to bring him a package of money from Mr. Pomeroy?

It is true it was not certain the money was to be sent; the sum was not definitely fixed; it was to be from eight to ten thousand dollars. Neither was it known to him whether it would be sent by Mr. Bell or Mr. York; and yet it would seem natural for him to have spoken.

How did it happen that no one was present at either of the two interviews between Mr. York and Mr. Pomeroy? Mr. Pomeroy speaks of that fact as merely accidental, he not being entirely certain whether any one was present or not. It is clear, however, that they were alone, and it is unfortunate for the solution of this question that they were so.

How did it happen that Mr. Page and Mr. Pomeroy, holding their relations, did not meet when both in Topeka from Monday to Wednesday? This may have been accidental, if such was the fact. Mr. Page says that he did go to Mr. Pomeroy's rooms, but that there was a great press of people there, so that he could not reach him.

Why did not Mr. Pomeroy deliver the $7,000 to Mr. Page himself when he called on Monday? He then had the money.

Why did not Mr. Pomeroy give Mr. York the money he was to take to Mr. Page in a sealed package?

Mr. Pomeroy may have desired, in view of the coming election, to conciliate Mr. York by showing him that he was assisting his friend Page, by showing him that he was aiding in establishing a bank in his town, and by reposing confidence in him; but even the suggestion of this improper motive is not a satisfactory answer to these questions.

There are also some discrepancies between the statements of Mr. Pomeroy and Mr. Page, such as to whether it was in the morning or in the afternoon of Monday that Mr.

Page last called on Mr. Pomeroy; perhaps they are not other than such as show the absence of arrangement between them as witnesses. These are questions, and there may be others, to which the committee do not find satisfactory answers.

The committee, some of whom were absent on other duty from time to time as the evidence was being taken, did not receive the printed testimony until the morning of Saturday, the 1st instant, and have given the evidence such examination as in the press of business they have been able, which has been by no means as thorough as was desirable.

The committee, bearing in mind while examining the evidence that the whole transaction, whatever view be taken of it, is the result of a concerted plot to defeat Mr. Pomeroy, and remembering that the burden of proof is on the party making the accusation, have come to the conclusion that Mr. York has not sustained his charge by sufficient proof, contradicted as it is by the evidence of Mr. Page and Mr. Pomeroy.

The committee report herewith the evidence taken and the briefs of the respective counsel.

VIEWS OF MR. VICKERS.

I cannot forbear saying that this case is not entirely free from difficulty and embarrassment; but as a preliminary remark, I can say that I do not think any connection has been proved between the persons alleged to have offered bribes, being the friends of Mr. Pomeroy, and that Senator. Most, if not all, these instances of attempt to bribe have been denied by the persons who it was said made the offer. Nothing has been traced to Mr. Pomeroy, and there is no difficulty in acquitting him of all charges of that character. The counsel for the prosecution, when the testimony was admitted, proposed to connect Mr. Pomeroy with them, directly or circumstantially. The result proved a failure to do so. I do not think that the offer of Mr. Pomeroy to assist Mr. Laughlin, an agent of certain poor settlers upon neutral lands in Southern Kansas, if Mr. William Simpson would support him for Senator, in connection with the surrounding circumstances, is of such a character as to amount to a direct offer to bribe, although the motive held out to Mr. Simpson cannot be approved. Mr. Pomeroy denies substantially any motive or attempt to influence Mr. Simpson's vote, in the conversation held between them.

I dismiss this part of the case, and come to the charge of actual bribery made by Mr. York against Mr. Pomeroy. Mr. York has testified before the committee, unequivocally, to the offer of a bribe by Mr. Pomeroy to him for his vote, as a member of the legislature of Kansas, for Mr. Pomeroy for the place of United States Senator; that Mr. Pomeroy paid him $2,000 on Monday night preceding the election on Tuesday, and $5,000 on Wednesday, before the meeting of the joint convention of the legislature on that day; that he (Mr. York) produced the money before the convention, stated all the circumstances, and declared that he knew of five or six members of the convention who had Mr. Pomeroy's money burning in their pockets, and he would disclose their names at the proper time. Mr. Pomeroy, in his testimony before the committee, denied emphatically the truth of Mr. York's statement, and averred that he handed him $2,000 and the $5,000 to him to be delivered to Mr. Page, a banker at Independence, to whom he had promised to loan the money to aid in establishing a national bank at Independence, in Kansas. Mr. Page swears that he told Mr. Pomeroy to send the money by Mr. York, or Mr. Bell (a member of the legislature), and that he told Mr. York that he had told Mr. Pomeroy, on Monday preceding the election, to hand the money over to him, to be carried to Mr. Page. Mr. Page also swears that he did not leave Topeka till Thursday, the day after the election, but did not converse with Mr. Pomeroy after Monday. Mr. Page had several conversations with Mr. Pomeroy upon the subject of establishing a national bank—some of them in the presence of others.

The following is a statement of part of the cross-examination of Mr. Pomeroy before the committee:

"Question (to Mr. Pomeroy). You say that on Monday night you gave to Mr. York $2,000; where, at that time, were the $5,000?—Answer. They were in my valise; not in my trunk.

"Q. Why did you not give him the $5,000 as well as the $2,000?—A. I had not it with me in the room at the time, and I intended to see Mr. Page the next morning.

"Q. In what room was it that you gave Mr. York the $2,000?—A. In what they call my private room.

"Q. Your reception room?—A. No; back of that.

"Q. Where was your valise that contained the $5,000?—A. It was in a closet, or in a place which I extemporized for a closet, behind my trunk.

"Q. In the same room?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Then why did you not give him the $5,000 at the same time that you gave him the $2,000?—A. For the reason that I wanted to see Mr. Page.

"Q. Had Mr. Page told you, Mr. Pomeroy, you could give the money to Mr. York?—A. Yes, sir; he had told me I might send it to him by Mr. York; that he was going to leave town, and to send it by Mr. York or by Mr. Bell.

"Q. When was it that Mr. Page told you to send the money by either of those gentlemen?—A. On Monday.

"Q. In the forenoon?—A. In the forenoon, the same day.

"Q. You say you did not give him the $5,000 because you expected to see Mr. Page the next day?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You knew, then, that Mr. Page had not left Topeka then?—A. I did not know whether he had or not. He had told me he thought he should go. I sent out for him on Tuesday twice, to find out whether he had gone.

"Q. As he had told you you might send the money by Mr. York, why did you hesitate to give Mr. York the whole $7,000?—A. For two reasons: First, I wanted to know if it was all right from Mr. Page; and then I had not the $5,000 accessible at that time.

"Q. Did I not understand you that the $5,000 were in the same room?—A. Yes, sir; but in a valise. I kept money and private papers in a valise which Mr. Lemuel Pomeroy, my clerk, had the control of and key of; but the trunk I had the key of myself.

"Q. You had not the key of the valise in which the $5,000 were?—A. No, sir; I had not.

"Q. Where was Mr. Lemuel Pomeroy at that time?—A. He was in the reception room or abed. He was about the hotel.

"Q. I understand you took no memorandum from Mr. York that you had delivered the money to him?—A. I did not.

"Q. Was this a subscription to the stock of that bank?—A. No, sir.

"Q. It was a loan?—A. It was a loan.

"Q. Interest-bearing or not?—A. I had made no particular arrangement. I told him I would help him to money enough with what he had got to buy thirty bonds. He was to settle with me after he got the currency here.

"Q. How long was he to have the money?—A. I think it was thirty or forty days. It generally takes thirty days after putting the bonds in to get the currency from the Department."

I have not referred to all the testimony, but only a small portion of it, the whole being printed, and to which the Senate is referred; but I have noticed the material portions of Mr. York's and Mr. Pomeroy's and Mr. Page's, so as to bring the point at issue more distinctly and prominently into view. It will be seen that Mr. York stated to the joint convention that he knew of five or six members of that body who had Mr. Pomeroy's money burning in their pockets, and at a proper time he would disclose their names. A few days subsequent, when told by a member that his statement of that fact, and the manner of making it, impressed his mind with the supposition or belief that he (York) had received his information from Pomeroy, he made no reply nor entered into any explanation. Mr. York, when interrogated before the committee, does not remember the statement made in reference to the bribery of other members, and pleaded excitement as an excuse for his defect of recollection. That part of the declarations of Mr. York before the convention had, no doubt, its effect upon their minds, coupled with the revelations about the money transaction and the production of the funds, and doubtless he intended it should have. He had Mr. Pomeroy's defeat in view, and as auxiliary to other statements they were introduced. This additional charge of bribery of other members was of such a notable character which, if true, could not so soon be forgotten. It would require the largest measure of charity to believe that Mr. York could have forgotten them, or the charge which he made. The conclusion is inevitable that he stated as facts what he did not know, or, in other words, that he manufactured the statement for the occasion. Mr. Pomeroy denies all the material facts, and asserts that the money was handed to Mr. York to be taken to Mr. Page. He denies explicitly every offer directly or indirectly to bribe Mr. York, or the offer or delivery of money for his vote. But there are circumstances connected with the transaction that cast a sombre hue over portions of it. The lateness of the hour; the place, the room of Mr. Pomeroy; the absence of all witnesses; the fact that Mr. Page was then in Topeka; the delivery of a portion of the money, and the balance on Wednesday morning, the day of the meeting of the convention; the limited acquaintance of the parties; no receipt or memorandum taken; the fact that Mr. Borland loaned Mr. Pomeroy $5,000 on the Friday preceding (Mr. Pomeroy states, in his testimony, he wanted it for Mr. Page); the fact that on Saturday following he did not inform Mr. Page he had the money; that on Monday he told Mr. Page that he expected to receive the money before he left Topeka, and was told by Mr. Page to send it by Mr. York or Mr. Bell (Mr. York residing in the same town with Mr. Page—Independence), when he had the Friday before borrowed the money from Mr. Borland, and had it in his possession at the time he told Mr. Page he expected to receive it; and that the money was not inclosed in any envelope; the fact that Mr. Pomeroy states nothing was said about security or interest (although the parties had not known each other for more than one or two years, and resided at different and distant points); that Mr. Page states he was to have it without interest; the additional facts elicited in the cross-examination of Mr. Pomeroy by one of the committee, that the reason he did not pay over the whole $7,000 to York on Monday night, but only $2,000, was that he wanted to see Mr. Page first; and, on further cross-examination, that he had not the key of the valise where the $5,000 was placed; first that the money was not in the same room (the back room) where the parties were, and afterwards that it was. These and other circumstances connected with the affair show discrepancy apparently irreconcilable. Mr. Pomeroy, when testifying, would naturally state the case as favorable to himself as it could be done consistently with the facts.

On the other hand is to be considered the circumstances leading to, attendant, and consequent upon the alleged receipt of money by Mr. York from Mr. Pomeroy. Four persons conspired to defeat Mr. Pomeroy's election to the Senate of the United States; the plan of operations was concocted at night, and Mr. York, as the chief conspirator, was selected or volunteered to carry out the programme. He went to Mr. Pomeroy's rooms very late at night. His object was to obtain Mr. Pomeroy's confidence and his money, and then betray him. He induced Mr. Pomeroy to believe that he would be his friend, but that he wanted money. He asserts that he sold his promised support to Mr. Pomeroy for $7,000; received the $2,000 before he left, and the balance, of $5,000, the next day; that he took the money to the joint convention, made an exciting speech and exposure, and strenuously opposed all motions for adjournment or recess to allow Mr. Pomeroy an opportunity for denial or explanation. Although a witness who acknowledges the turpitude of his conduct, and the iniquitous means he resorted to to deceive and induce another to commit an offense that he might betray him, may possibly be believed, yet the mind cannot relieve itself of the unfavorable effect which the facts stated and the moral taint of the witness must produce. Detectives, it is said, are employed by governments and by individuals, and to use stratagems and devices to detect suspected offenders. But the cases, I presume, are not exactly parallel. Mr. York and Mr. Pomeroy were personal and political friends, and Mr. York admits that he sought Mr. Pomeroy and exerted his influence to induce him to commit a crime by the offer of a very valuable consideration. A detective may lay his plans and place temptations in the way of one he wishes to entrap, but I do not suppose that he solicits and bargains for its commission. I should be reluctant to credit the testimony of one who confessed to such practices, unless he was strongly corroborated. The true theory should be that the evidence of one who acknowledges his own wrongful and vicious purposes and acts to seduce another into the commission of crime should be corroborated in the essentials of his testimony. While he may be competent to testify, his credibility is sensibly and materially affected. Unless some such rule prevail, any citizen in the community might be unjustly convicted upon the false testimony of a sharp but unprincipled witness. Character alone will sometimes outweigh the charge of an accuser, unless corroborated. In my opinion, neither governments nor individuals should countenance the violation of truth or morality to accomplish any purpose.

Taking all the testimony and circumstances into consideration, and weighing them carefully in equal scales, I cannot decide that the guilt of Mr. Pomeroy is established beyond a reasonable doubt. If I were a judge or a juror, I could not convict upon such testimony. The duty of the committee was to take the testimony and report upon it to the Senate, with their convictions of its bearing and effect. They have, in the short time allowed, and under difficulties and incoveniences arising out of their Senatorial duties and engagements on other committees, and some delay in receiving the printed testimony, been prevented from giving as thorough a consideration of the evidence as they desired to do. But considering the nature and character of the testimony for the prosecution and defense, with all the surrounding circumstances, I have not been able to conclude, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the charges against Mr. Pomeroy have been sustained.

G. VICKERS.

VIEWS OF MR. THURMAN.

I cannot agree with the report of the majority of the committee. I think that the testimony proves a corrupt offer by Mr. Pomeroy to Senator Simpson, of the Kansas legislature, to obtain the vote of the latter.

I also believe that the testimony convicts Mr. Pomeroy of having attempted to bribe Senator York, of that legislature, to vote for him; that Pomeroy delivered to York $7,000 is not denied. The only material issue between them is, for what purpose was the money delivered? York says that it was a bribe for his vote. Pomeroy says that it was handed to York to carry it to one Page, whom Pomeroy had promised to assist in starting a national bank. In my judgment the statements of Mr. Pomeroy on this subject are contradictory, are inconsistent with Page's statements; are so opposed to the usual circumstances attending a business transaction, and are so improbable, especially in view of the circumstances attending the Senatorial election, that reliance cannot be placed upon them. Perceiving no good to result from an elaborate statement of the testimony and reasons that bring me to these conclusions, I refrain from making such statement. Were there time for the Senate to consider the subject fully I should feel it my duty to give at large the reasons for my convictions. But this is the last day of the session and of Mr. Pomeroy's Senatorial term. Before the reports can be printed, much less considered, the session will be at an end. I therefore say no more than to repeat the conclusions to which my mind, has, reluctantly and painfully, been brought.

[Second and third sessions Forty-second Congress, and special session, March, 1873.]

POWELL CLAYTON,

Senator from Arkansas from March 25, 1871, till March 3, 1877.

January 9, 1872, the Joint Select Committee to inquire into the Condition of the late Insurrectionary States reported to the Senate that certain testimony taken by them tended to impeach the official character and conduct of Mr. Clayton; that the committee had not prosecuted the inquiry beyond taking the testimony of two witnesses, deciding that the subject-matter did not come within the limits of the investigation they were directed to make; that they reported to the Senate this testimony, recommending that the Senate take such action as it deem proper. The Senate resolved that the report and testimony be referred to a select committee to investigate and report upon the charges. June 10, 1872, the committee reported that the investigation was completed, but that the committee were unable at that time to arrange the testimony and report back such parts of it as were relevant; that they held it but the plainest justice to Mr. Clayton that they should make known the general result of their investigation; that they consequently submitted a partial report, reserving the right to submit a final report with the testimony, and recommending that the Senate delay action on the subject until such time; that the charges were not sustained, and that the testimony failed to impeach the Senator's official conduct or character. There was a minority report, which did not enter into the merits of the case, but held that the action of the committee in reporting at that time was premature. February 26, 1873, the committee submitted the evidence, and made a final report, recommending the adoption of a resolution that the charges referred to the committee were not sustained, and that they be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. There was a minority report holding that the charge made of procuring his seat by the corrupt use of money was sustained by the evidence, and that he also obtained 5 votes, which made his majority, by giving to electors lucrative offices when he was governor, as a consideration for their votes. March 25, 1873, the resolution was agreed to.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 42d Cong., 2d and 3d sess., and the reports of the committee from Senate Reports, 3d sess. 42d Cong., No. 512.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1872.

Mr. Scott, from the Joint Select Committee to investigate Alleged Outrages in Southern States, submitted the following report (No. 15):

At a meeting of "the Joint Select Committee to inquire into the Condition of the late Insurrectionary States, so far as regards the execution of the laws and the safety of the lives and property of the citizens of the United States," convened at their room in the Capitol on the 22d of September, 1871, Messrs. Scott, Pool, and Blair were appointed a subcommittee to examine the witnesses then in attendance; which subcommittee organized on the 23d of September, 1871, and examined Edward Wheeler, of Arkansas. On the 25th of September, 1871, said subcommittee examined William G. Whipple, of Arkansas.

The testimony of these witnesses tends to impeach the official character and conduct of a member of the United States Senate from the State of Arkansas, and also to affect the right of a member of the House of Representatives from that State to retain his seat in the House. Other evidence of the same character was offered, and one of the gentlemen affected by this testimony claimed the right to bring witnesses before the committee to contradict or explain the same. The committee, however, upon consideration decided that the subject-matter to which said testimony related did not come within the limits of the investigation they were directed to make, and therefore declined to prosecute the inquiry any further, discharging a witness who had been subpœnaed and was then awaiting an examination.

The joint select committee, pursuing what they deemed to be the proper parliamentary course, at a meeting on December 21, 1871, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee report the testimony taken before the committee affecting Senator Clayton and Mr. Edwards, a Representative from Arkansas, to the Senate and House of Representatives, with a recommendation that each House take such action as it may deem proper."

Agreeably to this resolution of said joint select committee, the undersigned, the chairman on the part of the Senate and the chairman on the part of the House of Representatives, beg leave to submit the testimony* hereto annexed of Edward Wheeler and William G. Whipple, both of the State of Arkansas, said Wheeler and Whipple having been the only witnesses from that State who were examined by the committee, to the Senate and House of Representatives respectively, for such action as each House may deem advisable.

* Found on pages 2–38 of report No. 15, 2d sess. 42d Cong.

JOHN SCOTT,
Chairman on the part of the Senate.
LUKE P. POLAND,
Chairman on the part of the House of Representatives.

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the report, and Mr. Clayton, having addressed the Senate on the subject thereof, concluded his remarks with the request that a select committee be appointed to investigate the allegations against him therein referred to;

Whereupon

Mr. Wright submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the report of the committee and the testimony accompanying be referred to a special committee of three, with power to send for persons and papers, to investigate and report upon the charges therein contained against Hon. Powell Clayton, a member of this body."

Ordered, That the committee be appointed by the Vice-President.

[The debate, including a statement by Mr. Scott and a speech by Mr. Clayton, is found on pages 311–318 of the Congressional Globe, part 1, 2d sess. 42d Cong.]

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1872.

The Vice-President appointed Mr. Wright, Mr. Morrill of Maine, and Mr. Norwood the select committee authorized by the resolution of yesterday to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton.

MONDAY, January 15, 1872.

Mr. Wright, from the select committee to investigate alleged charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton, reported the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee appointed under the resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant to investigate the charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton have power to employ a clerk, and that there is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of said investigation."

The said resolution was read the first and second times, by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time, by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

THURSDAY, March 28, 1872.

Mr. Wright, from the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton, submitted the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the expenses of the committee to investigate the charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton, is hereby directed to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate under the order of the chairman of said committee, the vouchers therefor to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time, by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

MONDAY, June 10, 1872.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, from the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton, submitted a report* (No. 232) thereon.

Mr. Norwood asked and obtained leave to submit the views of the minority of the committee on the allegations of Mr. Clayton; which were ordered to be printed with the foregoing report (No. 232).

* This report is embodied in the one made by the same committee February 26, 1873.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1873.

Mr. Wright submitted the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the Senate for the use of the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against the Hon. Powell Clayton."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time, by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1873.

Mr. Wright, from the select committee to investigate certain charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, submitted a report (No. 512) accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the charges made and referred to the select committee for investigation affecting the official character and conduct of the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained, and that the committee be discharged from their further consideration."

Ordered, That the report and testimony taken before the said committee be printed.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1873.

Mr. Norwood asked and obtained leave of the Senate to present the views of the minority of the select committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report of the committee (No. 512).

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.*

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 26, 1873.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wright, from the committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton, submitted the following report:

The undersigned select committee, to whom was assigned the duty of inquiring into certain charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton, a member of this body from the State of Arkansas, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following final report:

On the 10th of June last they submitted what they denominated, and which was accepted as a partial report, which they here incorporate to avoid repetition, and that the conclusion at which they have finally arrived may be the more readily understood:

JUNE 10, 1872.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, on behalf of the chairman, Mr. Wright, of Iowa, from the committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton, submitted the following report:

The special committee on whom was imposed the duty of investigating certain charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton, a member of this body, beg leave to submit the following partial report:

On the 9th of January, 1872, Mr. Scott, from the "Joint Select Committee to inquire into the Condition of the late Insurrectionary States," &c., reported to the Senate that in the prosecution of their inquiries the testimony of certain witnesses (Edward Wheeler and William G. Whipple, of Arkansas) "tended to impeach the official character and conduct of a member of this body," but as they held that "the subject-matter to which said testimony related did not come within the limits of the investigation they were directed to make," they declined to hear other witnesses, and thereupon adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee report the testimony taken before the committee affecting Senator Clayton and Mr. Edwards, a Representative from Arkansas, to the Senate and House of Representatives, with a recommendation that each House take such action as it may deem proper."

The testimony of Wheeler and Whipple referred to in the report and resolution they also reported to the Senate for such action as might be deemed advisable, and on the same day the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the report of the committee and the testimony accompanying be referred to a special committee of three, with power to send for persons and papers, to investigate and report upon the charges therein contained against Hon. Powell Clayton, a member of this body."

Pursuant to the command of the resolution, and the powers thereby conferred, the committee met on the 18th day of January, and entered upon the discharge of their duties.

James L. Hodges, esq., of Arkansas, appeared before them and asked leave to prosecute the charges, and was permitted to do so, and accordingly appeared by himself and counsel, S. M. Barnes, esq.

* The testimony, pages 21–377 of the report, is here omitted.

Senator Clayton also asked to appear as well in person as by counsel, which request was granted, and he designated as such counsel the Hon. Thomas M. Bowen and Hon. John McClure of Arkansas.

Witnesses were subpœnaed from time to time, upon the request of the parties and as the committee deemed necessary. It is proper to state that the parties each demanded the attendance of many other witnesses, which demand was declined, but not until the committee were thoroughly satisfied that they were possessed of the essential facts touching the matters submitted for their investigation. They held almost daily sessions from the date last named until and including the 11th day of May, when the testimony closed. During this day they examined thirty-eight witnesses, and have before them, in form of documents and the testimony of said witnesses, matter covering about 5,000 manuscript pages.

We are justified in saying that much of it was taken and received de bene esse. In other words, for the prosecution it was claimed that they would be able to show certain combinations, conspiracies, and corrupt agreements which, if established, would make such testimony competent and relevant. For the defense it was insisted that this state of case could not be shown, and in no event could such testimony be admissible under the resolution of the Senate and the matter submitted for our investigation, but in view of the possibility of its being so held they submitted their testimony to meet the case supposed by the prosecution.

As it was impossible to say in advance what, in this respect, the testimony might finally establish, and as witnesses were in many instances here from a great distance and anxious to leave, we deemed it better to take the testimony, leaving the question of its ultimate relevancy to be determined when deciding the whole case. This state of the record rendered it necessary to examine with care the testimony of very many of the witnesses to enable us to determine just what was and was not competent in view of the issues made.

This work, to some extent, remains unperformed. It could not well be otherwise when we refer to the time the testimony closed, and the other and constant duties pressing upon each member of the committee. As the session is drawing to a close, however, and we hold it but the plainest justice to a member of this body that it should at least be known what was the general result of our investigation, we have deemed it best to submit the same to the Senate. We say this is due him, the Senate, and the country, and shall assume that this will be accepted as true by all, without entering into argument in support of a proposition so plain. The charges affect the standing and influence of one who has the equal dignity and responsibility of any other member of this body before the country and his constituency. If not sustained, it is eminently proper that he should be relieved. If sustained, then the Senate owes it to itself, its own dignity, its own purity, its own self-respect, that he should be removed, and the people of Arkansas have upon this floor one who may be their fit, proper, and chosen representative.

Thus impressed and influenced, though unable, for reasons above stated, to arrange the testimony and report back such parts as they hold to be proper and relevant, and yet able to reach a conclusion, to them satisfactory, from their recollection of the evidence at the time it was being submitted, and their subsequent examination—we say, thus impressed, we have deemed it our duty to submit this partial report, reserving the right, at a time when the pressure of other duties shall not be so great, to submit with the testimony a further and final report.

If it should be asked, Why not now submit all the testimony? we answer: First, because we know that much of it can have no possible bearing upon the question before us and the Senate, and its publication would involve a large and most unnecessary expense. Second. No useful end is to be gained by giving to the country a mass of testimony which only serves to show the bitterness of personal feeling existing between those prosecuting and their friends on one side, and the party accused and his friends on the other, which had its birth in the zeal of opposing political factions, to blacken and disparage the party integrity of those opposing them; which would only tend to still further disturb and distract the citizens of the State where they reside, and render more difficult the restoration of that peace and quiet so essential in all the States, and especially those so lately in insurrection. And this course is the more justified from a conviction, which we cannot now escape, that not a little of it was offered by the parties more with the view of making political capital against each other than in the hope or belief that it could have any influence upon the committee, or throw light upon the subject-matter under investigation. We do not propose to be the instrument of a purpose so foreign, and we most respectfully submit that the Senate should not and will not lend itself to the publication in advance of a mass of testimony which in no manner tends to elucidate the real question before them, and which, if published, while it might gratify the malevolence of parties, could not possibly serve any useful end. It would be worse than waste-paper.

We therefore submit this report, at present withholding the testimony, recommending that action shall be delayed until we are able to more carefully arrange the immense record before us, and present it in a form which will enable the Senate to act with greater safety and intelligence.

And now having stated something of the work performed and the grounds which seem to us to justify the course pursued, we come to the consideration of those matters which were submitted for our investigation and a statement of the conclusion reached. In doing this it seems to be eminently proper, and indeed logically necessary, to ascertain and settle the nature and scope of the charges made and the powers of the committee under the order of reference.

It will be seen that the report of the committee, which led to the present inquiry, states that the testimony submitted to them tended to impeach the official character and conduct of Senator Clayton. The resolution under which this committee is acting directs that the report of Mr. Scott and the accompanying testimony be referred, with power to send for persons and papers to investigate the charges therein contained. We therefore necessarily go to the report thus referred in the first instance, to see what the charges are. But here we find nothing, for it is only stated generally that the testimony before them tended to impeach the official character and conduct of Senator Clayton. All that is of particular value thus far or in this language is that the charges related to his official character and conduct. This of course must mean his official character and conduct as a Senator. With his official acts in other positions we have nothing to do, except as they may bear upon his office as Senator. To illustrate, he was governor of the State of Arkansas up to the time of his election as a member of this body. Now, whether his conduct and character in the gubernatorial office was such as to merit condemnation or praise, whether his administration of that office was honest or dishonest, wise or unwise, corrupt or otherwise, is a matter of no moment whatever, except as it may bear, in some legitimate manner, upon his conduct and character in his present position.

Assuming for the present that our inquiries are limited to matters subsequent to his election, not, of course, rejecting those antecedents, so far as they reflect light upon subsequent acts, we are led to inquire what these are; and here we are remitted to the testimony of Wheeler and Whipple, for as there are no specific charges in the report itself, the testimony of these witnesses must alone stand in the place of charges, the information, or indictment. Than this, few things could be more indefinite or unsatisfactory. Without, by any means, conceding that any one should be held to answer charges thus made, so entirely wanting in everything approximating conciseness, clearness, or definiteness, we advert very briefly to some matters to which these witnesses most vaguely refer.

First. It is suggested rather than strongly claimed that Senator Clayton was indicted by the grand jury of the United States circuit court for Arkansas, in April, 1871, for a violation of the twenty-second section of the enforcement act (16 Stat. at Large, page 145), in granting a certificate of election, as governor, to General John Edwards, showing his election as a member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. The facts in connection with the issuing of this certificate will come under review in a subsequent part of this report, and we content ourselves at present with stating conclusions. And, first, the mere finding of the indictment would not of course so tend to impeach his official character and conduct, nor of course actually impeach it, as to demand action at the hands of the Senate. In the next place, if such finding possessed any significance, it would lose it all, where, as the testimony and the record here conclusively show, he was discharged therefrom by the judgment of the court at a subsequent term (in October last) under a demurrer to the indictment; not for any formal or technical defect, but upon the broad and substantive ground, to state it briefly, that the governor of a State is not an "officer of election," within the meaning of said election.

This being so, by the judgment of the court he stood acquitted and discharged of course of all legal wrong. Then, if an officer, and the act was not fraudulent—that is, if he did not "fraudulently make any false certificate"—there was no criminal liability, and if there was no corrupt conduct or fraudulent act in this connection, it is submitted that all inquiry in this direction may be dismissed. But more of this hereafter.

In the second place, it is suggested, again most vaguely—it cannot be conceded to have the dignity of a specific charge—that he, by himself or friends, tampered with the grand jury finding the indictment. Senator Clayton was in Washington City at the time the indictment was found, and there is scarcely a scintilla of evidence that he had knowledge that such a thing was contemplated or threatened. There is certainly no pretense of proof that he, by himself, or others acting for him, or at his instance or request, made even the least attempt to influence the action of the grand jury presenting the indictment, and least of all would it be claimed that anything was done by himself, or any one ever so remotely connected with him, which could by possibility be regarded as either criminally or morally wrong. And when we add that it is worse than the sheerest pretense that anything there attempted was in the least connected with his official conduct or character, we dismiss this part of the case.

In the next place it is attempted to be shown that he improperly used his official position and influence as Senator to procure the removal of the witness (Whipple) from his office of district attorney, and General Catterson as marshal of the district of Arkansas. Whipple was district attorney and Catterson marshal at the time of finding the indictment. Both these gentlemen had been more or less active in their opposition to Senator Clayton's election to the Senate through a contest almost unprecedented in its bitterness, whether viewed politically or personally. This was particularly true of Colonel Whipple. Senator Clayton may have been influenced, and doubtless was, not a little, in his efforts to procure their removal by their known opposition to him, as also by what he esteemed their unwarranted course in connection with the procurement of the indictment.

It is not material to inquire whether there was anything in their conduct touching the latter matter to warrant his feelings and judgment, since he did no more than what other Senators are constantly in the habit of doing touching the displacement of their enemies and the appointment of their friends. That the action of these parties in connection with the indictment was not the moving cause of his opposition is clear enough from the fact that he was seeking their removal before it was presented, as abundantly appears from their own testimony, wherein the alleged charge is found. In his conduct in this respect we fail to see any official misconduct, and especially so as it appears that since these removals the Executive and Department of Justice have been successively, and more than once, appealed to by Colonel Whipple and General Catterson and their friends for reinstatement, and have been as frequently unsuccessful. Whether it is right or wrong for one in his position to use his official influence to procure removals is not for us to say. We only state and find that he exercised the right or privilege taken by, if not conceded to, others; an act which, if regarded as tending to "impeach his official character and conduct," would be equally so, probably, of every member of this body.

Turning now from these matters arising subsequent to the election of Senator Clayton we come to the case made touching his election, and here a preliminary inquiry arises: What have we to do with that election? Recurring to the resolution raising the committee, and which must be accepted as the charter of our power, we remark again that the report of Mr. Scott says that the testimony (and to which we must go to ascertain the charges, for there is nothing else) "tends to impeach his official conduct and character." Then, the resolution under which we are acting directs us to investigate the charges therein contained against Senator Clayton as a member of this body. Now, giving to the record a fair and just construction, have we anything to do with his election or the circumstances connected therewith? Upon this subject at least one member of the committee entertains the gravest doubts. The argument suggesting and supporting these doubts is as follows:

In respect to the subject-matter referred to a committee, the rule is that they are not at liberty to entertain any proposition or go into any inquiry which does not come within the direct purpose for which the committee was appointed, as expressly or clearly implied in the authority conferred upon it, or which is not grounded upon some paper which is referred to the consideration of the committee. (Cushing's L. and P. of Leg. Pro., ss. 1906.) This is upon the clear principle that a committee, being a creatnre of the body giving it life, is bound by and is not at liberty to depart from the order of reference. If any other rule were adopted, and it could depart from the order of reference, all business would, of course, be at an end, and endless confusion and contests between the body and the committee would ensue (ss. 1907).

Now, it is suggested that inasmuch as the report of the "joint select committee" by Mr. Scott referred alone to testimony tending to impeach the official character and conduct of Senator Clayton, the order of reference took in and contemplated such matters alone, and that the resolution raising this committee must be construed in the light of that report and the subject-matter of inquiry be thus limited; and hence, when it is directed that the committee shall investigate the charges contained in said report (including the testimony of Wheeler and Whipple), it was intended to cover and include only those bearing upon such official conduct and character, for in that report there is nothing said about fraud or illegality in his election. But here it is, perhaps, answered that the proposed inquiry is grounded upon the paper (the testimony aforesaid) referred for our consideration. To this the reply is: true, but that paper must properly be construed as referring to such charges only as relate to or are connected with the principal inquiry; that is, official conduct or character. If not, why did the committee omit all reference to his election and the circumstances attending the same? The answer is they had power and authority themselves to inquire into all matters bearing upon the state of affairs in the State, including frauds in elections, but not to such as bore upon the conduct of a member of the Senate or House after his election.

Conceding, however, that this view limits the inquiry unjustly, let us look at the charges themselves. And here the already great length of this report admonishes us to brevity, and especially so as, when the testimony shall be finally summed up, it will necessarily demand a large portion of our attention. This part of the case suggests two inquiries: First. As to matters occurring antecedent to the assembling of the general assembly which elected Senator Clayton. Second. Those immediately leading to and connected therewith.

Upon the first we are not disposed to enter. Our warrant for this is found in the principle obtaining and the nature of the testimony, or rather the absence of it. It seems to us that upon principle we cannot enter upon the numberless inquiries which would always be suggested in cases of this character preceding the election of the members whose duty it is to elect a Senator, unless such conduct and transactions clearly relate to and bear immediately upon the alleged frauds connected with such Senator's election. Not only so, but it would seem that they must so color the transaction of the final election of the Senator as to lead to the conclusion that but for them the result would have been different. Thus, suppose Senator Clayton used reprehensible means with the hope of securing the election of some member or members in one or more districts, and such persons were either not elected or failed to vote for him, or, if voting for him, he had a clear majority outside of those improperly elected, would any one say or claim that his seat could be declared vacant? Or suppose, as in the case before us, that the two houses of the Arkansas legislature, being the judges of the election, qualification, and return of their own members, have heard and investigated all alleged frauds and given the members their seats, can this committee or the Senate go back of that action, and in this inquiry, whether treating it as a proceeding direct or collateral, say that such members were improperly elected, returned by the use of corrupt means, even if originating with Senator Clayton himself, and that therefore he was not legally elected? The statement of such propositions furnishes its own answer. Neither legally nor logically could it be claimed that this committee would be called upon to go into a field so boundless, and which when explored would throw no legitimate light upon the controversy before us. And therefore we now incline to the opinion that all the testimony bearing upon the transactions before the assembling of the legislature, except as it is connected with and gives color to the election of Senator, except as it tends to show that it was brought about by fraudulent and corrupt means then used, may be dismissed. A large portion of the testimony is of this character. As we read the record Senator Clayton received a clear majority in each branch of the general assembly outside of those claimed to be thus fraudulently elected, and some of those whose elections are thus assailed voted against him, and this alone is all that need be stated upon this subject. The efforts in this direction have been most extraordinary—the statements of numberless persons having been introduced upon the theory that, as they were friends of Senator Clayton, friendly to his election and exerting themselves in his behalf—so there was a so-called conspiracy, and what all and each of said conspirators said would bind all. To admit that a conspiracy has been shown in any legal sense would be to set at defiance all the rules of law governing in such cases, and make every candidate in a bitter and protracted ntest of this character responsible for all that was said and done by all his friends, the foolish and the discreet, the good and the bad, the honest and the dishonest, alike. While we would do nothing to encourage fraud or to shield from responsibility any one seeking official position, and especially a position so high as a seat in this body, we would not enter a field of mere speculation and adopt a rule which is the most doubtful in theory and finds no support in practice or precedent.

It only remains to inquire into the alleged frauds connected with the election. And here the principal, if not only one, is that Senator (then Governor) Clayton issued to Hon. John Edwards a certificate of election to the House of Representatives of the present Congress, upon a corrupt bargain or agreement that he was to receive in return for the same the support of the Democratic members of the general assembly. If this charge is not maintained, we hazard but very little in saying that there is nothing left of this case. And a very brief statement will show how utterly groundless it is in fact.

With the question whether Edwards was or was not in fact elected we have nothing to do. He was accepted and recognized as the Democratic candidate for Congress, his competitor being Hon. Thomas Boles. Governor Clayton supported Boles in that election by his voice and influence. At one time there were two Republican candidates in the district for Congress (Judge Boles and Judge Searles). Through the influence of Governor Clayton and his friends, Judge Searles was induced to withdraw, leaving the field to Judge Boles, and this, too, notwithstanding Judge Searles was recognized as the more pronounced friend of the governor. That the object was to promote harmony and secure ultimate political success seems to be fairly well established.

In Pulaski County especially the Republican party was divided, one side being the warm and devoted friends of Governor Clayton, the other his bitter enemies. To some extent this state of things obtained in other parts of the State. At the election in this county in 1870, and particularly in the city of Little Rock, it was alleged that certain frauds intervened whereby illegal votes were cast for Boles, or if the votes were not illegal they were received and counted by judges selected without authority of law, and that their action was both illegal and irregular. Into all these matters we do not propose to enter, as our purpose in this connection is to state some facts generally, and then leave this part of the case.

By the statute of Arkansas it is the duty of the secretary of state, in presence of the governor, within thirty days after the time allowed for making the returns of the election, if the returns are all received, to cast up and arrange the votes from the several counties for member of Congress; and of the governor, immediately thereafter, to issue his proclamation declaring the person having the highest number of votes to be duly elected, and he is also required to grant a certificate under the seal of the State to the person so elected.

From the returns made to the office of the secretary of state there was no question as to the result. Boles was clearly elected. The duty of the governor under the law is ministerial, not judicial. By strict law he has no power to reject votes, nor to direct the counting of those returned by other than the proper officers. In this case, however, it was brought to his attention that frauds had been perpetrated, or, at least, irregularities had intervened, which should be examined into. In our opinion, under the law he had no power to enter upon such an inquiry; nor do we understand that he did.

A case was pending in the supreme court of the State involving the legality of the returns made from certain wards in the city of Little Rock and some precincts in the county, the determination of which was regarded as important in settling whether Boles or Edwards was elected to Congress.

The governor determined to wait, and did wait, that decision. The same question was brought to the attention of the legislature and referred to a committee, and he declared his purpose to await that action. In the wards referred to two polls were opened, one by the judges selected by the bystanders, the other by the judges regularly appointed or chosen. At the first the votes were almost unanimously for Boles, at the other very largely for Edwards. Counting the first and excluding the second, Boles was undoubtedly elected; if the latter were counted and the first excluded, and excluding votes for Boles in some other places, which it was claimed were fraudulent, then it was insisted that Edwards was elected.

By the decision of the supreme court and the report of the committee in the legislature, the elections held by the regular judges were determined to be the only legal ones, and following these decisions in part the governor gave the certificate to Edwards. In this he may have been mistaken.

But it would certainly be most extraordinary to say that the executive of a State may not follow the decision of its highest judicial tribunal—that he may not act upon the proceedings of the legislative branch.

As to the returns and the election, there was intense excitement. Factions were arrayed against each other, and each charging frauds without stint upon the other. If Governor Clayton mistook his duty, it was, at least, quite as much on the side of law and order as to have acted without investigation and in disregard of the action of the other co-ordinate departments of the State government. If it is said—and this is the effort, from the testimony—that the judges and legislature were actuated by base, unworthy, and corrupt motives; that they were all moved by him and in his interest, we can only answer that a charge so serious is neither probable nor reasonable. It would certainly require the very strongest proof to justify us in believing a charge so sweeping, affecting, as it would, almost the legality and validity of the entire acts of its officers, legislative, executive, and judicial.

But this is not all. General Edwards was given the certificate on the 20th of February, 1871. Governor Clayton was not elected until the 15th of March. True, he was elected at what is known as his first election on the 11th of January, 1871. But this election he declined. He holds his place now under the second election. At this but one Democrat (and he of doubtful political status) in the house voted for him, and he swears most positively that his vote was not influenced by the Edwards matter in the least. In the senate, if any voted for him, he had, without counting them, a clear majority of all, and as to those voting for him, if any, there is no evidence that they cared anything more for Edwards than Boles.

It appears, then—

First. That Clayton was the political friend of Boles and favored his election.

Second. That in issuing the certificate he discharged what seemed to be, and what he had good reason to believe to be, his duty, in following the decision of the supreme court and the action of the legislature.

Third. Nothing approximating a corrupt motive in exercising the power to inquire into the legality of the returns is shown.

Fourth. He gave Edwards the certificate before he was elected the second time, and after he had announced, at least, a contingent purpose of remaining in the office of governor.

Fifth. There was no necessity for a bargain with the Democrats in the legislature, for they were but too willing; being in the minority and without hope of being able to elect one of their own political friends, in view of what they considered to be their wrongs and the wrongs of their friends at the hands of the governor, we say they were but too willing to have him elected to the Senate and thus secure his resignation as governor, trusting and believing that a change could not possibly be worse for them.

Sixth. He did not receive any votes under any such agreement, and, least of all, any number sufficient to influence the result. And hence we conclude that nothing can be plainer or more manifest than that this charge is totally and entirely unsustained.

Something is said in the testimony of Whipple about railroad subsidies and bonds, and the action of Governor Clayton in that connection. This relates rather to his action as governor, with which we have nothing to do, than to the Senatorial election. So it is attempted to show or start the theory that he procured the resignation of White as secretary of state, and appointed Johnson, the lieutenant-governor, to the place made vacant by White, also the election of Hadley as president of the senate—all in pursuance of a corrupt arrangement by which he was to be elected to the Senate. It must be admitted that the stroke was a bold and most successful one. Governor Clayton had said to his friends from the stump and elsewhere that, while he was a candidate for the Senate and was desirous of success, he would never take an election and leave the State administration in the hands of Lieutenant-Governor Johnson. He was elected Senator in January and an effort was then being made in the courts to remove the lieutenant-governor. This was unsuccessful, and Governor Clayton declined the office of Senator. At the first election several of the Democratic members voted for him for reasons already stated. At this time and for weeks all parties were excited; the members were leaving the legislature to break a quorum; crimination and recrimination were the order of the day, and each party was struggling for supremacy. Everything was in disorder and confusion. The result no man could tell. At times they were apparently on the eve of an outbreak, if not of revolution. Then it was that White resigned his office of secretary of state. He was the friend of Governor Clayton, but apparently not more than of the other side—wanted to and was willing to serve him. Johnson was willing to take that place and vacate that of lieutenant-governor, and he was accordingly appointed. Hadley was elected presiding officer of the senate; Clayton was made Senator, and Hadley became governor.

If in all these changes there was nothing corrupt upon the part of Governor Clayton, then they are as harmless, so far as this investigation is concerned, as if they had occurred years before, or in another State, and without his suggestion or knowledge. The only testimony which tends to show anything of the kind is that of White, who swears that months afterward he received some money through Senator Clayton, but he explains what it was for, and states positively that it was not in consideration of his vacating the office of secretary of state.

But, without more, we here leave the case. In our opinion the charges, if such they can be called, are not sustained. The testimony fails to impeach the Senator's official conduct or character. All which we shall take occasion to show by a fuller reference to the testimony and record, when other duties will permit and it may be the pleasure of the Senate to receive the same.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. G. WRIGHT.

I concur in the foregoing, as touching the testimony which "tends to impeach the official character and conduct of a member of the United States Senate," reserving a recurrence to the mass of testimony when opportunity offers for a full report.

LOT M. MORRILL.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

JUNE 10, 1872.—Ordered to be printed, to accompany the report of the committee to inquire into certain allegations against Hon. Powell Clayton.

Mr. Norwood submitted the following as the views of the minority:

Protest against the report of the majority of the committee appointed to investigate the charges against Hon. Powell Clayton.

As a member of the special committee of three, appointed by the Senate to investigate certain charges made against Hon. Powell Clayton, United States Senator, and to report the result of such investigation to the Senate, I most respectfully protest against the action of the majority of that committee in submitting their report at this time; and in justification of my course and in support of this protest, I beg herewith to submit the following facts and considerations:

This investigation, as stated in the report of said majority, commenced on the 18th day of January last and continued almost daily (Sundays excepted) until the 14th day of May. Thirty-eight witnesses were examined, and their testimony averages, each, about 125 manuscript foolscap pages. During the examination but two of the committee were generally present. Sometimes all were present, and often, by consent of Senator Clayton and James L. Hodges, who occupied the positions before the committee of prosecutor and defendant, but one of the committee was in attendance, the three alternating, so that no one member of the committee was present during the whole of the investigation. Hence no one member of the committee heard the whole testimony. Duty compelled our attendance in the Senate Chamber, and at no time did we sit while the Senate was in session. And as we sat generally from 10 a. m. to the opening of the session, many other duties made it necessary for one and another of the committee to be absent.

A few days after the majority of the committee determined to close the investigation, the chairman convened the committee to determine what course should then be taken. The resolution fixing the day of adjournment on the 29th of May was then in force, and we supposed Congress would adjourn on that day. In view of the immense volume of the evidence, which no one member of the committee had read through, in consideration of the brief time to elapse before the day then set for adjournment, and also of the determination of the committee to revise the record before having it printed, for the purpose of expunging such as might be irrelevant and much that was conversational between the counsel and the committee during the examination of witnesses, and thus to reduce the volume to a condensed and readable form, the committee at that time divided the manuscript into three parts, and each member took a third for the purpose of revising it and noting such portions as he considered might be expunged without detriment to the record. We discussed the probability of being able to make a report at the present session, and in view of this preliminary labor of expurgation, the shortness of the time allowed, as the day for adjournment was then set, and of our engagements in the Senate, then convening at 11 a. m. and holding night sessions, we saw no prospect of completing our labor so as to report before the next session of Congress. It was further agreed that we should, after examining the evidence and noting the irrelevant matter, come together at a time left indefinite, and consider well whatever each had marked as in his judgment unnecessary to the record, and the remainder would then be printed. We would then examine and weigh the relevant testimony, and make a report to the Senate.

Thus the matter remained until about a week ago, when the chairman assembled the committee and suggested that a report be made. In consideration of all that had occurred, as stated above, and of the fact that the committee had taken no action on the testimony preparatory to making a fair, full, and final report, I moved that the testimony be printed and that the original purpose of the committee be carried out, and that a report should be made at the next session of Congress. This suggestion was not adopted, and on the 3d day of June instant the chairman submitted to the committee for its action the document now presented to the Senate as the report of the majority.

The majority admit that a careful examination of the testimony has not been made; that they submit "a conclusion reached from their recollection of the evidence at the time it was submitted and their subsequent examination;" that the report is only "partial;" that they intend to make "a further and final report;" that they withhold the testimony, and recommend that the Senate take no action on their report until it can "act with greater safety and intelligence."

I do not intend to enter on a consideration of the merits of this case. I regard the action of the majority of the committee as premature (as they admit) and unprecedented. What power has a special committee to make a report by halves? Besides, what necessity exists for a report at this time? It is true the majority say that justice to the Senator accused requires it. But why and how? What injury can follow by waiting until our labor could be completed? Confessedly it is incomplete. Confessedly the evidence must be thoroughly examined and another report must be made.

The report submitted refers to but a small portion of the material evidence taken by the committee, and while I will not express an opinion as to the effect of the testimony until I shall have given it that careful and serious consideration which the gravity of the charge and the dignity of the Senate require and demand, I will say that I think the conclusion of the majority very hastily drawn.

Referring to the testimony of Wheeler and Whipple, they extract the following as constituting the charges (if such they can be called) upon which this investigation was instituted.

CERTIFICATE TO EDWARDS.

[Extract from the testimony of Edward Wheeler.]

"Examined by Mr. BLAIR:

"Question. What was the reason assigned for Clayton acting as he did?—Answer. It was generally regarded that he expected by supporting Edwards to gain some Democratic votes in the legislature for United States Senator.

"Q That it was for his own interest and to secure his own election as Senator?—A. It was so understood; yes, sir.

"Q. That is the explanation of it?—A. That is, the object of the frauds in Hot Springs County was to put Clayton men in the legislature; the object of the frauds in Pulaski County was to put Democrats in the legislature, for the Clayton faction had a very small vote in that county and the Democrats were given seats in the legislature. It was claimed, and it has been sworn to by some prominent Democrats, that General Edwards was given the certificate upon a trade made by Senator Clayton that certain parties would not contest certain seats in the legislature. That was the testimony developed in the investigation made in the Boles and Edwards contested-election case."

[Extract from the testimony of William G. Whipple.]

"Examined by Mr. BLAIR:

"Question. What was the motive of the governor in giving this certificate to a man who was not elected?—Answer. Of course it is very hard to tell what his motive was. It is generally understood that it was done in pursuance of a trade.

"Q. Of a trade?—A. Yes, sir; that is the general understanding.

"Q. What was the trade?—A. That the Democratic members of the legislature should support him for the Senate of the United States.

"Q. Did they do it?—A. Yes, sir; they did.

"Q. And the governor carried out his part of the bargain?—A. Yes, sir; it seems very plain that he did that.

"Examined by the CHAIRMAN (Mr. Scott):

"Q. There was a majority of Republicans in the legislature that elected Governor Clayton to the United States Senate?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And when these two divisions came into conflict in regard to electing a United States Senator, you say the Clayton men entered into a corrupt combination with the Democrats by which the Democrats agreed to vote for Governor Clayton for the Senate of the United States in consideration of Governor Clayton giving a certificate of election to the Democratic candidate for Congress in the third Congressional district of the State?—A. That is believed by many persons.

"Q. You have already stated that here as the general belief in the State?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is that your belief?—A. Well, it is my belief that Clayton made some trade with the Democrats. Precisely what were the terms of the trade I would not undertake to say.

"Q. You have already put it in that form in your testimony. I want to understand if that is your belief.—A. I do not think I put it in exactly that form.

"Q. You stated that to be the general belief.—A. I think it is the general belief.

"Q. Do you include yourself among those who entertain that belief?—A. Well, I have reason to believe it, and I know of no reason why it is not true."

ELECTION TO THE SENATE.

[Extract from the testimony of William G. Whipple.]

"Examined by Mr. BLAIR:

"Question. What condition of affairs in Pulaski County was disclosed by the investigation, so far as it went?—Answer. There were shown many instances of fraudulent registration; parties who were not voters were awarded certificates by the registrars; there were many cases of parties registered in the wrong ward of the city or the wrong precinct in the county. For instance, parties would present themselves in the Second ward to be registered, and would be registered in Big Rock Township. There were many instances of that kind, where parties were registered in the wrong places.

"Q. In whose interest were these frauds perpetrated?—A. In the interest of what was known as the Clayton party.

"Q. For the purpose of electing men who would support him for Senator of the United States?—A. Yes, sir; and in many cases to defeat the Republican candidates.

"Q. Who would not vote for him as Senator?—A. Who would not pledge themselves to support him for the United States Senate. That was the case in Pulaski County, where the Clayton vote was understood to have been thrown to secure the election of Democratic candidates for the legislature as against the Republican candidates, because the former were expected to support Clayton and the latter were not.

"Q. Did they support him?—A. They did support him; yes, sir, they voted for him for United States Senator.

"Q. As I understand, Governor Clayton was elected Senator, and declined to accept?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was his reason for declining to accept when first elected?—A. What reason did he assign?

"Q. Yes.—A. The reason that he assigned was that the interests of the Republican party in Arkansas required that he should remain governor. But that was not the general understanding at all.

"Q. What was the general understanding on the subject?—A. The general understanding was that he declined the election to the United States Senate because, if he went to the Senate at that time, he could not leave the government of the State in the hands of his friends.

"Q. Who would have been governor if he had not declined to go to the Senate at that time?—A. The lieutenant-governor, James M. Johnson.

"Q. Was he a friend of Clayton?—A. He was not a friend of Clayton at that time; he was a Republican.

"Q. How did Clayton subsequently arrange that, when elected the second time?—A. On the eve of the second election, I think the day before, Lieutenant-Governor Johnson resigned his office as lieutenant-governor, and was appointed secretary of state by Governor Clayton, Secretary White, the previous secretary, having resigned. Thereupon, Senator Hadley was elected president pro tempore of the senate, and became acting governor of the State upon the election of Governor Clayton to the United States Senate.

"Q. He is understood to be a friend of Clayton?—A. Governor Hadley?

"Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir; he is understood to be a Clayton man, out and out."

INDICTMENT.

[Extract from the testimony of Edward Wheeler.]

"By Mr. BLAIR:

"Question. Were you a member of the grand jury of the United States court last spring?—Answer. Yes, sir; and its foreman.

"Q. When was the sesion of that court held?—A. It commenced on the 10th of April last.

"Q. Were any indictments found by that grand jury under the act of Congress known as the 'enforcement act?'—A. Yes, sir; there were several found.

"Q. Against whom? Who were indicted?—A. There were six or seven different parties indicted in Hot Springs County; judges, and clerks of elections, and registrars; also some six or seven in Clark County for frauds in elections; and Governor Clayton, of Pulaski County, was indicted.

"Q. What was the offense for which Governor Clayton was indicted, and what was the evidence upon which he was indicted?—A. The evidence was entirely documentary, being the returns in the office of the secretary of state. The witnesses were the ex-secretary of state and the deputy secretary of state. They brought the returns, or a tabular statement of them sworn to, and laid it before the grand jury.

"Q. Those returns were of what election, and in what counties?—A. In the election for members of the Forty-second Congress, and in the counties composing the third Congressional district of the State of Arkansas. I do not now remember all of the counties by name. It is the district in which the county of Pulaski is embraced; our county is one of the counties of the third Congressional district.

"Q. What was the action of Governor Clayton that led to his indictment?—A. The first that I, or any member of the grand jury, knew of the matter was the bringing of the case to our attention by the district attorney; he came to me with a list of witnesses, three in number, which he wished to have subpœnaed. He said the case had been called to his notice, and he wanted it brought before the grand jury for examination. I subpœnaed the three witnesses: the ex-secretary of state, the deputy secretary of state, and General Edwards, the person to whom the certificate of election for Congress had been given by Governor Clayton. It was claimed that Governor Clayton had violated certain sections of the enforcement act in giving the certificate of election to General Edwards, when the returns, as exhibited to us by the secretary of state, showed that Judge Boles had been elected. General Edwards presented a copy of his certificate of election, and of the proclamation of the governor, stating that, according to the returns on file in the office of the secretary of state, General Edwards had been elected. But the returns, as exhibited to us, showed that Judge Boles was elected by some 2,130 votes, I think it was, on the full vote, counting the votes at both polls. There were allegations of fraud on both sides. But giving the governor the benefit of every doubt, the least majority for Judge Boles that we could figure out was some 800 or 900; I forget the exact figures. That was according to the returns shown to us; and upon that showing the indictment was found.

"Q. Under what part of the act was the indictment found?—A. I think it was the twenty-second section of the enforcement act. And our State laws require the canvass of the returns to be made by the governor, assisted by the secretary of state; the governor is made the canvassing officer. The law was explained to us by the district attorney, and it was claimed that the governor had violated the twenty-second section, I think it was, of the enforcement act; the one providing that if any officer shall issue a fraudulent certificate of election to any party, he shall be amenable, &c."

Again:

"Q. And the grand jury found that that was a fraudulent certificate?—A. They found that this proclamation of the governor, issuing the certificate of election to Edwards, was not in accordance with the returns in the office of the secretary of state as laid before us."

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. What was the specific offense with which the governor was charged?—A. I think the district attorney, who is in this city, has a copy of the indictment, and he can probably explain these matters much better than I can."

Again:

"Q. The other case of indictment you have referred to is one against Governor Clayton, for giving the certificate you have read?—A. For furnishing a certificate of election to John Edwards.

"Q. The State law, you say, makes the governor the canvasser of the returns?—A. It makes it the duty of the governor, within thirty days after the election, to make a canvass of the votes, make proclamation, and issue certificates of election.

"Q. In the discharge of that duty is the secretary of state associated with him in any capacity which would invest him with authority to decide; or does the governor merely consult him?—A. His duty is merely clerical; the governor is the canvassing officer proper. I think the law states that the canvass shall be made by the secretary of state in the presence of the governor, and the governor shall, by proclamation, announce the result.

"Q. It makes it the duty of the governor to award the certificate to the persons whom he judges to be elected?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The responsibility of the decision is upon the governor?—A. Entirely.

"Q. And it was because, upon the evidence presented, you believed that the governor had decided wrongfully?—A. Yes, sir, according to the returns laid before us.

"Q. You found a true bill against him?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And that case is now pending for trial in the United States court?—A. Yes, sir."

Again:

"Q. You heard, of course, nothing but the evidence on the part of the Government; there was no defense?—A. Of course there was no defense.

"Examined by Mr. POOL:

"Q. You sought for no facts as explanatory of the governor's action?—A. No, sir, we knew of nothing; we could get at nothing but the returns.

"Q. Was any witness sworn before the grand jury other than the secretary of state, the—— A. The ex-secretary of state. The present secretary of state was not then in the city. He had but recently entered upon the duties of his office, and his chief clerk was made deputy secretary of state, and he was before us in regard to the records.

"Q. In relation to the authenticity and correctness of the report?—A. Yes, sir. And General Edwards was before us as to the correctness of a copy of the certificate which had been furnished us.

"Q. And you examined no witnesses outside?—A. No, sir."

These witnesses testified more at length before the "joint select committee," &c.; but the foregoing it is believed contains all that is necessary to show the precise charges made. They may be considered under three heads, to wit, certificate to Edwards, election to the Senate, and corrupt bargain.

Without discussing what would be the effect if any or all these charges were sustained, or the propriety or power of this body to consider the same, interesting and important though such a question might be in a proper case, we proceed at once to state our views of the case as submitted to us without reaching the inquiry indicated.

Disregarding, then, chronological order, we shall consider first the matter of the indictment.

It appears that Senator Clayton was indicted for the violation of the twenty-second section of the enforcement act, in fraudulently giving the certificate of election to General Edwards when, as is claimed, it should have been given to his competitor, Judge Boles. He was governor, and as such did give the certificate of election to General Edwards. The language of said section, so far as here material, is that "any officer of any election at which any Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States shall be voted for * * * who shall * * * fraudulently make any false certificate of the result of such election in regard to such Representative or Delegate * * * shall be deemed guilty of a crime," &c. By the law of Arkansas it is provided that the secretary of state shall in the presence of the governor, or, &c., cast up and arrange the votes of the several counties, or persons voted for as members of Congress, and that the governor shall immediately thereafter issue his proclamation declaring the person having the highest number of votes to be duly elected, and that he shall grant him a certificate thereof under the seal of the State.

It seems that the secretary of state did thus cast up and arrange the votes in the election between Boles and Edwards. It also appears that by the showing thus made Boles and not Edwards had a majority of the votes, and was hence apparently entitled to the certificate.

This canvass of the votes took place within thirty days after the election (the election being on the 8th of November, 1870), and yet proclamation was not made nor was the certificate issued until in February, 1871.

Immediately after the election divers affidavits and some documentary evidence were presented to the governor, tending to show that in one of the counties (Pulaski) of said Congressional district frauds had intervened which, being considered, would exclude a large number of votes cast for said Boles and thus elect Edwards. About the same time proceedings were instituted in the supreme court involving the validity of said election, and the votes thus claimed to be fraudulent or irregular, and they were afterward by the judgment of said court determined to be fraudulent and illegal. To state the claim more particularly it was maintained in said affidavit and evidence, as also in said proceedings in court, that the polls in some of the wards of the city of Little Rock (Pulaski County) and some precincts in this county were taken possession of by force, violence, and contrary to law, judges of election installed without right, and other illegalities and irregularities practiced, and notwithstanding the proper and legal judges also held an election at the appointed places, the votes received at the illegal polls and by the judges illegally chosen were the votes received and canvassed. When the legislature met the same questions were there made as to the members of the house and senate voted for in said localities at the same time, and claiming seats under such alleged illegal election, and it was determined adverse to their claims. After all this the governor issued the certificate to Edwards.

It is claimed by those prosecuting the charges here that even excluding the so-called illegal returns Boles was still elected. This we are not prepared to concede, for it seems very clear that there is one method of canvassing the returns, and not at all without warrant in the figures if certain facts are admitted, which would elect Edwards.

This will be seen in the following statement:

By the returns from all the counties, as canvassed by the secretary of state, it appears that Boles received 10,344 votes; Edwards received 8,211 votes. The governor excluded from the count the votes cast in the First and Third wards in the city of Little Rock, and in certain precincts or townships in the county of Pulaski, in all of which the election had been declared illegal by the legislature, of which excluded votes there had been cast for Boles 2,385, which being deducted from the above number, counted for Boles, left him 7,959, and of which excluded votes there had been cast for Edwards 202, which being deducted from the above number counted for him left him 8,009; thus showing a majority for Edwards of 50 votes.

But conceding that Boles was actually elected and hence entitled to the certificate, it would by no means follow that this indictment was well founded, nor that Senator Clayton was consciously and willfully violating his duty or conniving at a violation of the law.

We concede that in strict law the functions of the governor in relation to the proclamation of the result and granting the certificate were ministerial and not judicial. His duty was simply to declare the result and deliver the certificate of his election to the party appearing to have a majority by the canvass thus made. He had no power strictly to go behind the canvass and inquire into the alleged frauds; for the returns were to all appearances legal and formal, and the evidence aliunde was for Congress if the question was raised of their illegality, and not for the executive. But it by no means follows that he was guilty of the fraudulent act forbidden by the enforcement act if he did go behind the returns.

In the first place he was not amenable under the statute for this act, because in our opinion he was not an "officer of any election" within the meaning of the statute. This was expressly so held by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Arkansas, his honor Judge Dillon presiding—a jurist of the clearest head, the most incorruptible integrity, and the finest legal attainments—when the question came before him in the indictments, and of its correctness we think there can be no reasonable doubt.

But if such officer, the governor might well in the utmost good faith, though without strict legal warrant, esteem it to be his duty to go behind such returns if it was brought to his attention that fraud had intervened. A mere mistake as to his powers and duties—the exercise of judicial instead of ministerial powers in that connection—would by no means establish the required fraudulent intent. And when we remember the circumstances that such frauds were brought to his attention; that he supported Boles and not Edwards in that election; that he exerted himself to procure the declination of a third candidate (Judge Searles) who claimed to be a regular Republican candidate, and whose candidacy endangered the election of Boles and rendered more probable that of Edwards; that Boles was recognized as the candidate of the party with which the governor has continually acted, and that Edwards was the candidate of the opposition; that at least some evidence was furnished to him of the alleged frauds; that the highest judicial tribunal of the State had declared against the validity of such returns; that the legislature had reached the same conclusion—we say when all these things are remembered we should be compelled to overturn all rules of evidence to say that, while he acted without warrant of law, he also acted fraudulently. A party may mistake the plainest legal duty, and yet have no criminal intent. And so we find in this case that the governor, if an officer of election, did not act fraudulently, hence was not guilty of the offense charged, and that thus far there is nothing to "impeach his official character or conduct as a member of this body."

Second. Alleged frauds leading to and connected with his election as Senator.

We inquire in the second place into the charge of fraud leading to and connected with his election as Senator.

By reference to the testimony of Whipple (set out above) it will be seen that this is based upon alleged fraudulent registration, and some supposed bargain or arrangement by which Johnson resigned his office as lieutenant-governor, taking the place of White, who resigned as secretary of state, Hadley becoming governor and Clayton Senator. Than this few things could be more vaguely stated so far as the testimony of Whipple discloses, and yet this is all, it is believed, to be found therein approximating a charge in this connection. We have sought not to put too narrow a construction upon the language used, nor have we been in the least inclined to limit the investigation within limits even so narrow as the charges here contained under the most liberal construction. And hence, upon the theory of the prosecution, that Senator Clayton, with many others, his friends, had conspired by the use of unlawful and corrupt means to secure his election to the Senate, much testimony was received as to appointments to office figuring in and preceding the conventions which nominated candidates for the legislature, the issuing of State bonds to railroad companies, certain influences which it was claimed were brought to bear on members of the legislature looking to his election, and other like matters, though nothing of the kind was charged or pretended in the testimony referred to us.

Of course a most material preliminary inquiry would be to what extent a party thus charged is to be affected by the acts, conduct, admissions, pledges, or promises of his friends, and hence the theory was that there was a conspiracy for the purpose indicated, and that what was said or done by one in furtherance of the common purpose was said or done by all, and that upon such hypothesis Governor Clayton was bound by all that was said or done by those engaged in the common design.

As stated in the "partial report," much of the testimony was received upon this theory of the prosecution—it being conceded that if the so-called conspiracy was not established it was in every respect incompetent. Since making that report we have carefully examined the testimony, and feel bound to hold that it falls far short of establishing the alleged combination, and hence that a large portion of the testimony should be excluded. We therefore report only such as we believe to be competent in this view of its scope and effect.

We shall be pardoned for stating the familiar proposition that to constitute a conspiracy there must be a combination of two or more by concerted action to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose or to accomplish a purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by unlawful or criminal means. The conspiracy is the gist of the offense, and it is not necessary that any act should be done in pursuance of such unlawful agreement. To make the acts or declarations of another evidence against the party charged the common design must first be established, and it will not do to connect the party charged or bring him into the alleged conspiracy by the admissions of others without his knowledge or without at least some recognition by him of their right to speak for or bind him.

In this case the purpose to be accomplished was neither criminal nor unlawful. The parties confederated, if at all, to accomplish a proper purpose by the use of unlawful or criminal means. And the whole of the case is, to put it in its strongest light, against Senator Clayton; that he is to be bound by all that was said and done by his friends, and simply because they were such, whether at the State capital or elsewhere, in their efforts to secure his election. We do not stop to determine whether these acts were or were not illegal, whether they can or cannot in all respects be defended; we only hold that there is no particle of testimony warranting the conclusion that he ever combined with them to use unlawful or criminal means. And if he is to be held responsible for every indiscreet remark made by overzealous friends, by every inducement just or otherwise held out by them to members of the legislature, for every appliance made use of by political and personal friends in the election of the members thereto, for the alleged combinations made in connection with proposed legislation, for all the alleged frauds in connection with registration in some parts of the State near and remote alike—we say, if this be the rule, few men would want friends in such a contest, or would be safe, however honest and upright their own conduct.

Many things were said and done by friends of Senator Clayton which we might not approve. Nor would we for a moment recognize any rule which would not exact or require the highest integrity and most honorable conduct in contests of this character. On the contrary, we would condemn without reserve every step, every word, every movement, which would seem to tend to the least fraud or corruption in an election so important. And yet, in view of the duty assigned us, we have nothing to do with mere matters of personal propriety, nor are we to determine whether all the plans, plots, and counterplots of these opposing factions were in all respects to be justified by a code of ethics ever so desirable, and yet perhaps too seldom practiced. We have to do with the practical question whether Senator Clayton was himself a party to such fraud and corruption as invalidate his election or impeach his official character.

In the whole mass of testimony there is but little to connect him with the various schemes which it is alleged were corrupt in their inception and consummation, touching his election. Witnesses, it is true, did testify as to what others said, but that they spoke with the knowledge or concurrence of the party charged is left entirely without proof in many instances, and when the proof is supplied it relates to matters so entirely immaterial or foreign that it is scarcely worthy a moment's attention. One witness (McConnell) undertakes, we know, to bring all the matters detailed by him, or many of them, home to the Senator. But we feel bound to say that in many respects his story is improbable, and he stands before us in such an attitude that we are constrained to discredit much that he says. While before us he was almost a wreck from long-continued dissipation, and we were compelled to put him under treatment for several days before his testimony could be completed. Add to this that several witnesses, having the means of knowledge, testify unhesitatingly that his reputation for truth and veracity is bad, and it seems to us that no tribunal would be justified in condemning any one upon the mere recollection of such a witness, months after the transactions occurred.

That which approximates nearest any improper action on the part of Senator Clayton, in this connection, relates to the steps taken to induce White to resign the office of secretary of state. It will be seen that Clayton was governor and Johnson lieutenant-governor. When the former was first elected to the Senate, Johnson was still lieutenant-governor, and would, if the governor accepted the Senatorial position, succeed to the gubernatorial office. Clayton had pledged his friends, both before and after the meeting of the legislature, that he would not accept the position of Senator if Johnson was to be left as governor. At the time proceedings were pending in the supreme court of the State to oust Johnson, but the proceedings failed, and thereupon Clayton declined the Senatorship. He still desired to be Senator, and yet determined to maintain his pledge to his friends. After much consultation among his friends and others, an arrangement was effected by which White resigned. Johnson was appointed by Clayton to his place as secretary of state, and then Hadley was made presiding officer of the senate, and, upon Clayton's election again to the Senate, which followed soon after the above resignations and appointments, he became governor. Months afterward White received, as we find, through Senator Clayton, $5,000 in money and $25,000 in railroad bonds.

In the resignations and appointment themselves there was nothing wrong. There is no testimony that Clayton made use of improper means to bring them about. White, who is the only witness who seems to know much about it, says that he was a friend of Governor Clayton—was anxious for the harmony of the party—had frequently expressed his readiness to do anything to bring about quiet and peace; that he had for months, because of the condition of his family, expressed his intention to resign; that he had some business relations with the opposing faction, which was in such a situation that he knew he must suffer if by his resignation Johnson could be got out of the way; that he did thus suffer, and that this $5,000 was paid to indemnify him for this loss. He expressly denies that this money or his resignation was any part of any corrupt or other improper agreement or prior arrangement touching the Senatorial election. To this view of the transaction there is no direct opposing testimony. Who furnished the $5,000 and the bonds is not shown, except that they were deposited by Jackson E. Sickels to the credit of White, and the certificates of the deposit were sent to him by Senator Clayton. To conclude that it was paid in pursuance of a corrupt agreement, under and by which Governor Clayton secured his election, we should have to proceed upon presumption in the face of positive statement; and this, too, without any evidence that the vote of any member of the legislature was influenced by it, at least to his advantage; and when, also, it had been demonstrated more than once that he had at the time a clear majority of both houses of the legislature. What he wanted was not votes, for he had them, but he wanted such a condition of things as that he could take the office and keep faith with his friends.

By the retiring of White, Johnson would go to an office more desirable in tenure and emolument than the one he held, which was apparently sufficient to induce the step. The votes of the members of the legislature did not seem to have been involved in the movement, and White was content to see the matter arranged and to retire from a position that had become irksome to him. There was no necessary connection between the arrangement with White and the votes of members of the legislature. In itself there was nothing either criminal or corrupt. Certainly there is no law, State or national, punishing such an act. If not a part of a corrupt agreement, by which votes were obtained, or intended to be secured, we cannot see how the arrangement can be made to affect his official character. Then, too, it must not be forgotten that the conference touching White's resignation was not with Clayton, nor ostensibly on his account, but quite exclusively between Hadley and White, and that Hadley was deeply interested on his own account in bringing about White's resignation, for, in that event, the chances were, if indeed it was not certain, that he (Hadley) would become governor, and while the money passed through the hands of Clayton, in view of the other interests involved, we cannot say that others may not have contributed it; and, in a matter so important and so vitally affecting the character and official position of a member of this body, we should not indulge in mere presumptions nor upon impression condemn him. Without giving our approval to the course pursued, we find nothing in it of such a corrupt or criminal nature as to vitiate the election, or to warrant a disturbance of his present official position.

But one matter remains to be considered, and that relates to the alleged corrupt bargain by which Senator (then Governor) Clayton issued the certificate of election to General Edwards, in consideration of receiving votes for his present position in the legislature of Arkansas.

This charge, though the one in which this prosecution mainly originated, has less apparent support than either of the others. Much that has been heretofore said is applicable here. The testimony, instead of showing the corrupt bargain, abundantly establishes that the Senator (then governor), though acting from an incorrect view of the law and his duty, nevertheless was carrying out what he had at least fair reasons to believe the will of the people, as expressed by their votes. He had evidence tending to show frauds. He had the solemn judgment of the highest court of his State, and the action of the law-making power touching the very point upon which he seemed to doubt; and he but followed such judgment and action. To say that he acted corruptly or fraudulently under such circumstances, we would have to conclude that not only he had the fraudulent purpose, but that the other co-ordinate departments of the State government were corrupt, or governed by a like fraudulent intent. These charges, as applied to the court and the legislature at least, are too grave to be believed upon this record, or in any case where the evidence is not of the most conclusive and satisfactory character. This conclusion should not be based upon mere presumptions—upon the impression of witnesses—upon the understanding of parties influenced not a little by their political and personal feelings and animosities. And yet, divested of all extraneous matter, this is all there is of this claim.

But, going one step further, the charge certainly fails from the fact that there is not a particle of evidence that any member in either house of the legislature was induced to cast his vote in consideration of giving the certificate to Edwards. The claim is that he was to receive the votes of Democratic members in return for his action; and yet he received but one vote that can by possibility be classed among the Democrats (and even his political status is left doubtful). This person was a witness before us, and he says positively that he voted for Clayton, but that there was no understanding or agreement that in consideration thereof Clayton was to issue the certificate to Edwards. And there is no evidence nor a single circumstance in the whole record in the least in conflict with his statement. There is therefore absolutely nothing in the least supporting this charge.

We are therefore brought to the conclusion, after a careful examination of all the facts, that there is nothing disclosed touching the charges made as found in the testimony of Wheeler and Whipple before the "joint select committee" impeaching the official character and conduct of Senator Clayton. We accordingly recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the charges made and referred to the select committee for investigation affecting the official character and conduct of the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained, and that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. G. WRIGHT.
L. M. MORRILL.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. Norwood submitted the following as the views of the minority:

As the minority of the committee of three appointed by the Senate to investigate and report upon certain charges made against Senator Clayton, I have been unable to agree with the majority in the conclusions to which they have come, and I therefore beg to submit to the Senate the conclusions to which I have arrived after a careful review of all the facts.

I regret that the majority of the committee did not see fit to lay before the Senate, embodied in their report in abstract form, more of the facts, as it would have enabled me to express my views in much shorter compass. I will, however, embrace none which I do not consider necessary to a correct understanding of the case as made.

The general charge made against Senator Clayton is that he used corrupt means to secure his election to the United States Senate. This general charge embraces several specifications, to wit:

1st. That he corruptly used his executive power as governor of Arkansas in 1870 in appointing registrars of election to register votes for members of the general assembly, by which he was elected a United States Senator, who as his friends and in his interest would register with a view to elect candidates in favor of him for the Senate.

2d. That when primary meetings were being held in the counties to nominate candidates for that legislature he went about the State and, in person and by his friends and agents, manipulated these nominations in his own interest; and to effect this end used his executive patronage to intimidate candidates opposed to his election to the Senate.

3d. That he either in person or through his friends and supporters for the Senate made a corrupt engagement, express or understood, by which his influence was to be given in favor of the election of General John Edwards, the Democratic candidate for Congress, in consideration of the support to him of Edwards and his supporters for the Senate.

4th. That in pursuance of this understanding he issued to Edwards the certificate of election in the face of a clear majority, according to the official election returns in his (the executive) office, in favor of Judge Boles, the Republican candidate opposing Edwards.

5th. That being under a pledge publicly and privately made to his political friends that he, if elected United States Senator, would not leave the governorship in the hands of Lieutenant-Governor J. M. Johnson, a Conservative, he corruptly instituted through his friends and supporters a proceeding by quo warranto to depose Johnson from office in order to clear the way to the Senate.

6th. That being elected Senator while the quo warranto was pending, when that was decided in favor of Johnson, he resigned the Senatorship, and afterward secured his reelection by inducing R. J. T. White, secretary of state, in consideration of a large sum of money, to resign and inducing Johnson to take White's place.

7th. That he corruptly procured the votes of many members of the legislature in support of himself for the Senate by paying money; by appointments of themselves and friends to lucrative offices; by granting to them and their friends State aid to railroads in which they and their friends were interested.

Before proceeding to state the testimony bearing upon and sustaining these specifications, I will remark, in order that the Senate may appreciate the extent to which Senator Clayton must have wielded his executive power, the energy he must have displayed, and the means he must have employed to make sure his election, and to increase the probability of the truth of witnesses who detail these means, that his contest for a seat in the Senate extended over a period of two years. This fact he states near the close of his own testimony when endeavoring to explain the statement made by H. L. McConnell, his former private secretary and political supporter, that Clayton told him the day after the second election "the fight had cost him (C.) in the neighborhood of $20,000." His extreme desire to be a Senator likewise throws much light on many acts whose full force might not otherwise be realized. In a conversation held by Clayton, Lieutenant-Governor Johnson, Thomas M. Bowen, Joseph Brooks, and J. L Hodges, a short time before Clayton's second election, Brooks and Hodges both testify that Clayton stated he had long earnestly desired to be a Senator; that it was the dream of his life; that he was as ambitious as Cæsar; and that had he his way he would sway the scepter of universal empire.

I would further state that by the laws of Arkansas under her new constitution the governor is clothed with unusual power and patronage. It is sufficient in this connection to say that, with all the other power and patronage incident to the executive of each State, he has the power of appointing judges, sheriffs, and justices of the peace. We will have frequent occasion to remark with what vigor, if not rigor, such power, energized by such desire and ambition, was brought to bear in his Senatorial contest on friend and foe.

The contest was exclusively Republican. Clayton had two opposing aspirants, McDonald, former United States Senator, and a negro named White, both Republican. The legislative, executive, and judicial officers were all Republican. There was no hope for a Democrat to succeed. Of eighty-one members of the house in 1871 fifty-eight were Republicans and twenty-three Democrats, as stated by Tankersly, the speaker. The oppressive disqualification of votes excluded a sufficient number of Democrats from the polls to throw the power (except in a few counties) into the hands of the Republican party. And such was and is the extraordinary power confided to registrars of election to receive or reject a voter's name—and to the board of review to retain or erase the names of voters registered—that the control of a governor over an election by appointing his friends and supporters on those two boards was only limited by his own integrity and that of his appointees.

In this contest the Republican party, being overwhelmingly strong, split by its very weight into two factions. They came to be known respectively by the names of "Brindletails" and "Minstrels." Either claimed to be the elect. Governor Clayton led the latter while Joseph Brooks was the acknowledged head of the former. The hosility felt toward each other was very bitter. Around either leader were gathered many ardent defenders. And as exemplars of the characters who were from first to last the warm and confidential friends of Governor Clayton I beg to give what the evidence shows to be the morale of the most prominent of those whose acts and sayings during the Senatorial struggle are very important in determining the charges made against Senator Clayton. For from their confidential relations to him, from their constant conference with him during and before and after the session of the legislature which elected him, from their interest in his success and dependence on him for office and other favors, we are enabled to decide to what extent their acts and sayings were the acts and sayings of Governor Clayton. We learn also with what kind of men Governor Clayton used to accomplish his purposes. His chief adviser and constant attendant was Thomas M. Bowen. There is scarcely a witness who testifies to an interview with Governor Clayton during that contest, extending through two and a half months, who does not speak of Bowen being present. He attended all the caucuses of Clayton's friends, was a regular lobbyist during the session for Governor Clayton, was most of his time in the executive office, and was present at several long, protracted interviews held at night between Governor Clayton and others of the opposition whom Governor C. was endeavoring to appease. Judge Bowen's motto, as testified to by Brooks and Hodges and undenied, was, "politics is but a game," and that the admission or non-admission of a contestant for his seat in the legislature is a mere question of party policy. This declaration of political ethics will be seen bearing its fruit in the subsequent conduct of its author.

Another adviser and confidential friend was John McClure, chief-justice of the supreme court, the appointee of Governor Clayton. The testimony shows that he was frequently with Governor Clayton during his contest; that he was editor of a partisan gazette in Little Rock, advocating Governor Clayton's election to the Senate while occupying the supreme bench; that as such editor he accepted a large sum of money from the friends of a bill to silence his opposition to the bill; and that he during that time engaged, or offered to engage for a large sum, to lobby a bill through the legislature. These facts, except the last, he establishes by his own testimony in this investigation. A third warm and zealous co-worker for Governor Clayton's election was Judge Bennett, also of the supreme court of Arkansas, and appointed by Governor Clayton. The testimony of W. R. Rogers throws much interesting light on his character. He was a hotel-keeper in Illinois, failed, joined the Federal Army, went to Arkansas as a captain, resigned, and read law; was appointed about a month after his admission to the bar by Governor Clayton as circuit-court judge, and was soon after (during the session of that legislature) appointed by Governor Clayton to the supreme bench. His influence with Governor Clayton was supposed (says Rogers) to be greater than that of any man in the State, and hence during that session of the legislature, while Bennett was on the supreme bench, he accepted from Rogers and others interested in a large railroad bill a proposition to use his influence with the board of railroad commissioners (composed of Governor Clayton, White, secretary of state, and one Thomas) to procure a grant of State aid to the road, and charged $70,000 ($1,000 per mile) for his influential service. His influence was effective. The aid was granted, the bonds were issued, and Bennett received from Mr. Dorsey (interested with Rogers) $35,000. During the Senatorial contest he was very often in Governor Clayton's office and on the floor of the house.

Another scarcely less conspicuous character and equally zealous supporter of Governor Clayton for the Senate was Charles W. Tankersly. He is a Virginian; joined the Confederate army; deserted; joined the Federal Army; "misappropriated public property" (a horse); was dismissed the service, and retired to private life in Philadelphia till the war closed. He then went to Arkansas; enlisted under Governor Clayton in his contest for the Senate; was elected a member of the legislature; was nominated by Clayton's friends for speaker and elected. McLane swears that Tankersly told him Governor Clayton sent for him (T.) before the legislature assembled and requested him to run for speaker. It will be seen that in this contest he was not a deserter, but was true to his colors, and received, after Clayton's election, his reward in his appointment as superintendent of the penitentiary.

Another and very prominent actor in these scenes, and a devoted friend of Governor Clayton, was O. A. Hadley. He was a senator in that general assembly. He was General Clayton's agent to make the offer to R. J. T. White to pay him a large sum of money to vacate his office, and thus remove an insurmountable obstacle to Clayton's election to the Senate, as I shall show hereafter. That being accomplished, Hadley was elected president of the senate (vice J. M. Johnson, who took White's place), and while governor he continued to preside over the senate until certain bills (such as the levee and others) were passed. As this dual service as president of the senate and governor was contemporaneous, and the first office was resigned just after these immense money bills were passed, it may not be amiss to state that the witness McLane swears that Chancy Stoddard, who paid McLane a large sum ($5,000) in bonds to silence his newspaper and to get his services as a lobbyist for the levee bill, and who, by his own testimony, stands convicted of bribing other members of the legislature to vote for the levee bill, told him McLane) that he (Stoddard) paid Hadley $20,000 in bonds for signing the levee bill. This Hadley denies, while Stoddard says he does not know the name of but one member, named Prigmore, who got the bonds, though he had reason for knowing that others shared them. As, however, the fact is not denied by any witness, not even by Clayton or Hadley, that Hadley bought off White, it is not much of a strain on even human charity to believe that a man in the market to buy will not arouse a sleeping conscience to stand guard against his being bought.

There are other actors in this drama whose moral figures would not compare unfavorably with those already but partially delineated; but as I have sketched the chiefs, I leave the others to speak for themselves through their own and the mouths of other witnesses, and will now proceed to a summary statement of the facts. And in doing so, as a matter of convenience, and to economize time and space, after once introducing a party or witness by his full name, I will employ only his surname.

I will take the specifications in the order in which I have arranged them, and while I treat each separately for the purpose of grouping like facts, that they may be seen at one view, as will be seen hereafter, I resolve the seven specifications into three charges, all and each of which I think the testimony and evidence sustain.

And, first, as to the corrupt appointment and use of registrars. It is not unreasonable to assume that Governor Clayton after the canvass of over a year, according to his own statements, prior to the summer of 1870 (for in March, 1871, he stated that it had extended for two years), with his ambition to be a Senator, selected his own friends to register the electors of the general assembly, and of officers to be elected in November, 1870. This assumption is borne out by the testimony.

In the county of Pulaski he appointed James V. Fitch and E. H. Chamberlain registrars. There is much evidence pro and con as to the fraudulent registration made by that board, and without stopping to settle the point of veracity, it is sufficient to say that without any prior announcement of his intention, Chamberlain, who was one of the most zealous of the partisans of Clayton, and worked from first to last for his election, and who was introduced as Clayton's witness in this investigation, just after registration closed, and within five days of election, on the 8th of November, announced himself as a candidate on the Clayton ticket for the legislature; and while by the returns, as set forth in the testimony of the witness J. L. Hodges, he (Chamberlain) received but 1,892 votes from the counties of Pulaski and White, constituting his district, out of a vote of about 5,000, he was returned by the secretary of state to the lower house as one of the members-elect, and obtained his seat. And from that time to the end of the disgraceful struggle, carried on in and out of the legislature for near two and a half months, for the election of United States Senator, he was not only the supporter but the confidential agent and adviser of Governor Clayton. James V. Fitch was rewarded by an executive appointment to the office of circuit clerk of Pulaski County and clerk of the criminal court, which court was created at that session of the legislature.

The witness A. A. C. Rogers says that in Columbia County Clayton appointed a boy from Illinois, named Ryan, registrar, and that in Hot Springs County he appointed Z L. Cotton as registrar, who, it was generally understood, lived in the county above and out of the district, though by the law of Arkansas the governor is required to appoint a resident of the county, who has resided in the county six months before the registration.

The witness Met. L. Jones states that Clayton appointed a man named George A. Wilkins registrar in Columbia County, and that Wilkins was afterwards appointed justice of the peace. A justice of the peace in Arkansas has jurisdiction up to $500, and the fees of office are high. That W. H. Atkins, registrar for Union County, was also afterwards apppointed a justice of the peace.

The witness Jones states that Cotton was a resident of Mount Ida, Montgomery County, while acting as registrar in Hot Springs County, and was afterward appointed clerk of the Montgomery County court.

As evidence of the sympathy existing between these registrars and Governor Clayton, I refer to an interview detailed by the witness Met. L. Jones, between himself, Governor Clayton, and Judge Bearden. He says such were the frauds being committed by the registrars in Columbia and Union Counties, that many citizens of those two counties met in convention and appointed Jones and Bearden a committee to wait upon the governor and make complaint and petition for redress. He stated the case; told Governor Clayton that he had affidavits of fifteen substantial men in his county to the facts. Governor Clayton said, at first, that was ex parte. Witness offered to put them in proper form. Governor Clayton then said it was too late to investigate (though the witness states the interview was fifteen days before the election, and the law of Arkansas is that registration closes only ten days before the election). Jones then asked him to remove the registrar. Clayton replied he did not have the power; to which Jones rejoined he had already removed some. Clayton said he had, but that he thought he had transcended his authority, and that he would refer the matter to the courts. When asked if he would not interfere then, he said he would after the election. Jones said then he would apply to the courts, and Clayton told him he would not submit to that interference by the courts before the election; and if he (Jones) attempted to arrest the registrars before the election, he would treat the act as insurrectionary, and would employ force, i necessary. Met. L. Jones was an intelligent man and a lawyer.

In this connection I will give the first and second sections of the act of July 15, 1868, regulating registration of electors in Arkansas, page 52, statutes of 1868, and will state that there is nothing further in the whole act, or any other law of Arkansas, brought to the notice of the committee, which abridges the power therein conferred on the governor.

"SECTION 1. That on or before the 1st day of August, 1868, and every two years thereafter, the governor shall, with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint three loyal, competent, and discreet citizens in each county, who shall have resided at least six months in the county next preceding their appointment. Said persons shall be styled and called board of registration, one of whom shall be designated by the governor as president of said board: Provided, That in case no such person can be found in each county within the State, then and in that case they shall be appointed from the county most convenient thereto, each of whom shall serve two years, unless removed as provided hereinafter: And provided further, That the governor, in lieu of one of the citizens to be appointed as above provided for in this section, may designate a justice of the peace, notary public, or constable as one of the members of the board of registration, who shall in every such case be designated as the president of said board; and every justice of the peace, notary public, or constable that may be designated by the governor as a member of said board for any county in this State shall, in addition to the duties now imposed upon him by law, discharge the duties of president of such board of registration according to the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. The governor shall fill any vacancy occurring in any of the appointments made by him, and may in his discretion remove any one so appointed by him for incompetency or other sufficient cause. The secretary of state shall cause notice by certificate to be given to each of the persons, and shall also transmit to the clerk of the county court of each county the names of the persons so appointed as board of registration."

With this act before him, and the fact brought to his notice that he had already removed some of the registrars, he stated to Jones as a reason for not desiring to interfere with that alleged fraudulent registration in Columbia and Union Counties that he did not have the power to remove them. His first answer was it was too late; second, I have not the power; third, go to the courts for redress; and, fourth, you shall not resort to the courts until after the election, and if you do I will consider you an insurrectionist and put you down with a military force.

To show the discretion and power of these registrars, as well as to illustrate the beneficence of the then existing government in Arkansas, and the freedom of opinion thereby tolerated at that time and now, so far as I am advised, I will quote the eleventh section of the act above referred to:

"SEC. 11. That no person shall be registered who during the late rebellion took the oath of allegiance to the United States, or gave bond of loyalty or for good behavior, unless he shall show by satisfactory evidence that he has ever kept this said oath or bond inviolate, or that he has openly advocated or voted for the reconstruction measures of Congress, or voted for the constitution at the civil polls at the constitutional election of 1868."

I will remark this act was passed during Governor Clayton's term of office and was of course approved by him. Referring to the words in the last section quoted and italicized by me, I challenge all Christendom to produce its parallel for anti-republicanism and tyranny.

It is very easy to see how, with such harsh and at the same time mobile power lodged in the discretion of the instruments and favorites of a governor acting in the capacity of registrars, they could manipulate the election of a legislature to secure an overwhelming majority.

As evidence as to how Governor Clayton was disposed to use that power I refer to the statements of the witness A. A. C. Rogers. Rogers was a candidate for Congress against O. P. Snyder at that election. In August, 1870, before Rogers entered the race, knowing, as he says, how registration had been conducted in the former election for Congress in 1868, he called upon Governor Clayton to know if the people of Arkansas would have a fair election. He says Clayton smiled and said that depended very much on circumstances. What those circumstances were will appear hereafter. Rogers states that about two weeks before the election he complained to Governor Clayton of the abuses in registration in his district, told him that out of about 2,200 voters in Union County there had been registered but about 700 to 800, and that in Chicot County they were registering about 1,200 railroad hands, non-residents, who were there employed by one Jackson E. Sickles, a railroad contractor. Rogers states, as does Sickles also, that Sickles was a personal and political friend of Governor Clayton and desired him to be Senator. Governor Clayton said to me, "I have no control over my registrars and I cannot do anything with it." Rogers replied, "Governor Clayton, you have attempted to control; in two or three instances you have removed registrars and appointed others, and now you tell me you cannot do it." To which Clayton replied, "Damn it, I do not know but what I did wrong, but the damned rebels there ought not to vote anyhow." Rogers replied, "Governor Clayton, you are not the constitution of the State. It is your business to enforce the law if it dooms every man in the State, and when you assume to be the constitution you assume too much." Rogers called his attention to two hundred sworn certificates of persons debarred the right to register. Clayton replied, "I have not time to correct it now." Rogers says this was about nineteen days before the election. Much more was said with which I will not encumber my remarks, but which illustrates the manner in which Governor Clayton conducted that registration. Governor Clayton admits the conversation and does not deny the language, but explains by saying that he referred to Ku-Klux outrages existing at the former election, in 1868, and that he said to Rogers that if they were to be repeated he would control the registration to prevent them, or words to that effect. The Senate will be enabled to judge between the two statements when this conversation is given more in detail. Rogers states that Clayton removed Judge Alexander, in Ouchita County, after registration was complete, and appointed a man named Thompson registrar, who lost the registration book and ran away; that he removed Hicks, a registrar in Hempstead County, and appointed Beldin, the uncle or father of D. P. Beldin, senator from Hot Springs County, who was one of Clayton's strongest friends during his Senatorial contest.

The second specification is as to how the nominations for members of the legislature were manipulated by Governor Clayton and his friends in his own interest. On this point I will be brief, contenting myself with one transaction by way of illustration. The witness Judge Story testifies that he was a candidate for the legislature from Columbia County; that a man named Archer, a supporter of Clayton, came into the county and said that Governor Clayton did not desire him to go to the legislature and asked him if he intended to persist in his candidacy; he replied that he did. Archer then produced from his pocket an order or proclamation issued by Governor Clayton and threatened Story that if he did not desist and allow Clayton's friends to be elected that the public printing, which Story, a Republican, was then doing in the Magnolia Flower (a gazette of which he was editor), would be taken from him and given to another paper. He was then doing the public printing for two counties, Union and Columbia. The public printing was afterward given to the South Arkansas Journal, printed at Camden, Ouachita County, forty miles off, not more than fifteen copies of which the witness states were taken in his county. This patronage consisted of publication of notices from the probate courts, executors' and administrators' sales, &c., and for the two counties was worth to Story $3,000 per year. This printing was taken away after the delegation from that county reached the legislature and persistently opposed the election of Governor Clayton. The witness asked Governor Clayton why it was done. He gave no reason, but referred to the course the delegation had taken toward him. Several other witnesses besides Story also testified that while the primary meetings were being held for nominations throughout the State, Clayton was going about the State providing for the nomination of men favorable to his election. The witness J. T. White testifies that after the nomination was made in his county, Clayton appeared there and insisted upon a renomination, which was carried out and the ticket elected. The witness, who was nominated the first time, was retained on the ticket as a friend of Governor Clayton.

The third and fourth specification charges a corrupt agreement with the Democrats, and particularly with General John Edwards, Democratic candidate for Congress, in pursuance of which the Democrats were to support Governor Clayton for the Senate, and Governor Clayton was to aid in the election of Edwards, and to give him the certificate of election. The inception of this transaction occurred in October, 1869, as testified by the witness A. A. C. Rogers. He says that at a meeting of the most prominent Democrats in Little Rock, assembled to consider the political situation of the State, Judge T. M. Bowen appeared with a written proposition from Governor Clayton to form a combination with the Democrats for their support. He said he was right from Governor Clayton, who approved it, and that he was there in Clayton's interest. His proposition was that Governor Clayton would control the election so as to secure a legislature favorable for him for the Senate, and that Clayton, in consideration of the Democratic support, would recommend to the legislature such measures as would relieve the people from the disfranchisements of the constitution; that in the counties where Clayton's friends had the majority he was to name the candidates; in the counties where the Democrats were so greatly in the majority that he could not control them, they were to name the candidates. There was no Republican present except Judge Bowen. Bowen said that the witness (Rogers) was to acquiesce in this arrangement. Another meeting was held at Mr. Garland's office that night, and a consultation ensued. Rogers dissented to Clayton's proposition, and withdrew from the meeting. Witness met Governor Clayton the next day at the fair grounds. Clayton referred to the meeting the night before; said that the arrangement proposed was "about the best thing that could be done." Bowen stated distinctly, in answer to an inquiry propounded by A. H. Garland, one of the Democrats present, that this proposition and the terms upon which it was made came directly from Governor Clayton. The proposition shows very clearly two things: first, his anxiety to combine with the Democrats for his election, and, secondly, that he was perfectly willing to use the executive power in manipulating the election of members of the legislature to the same end. It also reflects much light upon the two charges made against him, that he did conduct the registration for that election unlawfully, and, therefore, corruptly, if to secure his election; and that he agreed to issue the certificate of election to Edwards, in consideration of the support of Democrats.

As Governor Clayton required that the witness Rogers should accede to this proposition, and as he dissented, there is no evidence before the committee that the combination then proposed was ever carried out in that form; that is to say, there is no evidence that the Democrats allowed him to name their candidates. But as to whether his purpose was carried out as revealed in that proposition will be seen when we come to consider his conduct and motives in issuing the certificate to General Edwards.

There are other similar facts disclosed in the evidence, but I will now proceed to collate the facts bearing upon the charge of issuing the certificate of election to General Edwards.

There were two Republican conventions held at Fort Smith to nominate candidates for Congress. Judge Thomas Boles was nominated as the regular Republican candidate E. J. Searle was nominated by the other. Edwards states that he ran as an independent candidate—a quasi-Republican—but supported by the Democrats and Conservatives. In a short time Searle withdrew, leaving Boles and Edwards to run the race. The majority of this committee, in their report, assume as an uncontroverted fact that Governor Clayton supported Boles, the regular Republican; but there is hardly any fact in the whole investigation about which witnesses differed more, as I will now proceed to show, and if the evidence does not establish the fact that Clayton was supporting Edwards, it undoubtedly shows that if supporting Boles, Edwards was the subject of much well-plied coquetry; for Edwards and his friends were certainly under the impression that Edwards had the executive favor. The witness H. L. McConnell swears in terms that Governor Clayton supported Edwards. And just here, as an attempt was made, in consequence of the strength of McConnell's testimony against Clayton on this and other points, to impeach his veracity, and as a majority of the committee in arriving at their conclusion have entirely ignored his testimony, I will state the reasons why I give credence to his statements. He went to Little Rock in 1869, with a letter of introduction to Governor Clayton, going from Leavenworth, Kans., where Governor Clayton formerly resided. Being an editor, and evidently a very intelligent man, he was engaged by Governor Clayton as his private secretary. He commenced advocating, in a public gazette, Governor Clayton's election to the Senate, and continued in both capacities until Governor Clayton's election. These facts are not denied by Clayton himself. They were certainly on the most intimate terms. Sustaining those relations to Governor Clayton for two years, he certainly had full opportunty to ascertain during that time whether McConnell was a man of veracity; for let it be borne in mind that his testimony is not discredited by contradiction, but, on the other hand, is corroborated in many points by several witnesses. The attempt to discredit him was made by introducing two or three parties, unknown to the committee, who swear that McConnell's reputation while in Leavenworth, and afterward in Little Rock, for veracity was bad. That he was the holder of the political secrets of Governor Clayton is fully sustained by Clayton's own testimony, for, some time after the Senatorial election, and in 1871, two witnesses, Mr. and Mrs. Parish, whose voluntary affidavits were admitted in evidence by consent, swear that Governor Clayton during McConnell's absence from his room, which was in Parish's dwelling, entered McConnell's room, opened his trunk, ransacked it, and examined a large number of letters therein, and took away a large bundle of papers. The witness says they were letters which show Governor Clayton's relations to Edwards. Clayton says they were letters which he had given to McConnell to answer, and which McConnell had not answered. McConnell, who says that he occasionally—two or three times a year—gets on a drunken spree, was at that time drunk, and had been absent from his room for a day or two. Their relations were certainly extremely confidential, not only from the testimony of other witnesses, but from the admissions of Governor Clayton himself; besides as to several material statements Governor Clayton corroborates the testimony of McConnell. As, for instance, McConnell testifies that Clayton offered Grady, a member of the legislature, the sheriffalty of his (Crawford) county to vote to impeach Lieutenant-Governor Johnson, and about that Clayton says he has an indistinct recollection of McConnell's speaking to him about the sheriff's office of the county, but does not remember that he made any promise or pledge.

Again, McConnell says that Clayton told him his election had cost him $20,000. Clayton admits he told him that it cost him a great deal of money, and explains in what way he spent it; and it is most noteworthy in determining the credence to be given to McConnell, that Governor Clayton, while testifying in his own behalf, and being represented by two counsel supposed to be learned in the law, and to understand how to conduct a defense, to wit, John McClure, chief-justice of the supreme court of Arkansas, and Thomas M. Bowen, ex-justice of the same bench (McClure appointed by Clayton, no doubt on account of his judicial learning), did not in all of his testimony refer, by denial, to any of McConnell's statements, which are numerous and very damaging if true, except the two instances that I have referred to above.

And now to resume the evidence bearing upon Edwards's case.

McConnell, who by editorials and correspondence was advocating Clayton's election, and was on such terms of intimacy with Clayton, publicly and privately opposed Boles and advocated Edwards's election. He produced five letters written to him by Edwards during the campaign, the first dated as early as the 19th of January, 1870, in which he says, "We are bound to sweep the State and elect Clayton to the Senate; most of the Democrats will vote for us. I am glad you are with us for Clayton." The second, dated November 25, 1870, says: "If we can succeed in getting the returns of the legal polls sent up, I am satisfied the governor will disregard the bogus returns and give me the certificate." In another letter, written before Clayton's first election, Edwards says: "I have succeeded admirably in squelching out several contests in other counties, urged on by the 'Brindle-tails' in order to compromise the contest from Pulaski." * * * "If Clayton should count the five townships and give Boles the certificate, a howl would be raised by Conservatives and Republicans, that would let in Brooks and Hodges (two Republican candidates for the legislature, who were contesting for their seats, and opposed to Clayton, one of them, Brooks, a very influential man), and keep out the others who had publicly pledged to his support." The fourth letter says: "Clayton has the inside track; can be elected, and above all will receive the support of all the Conservatives, but if he should fail to give me the certificate, such a howl as will go up you never did hear." In the fifth letter, dated February 12, 1871, and which was written after Clayton's first election (January, 1871), and before Edwards got his certificate (February 20, 1871), Edwards says: "From the vote ousting the great high priest, Joe (meaning Joseph Brooks, the senator, who had been turned out of the senate by Clayton's supporters), I shall be under more obligations to the governor for the certificate than any one else, and I think I can, in turn, render him essential service, as they intend making war on him on his taking his seat." I call attention to the letter dated November 25, 1870, in order to state in this connection that Edwards swears that he went from Fort Smith, his home, to Little Rock, within ten or fifteen days after the election, which was held on the 8th of November, to see Governor Clayton about his certificate; that Clayton then and there said that he (Clayton) would be governed in issuing the certificate by the action of the courts and legislature. This statement shows that Clayton already had the returns before him, and knew the result of the returns. Boles swears that he first called on Governor Clayton to see about the certificate, after the expiration of thirty days from the election, which must have been after the 8th of December, and that Clayton then told him that he had not examined the returns because he had not been well; that Clayton said nothing about the result of the election as shown by the returns, but said that Boles might go to Washington; he (Clayton) guessed the certificate would be all right.

Boles testifies that he was the regular Republican nominee for Congress; that Searle was the nominee of the other faction; that Clayton considered him (Boles) opposed to Clayton's election to the Senate.

Edwards, witness for Clayton, testifies that he was an independent Republican candidate; that Clayton favored Boles's election; that he (Edwards) was in favor of Clayton for the Senate.

The returns, it is admitted on both sides, in the executive office showed that Boles was elected over Edwards by a large majority; but Clayton refused to give the certificate to Boles. The law of Arkansas requiring the governor to issue the certificate is as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the secretary of state, in the presence of the governor, within thirty days after the time herein allowed to make returns of elections to the clerks of the county courts (i. e., five days after the election), or sooner if all the returns shall have been received, to cast up and arrange the votes from the several counties, or such of them as have made returns for such persons voted for as members of Congress, and the governor shall immediately thereafter issue his proclamation declaring the persons having the highest number of votes to be duly elected to represent the State in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and shall grant a certificate thereof under the seal of the State to the person so elected."—(Statutes of Arkansas, 1868, page 325, section 50.)

Governor Clayton refused to issue his proclamation declaring Boles elected, and never did issue to him the certificate of election. His only excuse for refusing to comply with the law above quoted is that a few days after the election certified copies of affidavits, accompanied by a petition purporting to be signed by several candidates for the legislature in Pulaski County, asking him not to count the returns from that county, on account of alleged frauds, were laid before him. These certified copies are signed by Stoddard (brother of Chauncey Stoddard, who bribed Prigmore) and other members of the legislature. When Clayton was on the stand he could not recognize the handwriting of but two of these petitioners, though he knew them all well, and these two are Howard (a Democrat) and Chamberlain (a Conservative, who was his political friend and voted for him for Senator). Why certified copies of affidavits were used no witness explains. Why only the signatures of Howard and Chamberlain are proved (and that by Clayton only) to be genuine the committee were not informed. But here comes in an extraordinary fact which may be, and in my opinion is, the key to the mystery. No one ever saw those affidavits and petition until this investigation commenced, though Clayton says he received them the 17th of November, 1870, so far as the testimony shows, except Clayton and Chamberlain. R. J. T. White, secretary of state, swears he never saw them. Barton, Clayton's private secretary and brother-in-law, and his witness, makes no reference to the existence of these affidavits and the petition. And when Clayton was asked how these papers came to be in his possession now, his significant reply was that when he vacated the executive chair he retained them, "deeming they would probably be of some importance in the future." Boles also swears that in his interview with Clayton, thirty days after the election (about 8th December), when Clayton told him to "go on to Washington; he [Clayton] guessed the certificate would be all right." Clayton did not even refer to the existence of these affidavits and this petition.

Another part of this history necessary to be known is this: Chamberlain and Howard were beaten by the returns first made from Pulaski County. The clerk of the county, McDiarmid, had received two sets of poll-lists; had rejected one and certified the other and sent it to the secretary of state. The one certified defeated Edwards and elected Boles—defeated Chamberlain, Howard, Gantt, Mitchell, and others, and elected J. L. Hodges and others.

It was all-important, therefore, in order to justify issuing the certificate to Edwards, that the rejected polls in Pulaski should be counted, and the polls certified to the secretary of state should be rejected. When Edwards called on Governor Clayton, about ten or fifteen days after the election, they and Chamberlain held a conference, and it was then and there agreed that steps should be taken to get the returns excluded by McDiarmid sent up. Chamberlain sued out from the supreme court, then consisting of McClure, Bowen, and Wilshire (another adherent and appointee of Clayton), a mandamus to this clerk. A case was made and the court decided that the excluded polls were the legal votes. But still the certificate was not issued, though this decision was rendered two days before the legislature met. The election for Senator was yet to take place, and the support of Edwards and the Democrats was to be given. The election occurred on the 11th of January, 1871, and all the Democrats except five voted for Clayton. He accepted the position as Senator and still would not issue the certificate. Two of the candidates for the house in Pulaski County, Gantt and Mitchell, had proposed to Clayton, Edwards, and their friends that they must desist from this contest for seats if Clayton would issue the certificate to Edwards. When Clayton was elected on January 11, as above stated, Gantt (who was authorized by Mitchell to act for him) complained because Edwards was not commissioned. On January 27 Gantt addressed the following letter to the house:

To the honorable the house of representatives of the State of Arkansas:

I learn from the published proceedings of the house of representatives in the city papers of this date that it was announced in your honorable body on yesterday that I had retired from any contest for a seat therein, and that the protest and papers presented on the first day of your session by Hon. L. B. Mitchell and myself to abandon our contest on condition that a certificate of election as member of Congress was issued to General John Edwards. I certainly understood this to be fully assented to, and in compliance with that agreement prepared a formal abandonment of the contest, in writing, to be used only after such certificate should have been issued to General Edwards.

Believing that General Edwards had been legally elected a member of Congress, and that he could render efficient service in that capacity, but fearing that the issuance of his certificate of election was likely to be delayed, if issued at all, and desiring that it should be issued, we consented to surrender our individual rights in the premises for what we considered to be the public good.

Hon. L. B. Mitchell and I are able to show, by the most indubitable evidence, that we were legally elected representatives from the tenth district, and respectfully ask that we be afforded an opportunity of doing so; that the papers connected with our contest be rereferred to the committee on elections, and that we may have a fair and impartial hearing.

R. S. GANTT.

Before the date of Gantt's letter the court had decided that the excluded polls were the legal votes in Pulaski County, which gave Edwards a majority of 50, and the legislature, by joint committee, had decided the same question in the same way. This result, let it be remembered, was all Clayton said he desired to decide to whom he would issue the certificate. Hence Gantt complained, because the agreement had been carried out by him and the other Democrats and Clayton had not issued the certificate to Edwards.

I will now state some facts which furnish an explanation of this delay or refusal. The fact is sworn to by many witnesses on both sides; indeed, it is admitted by Clayton that during the canvass for the election for the legislature and Congressmen he pledged himself to his political friends that he would not if elected Senator accept the position and leave Lieutenant-Governor Johnson in office to become governor. This pledge was on him at his first election in January. He, as is alleged, had a proceeding quo warranto instituted against Johnson to turn him out of office on the sole ground that Johnson, who was elected with Clayton in the spring of 1868, and had been in office for over two years, and presiding over the senate by virtue of his office, had not taken the oath of office as lieutenant-governor within the time prescribed by law. This was more than even the supreme court of Arkansas, constituted, as I have shown it was, could stand. The quo warranto failed, and Clayton kept his pledge by resigning the Senatorship.

The Democrats and Conservatives then became furious. Gantt sent in his letter to the house. Articles of impeachment were preferred against Clayton in the house, and fourteen of the friends of Clayton, to prevent their presentation to the senate, deserted the senate and "took to the brush." The certificate was issued to Edwards, and Gantt and Mitchell gave up the contest for their seats. From this time to the date of Clayton's second election, on the 15th March, 1871, two other means were adopted to secure his election. They constitute the foundation on which the sixth and seventh specifications rest.

I will now proceed with the evidence bearing on the Clayton-Edwards agreement.

Boles testifies that Clayton was unfriendly to his nomination; that during the canvass Clayton asked for his support for the Senate, and he told Clayton that he must stand neutral between him and McDonald.

Edwards, witness for Clayton, as has already been shown by his letters to McConnell, was supporting Clayton. He says in substance, "Clayton, Chamberlain, and I agreed on the investigation which was to change the result in Pulaski County by which I would get a majority. Chamberlain agreed to take the matter in hand. Chamberlain may have told me that he was moving in the investigation at the instance of Governor Clayton. Clayton and I agreed on the matter as any two would agree to any proposition. I always saw Clayton privately. Chamberlain told me that he had talked with Clayton and that Clayton desired the investigation to go on—just such an investigation as afterward took place. [Investigation here referred to was the one afterward conducted by a joint committee of both houses, Samuel Mallory, senator, chairman, for the double purpose—first, to furnish a ground for issuing a certificate to Edwards, and, secondly, to exclude certain candidates from Pulaski and other counties who were opposed to Clayton's election, and who by the returns then in the executive office were elected.] Chamberlain always said he desired Clayton's election. I left home on my way to Washington about the 23d of February; was informed by letter before leaving home that I would get my certificate. [Certificate was issued the 20th February.] I heard a rumor of this bargain between Clayton and myself before the certificate was issued; denied it privately but not publicly. Gantt told me that if the investigation (by Mallory committee) was made I would go to Congress and he and Mitchell would in that case withdraw from their contest. The polls which McDiarmid, the clerk of Pulaski County, had excluded were counted by the Mallory committee, and those he returned were rejected; this gave me 50 majority. The Mallory committee reported after Clayton's first election. No one ever approached me on the subject of a bargain further than as to the withdrawal of Gantt and Mitchell. I probably wrote letters urging Clayton's election. My first interview with Governor Clayton about my certificate was ten or fifteen days after the election. He said in that interview he would be governed by the action of the courts and the legislature. Democrats and Clayton Republicans told me the same thing. Both Clayton and White, secretary of state, told me the election returns were late coming in."

McConnell says: "Governor Clayton supported Edwards in the election. He told me he would issue the certificate to Edwards. Neal, Democrat, told me that there were great complaints among the Democrats that Clayton had not given the certificate to Edwards. I told Clayton of the complaint; there was at that time a coalition between the Democrats and Brindle-tails to unseat Clayton men in the legislature. I told him Whitesides, elected sheriff of Crawford County, had not received his commission, and suggested that he commission Whitesides to conciliate the Democrats. Clayton assented, and informed me that he would issue the certificate to Edwards. He said, however, that commissioning Whitesides would raise a howl among the ultra-Republicans. I saw Gantt on the morning of Clayton's second election; told him Clayton had fulfilled his pledge by issuing the certificate to Edwards and that he (Gantt) ought to do something for him; Gantt said he would go out and do what he could. Judge Walker, of Washington County, sent word by Edwards to Clayton that if he treated Edwards right Walker would urge his representatives, Owen and Caraloff and others, to vote for him.

"While the impeachment was pending against Clayton, Edwards told me he could not do much to relieve him unless he (Edwards) got his certificate, and asked me to tell Clayton that Edwards says that Clayton had promised to give him the certificate and was only waiting for a report from the Mallory committee; that the report had been made and the decision of the court in the mandamus case rendered, and that he wanted his certificate. I told Clayton, and the certificate was given the same or the next day. The impeachment was on the 16th, and the certificate was issued on the 20th of February. I was acting as the medium of communication between Clayton and various parties."

Chamberlain, witness for Clayton, says: "Gantt placed the matter of his resignation to assist Edwards in my hands, and said that he represented Mitchell also. By changing the returns from Pulaski County, Edwards would be seated. I proposed this to Edwards, and, with his approval, saw Governor Clayton about it; when the legislature met a resolution was introduced to raise a committee. Judge Bowen, Tankersley, and Judge Bennett were present when I saw Clayton. Clayton told me to hurry up the mandamus case, and to get the other returns from Pulaski County. I was a supporter of Clayton, and opposed Boles. Edwards was urgent for the investigation. Judge Bowen furnished the names of the committee to me, and I handed them to Tankersley, the speaker. Tankersley left off C. C. Waters and put on Mr. Ham, because Waters was dilatory about the matter. Judge Bennett, then circuit judge, went into the house and urged Waters to act. Soon after Bennett was appointed supreme court judge. Judge Watkins brought a paper to me from Gantt, proposing to decline a contest for his and Mitchell's seats if Clayton would issue a certificate to Edwards. Bennett took the paper to Clayton, returned, and said Clayton would not sign it. Gantt sent in a letter to the house stating he would claim his seat unless the agreement to issue the certificate to Edwards was carried out. The certificate was issued, and Gantt and Mitchell withdrew. Saw paper from Gantt in Judge Watkins's hands containing his proposition about Edwards, and stated the fact to Clayton, Bowen, and Bennett. This was not long before the Mallory committee was raised. I supposed Bennett to be one of Clayton's confidential advisers and friends; almost always saw him in Clayton's office, and saw him frequently on the floor of the house. The main object of the investigation was to seat Edwards in Congress; this was understood all round. It was understood by me in advance, and, I supposed, also by Bowen; that the committee of investigation, whose names Bowen gave me to hand to Tankersley, would report so as to seat Edwards. Bowen was then supreme judge, and I think Judge Bennett knew all about the committee. Edwards left the matter of the investigation with me, requesting me to do all I could, which I promised to do. I told him he might go home and rest perfectly easy; that he would get his certificate. I told Tankersley that those were the names of men he was desired to appoint on the Mallory committee. I think I told him that Bowen sent them."

Battle, Democrat, says: "I voted for Clayton on his first election; after the election my friends told me they had pledged me to Clayton to vote for him before the election; I voted for Clayton to make Johnson governor."

White, secretary of state, says: "Had no evidence of the election in my office, except the returns; the returns in every view showed Boles had a majority; the governor produced no papers on which he relied in issuing the certificate to Edwards; I issued it under his direction. The clerk in my office first informed me that Governor Clayton had decided to issue the certificate to Edwards; I asked him on what ground; if the governor had given any reason. He said none; and I told him to make a written memorandum of the transaction, which was done. There were no affidavits or petition touching the election brought to my notice by Governor Clayton."

W. S. Olivir, witness for Clayton, says: "Clayton advocated the election of Boles and the Republican ticket for the legislature in Pulaski County; Clayton advocated the election of Brooks and Hodges in that county in all his conversations with me." (We will see directly what measures Clayton advocated to keep them from their seats when it was known they were opposed to his nomination for Senator.)

Catterson says: "Isaac C. Mills was Democratic candidate for sheriff in Pulaski County in 1870; he was supported by Clayton's political friends; was afterward appointed United States marshal for the eastern district of Arkansas by President Grant, on Clayton's recommendation. Harrington, now United States district attorney for Arkansas, supported and worked for Mills, and was generally understood to have supported Edwards in his contest for his certificate."

Having presented these facts to show the intention of Governor Clayton in issuing the certificate to Edwards, I will now give, very briefly, the action of the Mallory committee, which was raised in the legislature to investigate the elections in Pulaski County, and framed, as Chamberlain's evidence clearly shows, with a view to decide in favor of Edwards. Being a joint committee, they appointed Senator Mallory chairman, and pretended to proceed with the investigation.

Joseph Brooks was contesting for his seat as senator, and held a certificate of election from the county clerk.

J. L. Hodges, Gantt, and Mitchell were contending for their seats, and held certificates. Chamberlain, Goad, and Pilkington were also contending as opposing candidates. The latter were known as Clayton men. General Upham was appointed clerk of the committee. I should say that, by the returns, the Clayton men were defeated, so the investigation had a double purpose—to seat Edwards in Congress and to seat Chamberlain, Goad, and Pilkington, who favored Clayton's election.

Chamberlain, Clayton's witness, says: "The following-named witnesses, whose testimony appears in the report of the Mallory committee, were never examined by the committee, to wit: J. W. Raybun, Calvin Pemberton, Milo Arbuckle, John W. Mooney, Isham White, Harvey Harrison, and R. R. Carlisle. I took their affidavits myself. I took some in the office of Mr. Fletcher, who was a Democrat. General Upham, secretary of the committee, who was a warm friend of Governor Clayton, told me he desired a quiet place to take the testimony of certain witnesses. He said many desired to testify whose testimony he did not want, among them Joseph Brooks and J. L. Hodges. I got the key to the law-office of Faust & Ratcliffe at Upham's request. The office was in a room in the rear of the building, approached by a dark passage in which there was no light. One member of the committee came that night, Mr. Cohn, I think, member of the house, devoted to Clayton, and who was afterward appointed clerk. The committee had met before in Upham's office, across the street from the State-house." (The witness does not say whether any witnesses were examined.)

Hodges says: "I endeavored to get before the Mallory committee to testify, but never could succeed. I was never notified of the time and place to take proof. I went one night by appointment of the committee, but there was no member of it present. Failing in my efforts to get before the committee, I called upon General Upham, the secretary, and proposed that, as I could do no better, that he should take my testimony. After making my statement for some minutes, I discovered he was taking down what I had not said. I charged it upon him, but he would not allow me to make the corrections. The testimony reported by the Mallory committee as mine was not given by me."

Battle says: "Was a member of the joint investigating committee of which Mallory was chairman. The committee sat a few times, examined Chamberlain, Hartman, Webster, John Reigler, N. L. Pears, S. R. Harrington, Hagan Green, and Jas. V. Hitch. [It will be observed that the witnesses whose names are italicized were no doubt very swift. Fitch did the registration that they were investigating. Chamberlain, after advising with Clayton, Bowen, Bennett, and Edwards, got up the investigation at Edwards's and Clayton's request, and furnished the names of the committee to Tankersley, the speaker, and the committee called in those special friends of Clayton, whose names are italicized, to do the swearing.] The witness says Hodges was not examined before the committee. I did not know that the report of the committee was going to be made until it was announced in the house. I did not unite in it, nor approve it. It was made by C. C. Waters, in the house, who was afterward appointed judge of the criminal court in Phillips County. Waters was never present when the committee sat."

Joseph Brooks says: "In an interview held by Governor Clayton, Lieutenant-Governor Johnson, Judge Bowen, J. L. Hodges, and myself, just before Governor Clayton's second election, that Governor Clayton then stated to him that the Mallory committee and its proceedings were projected simply for the purpose of a counter pressure to a fight, which he understood that we were putting up on him in Washington." Brooks told him "that he and Hodges had been wrongfully and outrageously and unlawfully kept out of their seats, through his influence chiefly, through the power of the star-chamber Mallory committee." These statements are corroborated fully by the witness Hodges, and are not denied by Governor Clayton. To the account of this interview, as given by Brooks, who is a very intelligent man, I especially invite the attention of the Senate.

As the fifth and sixth specifications of charges both relate to the means employed to remove Lieutenant-Governor Johnson from office, and thus remove the last obstacle to Clayton's coming to the Senate, I will treat them both together.

The proceeding by quo warranto has already been referred to. It was instituted for no other purpose than to fulfill the pledge which Clayton had given his friends repeatedly, that he would not accept the Senatorship until he had made way with Johnson. When that proceeding failed, his friends holding him to the pledge, he resigned, under the first election. In the mean time much bitterness had been engendered and division taken place among his friends and opponents in the legislature growing out of—first, the indignation of some at his attempt to overthrow Johnson on so frivolous a pretext; secondly, the attempt made by his partisans to impeach Lieutenant-Governor Johnson; third, his resigning the Senatorship, and, fourth, his delay in carrying out the agreement with General Edwards. The impeachment of Johnson, which was another effort made to get rid of him, was based upon a ground as frivolous, if possible, as the ground upon which the quo warranto was instituted. The charge against Johnson was that he was guilty of "high misdemeanors and maladministration," because he swore in Joseph Brooks as a member of the senate on his certificate of election which he presented after having appealed in vain to Senator O. P. Snyder and Senator O. A. Hadley, zealous partisans of Clayton, to present his certificate to the senate. And just here I will break the thread of my views in order to show how this matter was manipulated by Governor Clayton. Brooks says: "I held a certificate of election as senator; I asked both Snyder and Hadley to present my certificate and they declined; I was kept out of the senate until after Clayton's first election; was then sworn in on presenting my certificate; I moved the reference of my credentials to the committee on privileges and elections; the committee reported unanimously that I was entitled to my seat. Eight days after I was admitted I offered several bills; one was to make a disposition of the swamp lands, estimated at several millions of dollars. There were before the legislature what was called the levee bill, intended to appropriate the same lands for railroads. Just after I introduced the bill Senator Mallory moved a recess; it was taken, and at 2 o'clock p. m., when the senate assembled, Senator Young, from the committee on privileges and elections, made another report to unseat me and to seat my opponent, Riley, a Democrat. No evidence had been taken by that committee. I had not received any notice of contest by Riley. The previous question was at once ordered on the resolution to unseat me. I appealed for an opportunity to be heard. I wrote a note to Senator Sarber (a supporter of Clayton) to intervene for me. He said he would consult with Governor Clayton and let me know if I could be heard; he went and returned, saying he had seen Governor Clayton, who was in his office with Judges Bennett, Searle, and Bowen, or McClure (not certain as to which of the last two named), and that they were consulting on the subject; that the governor signified he would let him know in a few minutes; that he would go again and inquire of the governor if they might adjourn the question over till morning.

"I heard nothing more from Sarber. I then sent a message to Clayton by Joseph Myers, who returned no answer. The question was not adjourned over, and I was ejected from the senate that evening."

The above is a mere abstract of a pitiful story told by a man of great intellect, remarkable intelligence, and quick conscience, who, on account of his opposition to Clayton's election and disapproval of his conduct, was thus ruthlessly crushed without even a hearing. But to resume:

These two efforts to depose Johnson having failed, another election being necessary, and his friends being resolved not to vote for Clayton until he got Johnson out of office, another plan was devised. Strategy now came into play. A conference was held. Brooks and Hodges were invited to meet Clayton, Bowen, and Johnson. They met, and the following is Brooks's account of the interview. "Clayton stated that he was pledged not to resign and leave Johnson to become governor; that some arrangement must be made so that he could carry out his promise, in order that he might go to the Senate. The meeting was called to make an adjustment with Hodges and myself and our associates on the ticket in Pulaski and White Counties, and with Johnson. He repeated his often-expressed desire to be United States Senator; the earnest efforts he had put forth to secure it; that it was more than the dream of his life; that he was very ambitious; his heart was set upon it; that he was as ambitious as Cæsar; that he would not only be United States Senator, but that, if he had the opportunity, he would sway the scepter of universal empire. I answered, he knew full well that we had been opposed to his election; that it was a new development in political tactics that the successful party (himself) had to be conciliated; that though he had secured his election by means we did not and could not approve, he should quietly take his seat and we should be permitted to take ours in the general assembly. Bowen seemed equally interested with Governor Clayton, and to represent Clayton's views and feelings. One condition necessary to adjustment, they both said, was that they should expect and require that our friends in the house, not only those who were to be admitted, but other friends of ours who were then members of the house, should vote and act on the Hot Springs contest with the Clayton men. (This was a contest for seats in the legislature.)

"One of them said that I would be expected to use my influence with those colored members with whom I was supposed to have some influence to have them vote against the contestants in the house. I said they were sworn representatives of the people, and under obligations of the most solemn character to vote and act in that and every such matter in conformity with the facts and evidence as they understood them when presented; that if they found, in their unbiased judgment, that the contestants, agreeably to the testimony, were the members-elect, I could not, of course, counsel them to perjure themselves: for myself I claimed to be lawfully elected; stated to the governor I thought he knew I was. If I was lawfully elected, then I claimed the seat without conditions and without pledges; that I believed myself to be a Republican, not only unquestioned, but unquestionable; that if admitted to my seat, on all political questions I would undoubtedly act and vote with Senator Clayton's friends if they were Republicans; with respect to general legislation I did not regard myself under obligations to Governor Clayton or anybody else, except my constituents. Johnson expressed his wish for an adjustment so that Clayton might go to Washington and take his seat. Clayton and Bowen then suggested that Clayton might retire and let Johnson try his hand as governor. I answered that I thought Clayton's friends were not the men to be consulted with respect to the State administration; that I felt a very great aversion to any such horse-swapping on the subject; that Johnson was as much lieutenant-governor as he was governor; that he had been elected, after the fashion he had been, United States Senator; I thought the law ought to take its course; that we required no conciliation except for Clayton to go on as Senator, let the constitution and laws of the State take their course, and for them to suspend what I designated their star-chamber performances through the Mallory committee: that Hodges and I and our associates on the ticket had been denied the right of a hearing there, and that there could be no harmony or restoration of friendliness of feeling unless they either gave us a chance to be heard fully and fairly before that committee or the committee dissolved and their ex parte proceedings were cast into oblivion. Clayton replied that he thought, if other matters could be arranged, that there would be no difficulty with respect to that committee; that it was projected simply for the purpose of a counter-pressure to a fight which he understood we were putting up on him at Washington. I replied no fight had been put up on him, nor was any contemplated; that we and our friends were entirely content that he take his seat unmolested; that while we believed we had been outrageously kept out of our seats, through his influence chiefly, that was passed. Clayton expressed the opinion that if our delegation (from Pulaski County) had been admitted at the organization of the general assembly he would have failed of his election. Finally, late in the night, perhaps day-dawn, Bowen asked me if I would be satisfied with any adjustment made between Clayton and Johnson. I replied I had nothing to do with such an adjustment, and would make no trouble about it. We separated about the crack of day without any further adjustment than I have named.

"I understood Governor Clayton's remarks, that I have in part stated, to be to the effect that the Mallory committee was projected by himself, and its proceedings carried forward under his direction, with a view, as he stated it, to furnish counter-pressures against a supposed fight of ours against him in Washington."

The foregoing statement of Brooks is confirmed entirely by Hodges. This proposition made by Clayton and Bowen to influence votes to seat members without respect to their rights, and, in consideration of such influence to be exerted by Brooks and Hodges, graciously to consent that Brooks and Hodges might take their seats, not being accepted, still another device was hit upon, and that was to secure his seat by the use of money. O. A. Hadley was then delegated to wait upon R. J. T. White, secretary of state, and after a few blandishments he made the direct proposition to pay him $5,000 in money and $25,000 worth of first-mortgage bonds of the Mississippi, Ouichita and Red River Railroad Company to resign his office. It is hardly necessary to say that this masterly stroke was successful. This was just before Clayton's second election. It had been previously arranged that Johnson, who was all along the stumbling-block, if White would vacate his office, would resign and accept it; O. A. Hadley would be elected president of the senate, become ex-officio governor; Clayton would be re-elected and accept the place of Senator. Hadley says that White's resignation, Johnson's resignation and appointment to White's place, and Clayton's nomination all occurred within less than an hour of each other. Why these events occurred in such rapid succession and so immediately before Clayton's re-election we will better understand when we come to consider the last charge.

Now as to a few facts bearing upon the purchase of White. I will let Mr. White tell his own story, premising by saying that it is not only uncontradicted by any witness, but not even referred to by Clayton when on the stand. Referring the Senate to his testimony for the whole story, I content myself with mentioning the material facts: "O. A. Hadley called to see me. He said it was understood and agreed if I would resign I should not suffer pecuniarily, and that parties with whom he had conferred had agreed to see me out, if I suffered pecuniarily, and he mentioned the sums which they supposed I would be a sufferer. He named a sum, $5,000 and $25,000 in $1,000 first-mortgage bonds of the Ouachita and Red River Railroad Company; we separated there. I called on Johnson to know if the thing as represented was true. He said so, and it seemed to turn out that way afterward. I do not think I saw Hadley any more on the subject. I never called on Governor Clayton. He once passed me and asked me whether Senator Hadley had spoken to me on the subject, and I told him he had. We parted, and there was nothing more said. I resigned my office soon after. I met Governor Clayton in New York a short time after that, and spoke to him on the subject; the matter was lightly touched, a mere passing remark; and some time afterward I received a letter from him, inclosing a certificate of deposit on a bank in New York for $5,000, and twenty-five $1,000 first-mortgage bonds of the Mississippi, Ouachita, and Red River Railroad. The letter was signed by Governor Clayton, and contained nothing but, 'I inclose you' thus and so." When asked if he understood what they meant, he says, "I did; the papers showed for themselves what they meant." The witness attempts to show that other matters entered into the consideration for accepting this money and these bonds, but it is a most "lame and impotent conclusion." He admits that when Hadley called on him the subject of conversation was about his losses by resigning his office, and says that his salary and fees of office given up by him under this agreement were worth from $6,000 to $7,000 per annum. The value of the bonds received by White may be estimated by the statement of the witness McLane, who says that he sold the same number of railroad bonds ($25,000) at 32½ cents on the dollar. White's pay for resigning his office, at this estimate, would be over $13,000. By buying off White, and appointing Johnson to his office, an obstacle otherwise insurmountable in Clayton's path to the Senate was removed. To appreciate the value of this success, we have only to bear in mind that witness after witness who voted for him testifies that unless he had removed Johnson he could not have been elected. His own party friends would not have supported him, because they were resolved to do no act that would result in making Johnson governor. So, by removing Johnson, by paying White to resign and appointing Johnson to his place, he virtually bought the votes of his own friends.

The seventh and last charge is that Governor Clayton purchased his election by appointments to office of many of the members of the legislature, and by paying them money. It is answered to this charge, so far as relates to the appointments to office, first, that no such agreement was made, and, secondly, that the appointments, which are not denied, were made by Governor Hadley, who succeeded Clayton. Before stating the facts, I will remark that Clayton was elected on the 15th of March and Hadley was installed as governor on the 17th of March. This will explain why most of the appointments were made by Hadley. Clayton was certainly too shrewd to "pay the piper before the dance was over." Hence he made but few appointments before the votes were delivered. Besides, some of these appointments were made to offices created during that session of the legislature, and some of them by acts passed after Clayton's election, though they and the persons to fill them had been agreed upon in caucuses of the Clayton men before his election. From the split which occurred among his friends in the legislature, from the causes which I have already mentioned, and the decided opposition of the "Brindle-tails," or Brooks faction, and most of the Democrats, his second election was very doubtful. This is shown by the herculean efforts which he and his friends put forth for some time before the second election. Frequent caucuses were held, conferences at night were numerous, and continued up to a late hour the night before the election. The doubtful issue of the contest is further shown by the vote on the second election.

In the house, first election (house journal, page 74):

Votes cast	78
Of which Clayton received	71
Necessary to a choice	40
Majority	31

In the house, second election (house journal, page 715):

Votes cast	78
Clayton received	42
Necessary to a choice	40

In the senate, first election (senate journal, page 44):

Votes cast	25
Necessary to a choice	13

In the senate, second election (senate journal, page 272):

Votes cast	23
Clayton received	15
Necessary to a choice	12

Thus it appears that his first majority (41) was reduced on the second election to 5.

Let us inquire now whether there were more than 5 members of that general assembly voting at that last election who received lucrative appointments from Governor Clayton, or from Governor Hadley by agreement with Clayton. We will first take Hadley's own testimony on this point. He says:

"I appointed the following-named members of the legislature to office:

"S. W. Mallory, senator, commissioner of claims and director of the Mississippi and Ouachita Railroad Company.

"John W. Sarber, senator, trustee of the industrial university.

"P. H. Young, senator, to same position.

"Conway Barbour, representative, assessor of Chicot County.

"E. H. Chamberlain, representative, a justice of the peace.

"M. A. Cohn, representative, superintendent of public instruction.

"I. P. Grady, representative, sheriff Crawford County.

"George Haddock, representative, assessor of Clark County.

"W. C. Hazeldine, representative, circuit judge.

"G. H. Joslyn, representative, county and probate judge of Lincoln County.

"Herbert Marr, representative, circuit school superintendent.

"Thoms Orr, representative, assessor of La Fayette County.

"J. A. Robinson, representative, assessor of Desha County.

"C. C. Waters, representative, circuit judge.

"E. R. Wiley, representative, justice of the peace.

"C. W. Tankersley, representative, superintendent of penitentiary.

"A. Hemmingway, senator, was appointed commissioner to locate county site for Lincoln County.

"G. W. Prigmore, representative, circuit court clerk of Jefferson County, March 17, 1871, the day Hadley was installed. Hadley says he does not remember whether he or Clayton appointed him."

I will next take the testimony of E. A. Fulton:

"D. P. Belden, senator, was appointed justice of the peace in Hot Springs County.

"E. D. Rushing, senator, appointed justice of the peace.

"A. O. Espey, representative, appointed justice of the peace.

"Carl Pope, representative, appointed justice of the peace.

"T. G. T. Steele, representative, circuit court judge.

"J. M. Alexander, representative, justice of the peace.

"James V. Fitch, representative, circuit clerk of Pulaski County and clerk and recorder of criminal court of same county."

These offices (Fitch's) are regarded as the best paying in that county, and are worth about $10,000 per year. This criminal court was created by the same legislature that elected Clayton. The act creating the office of superintendent of the penitentiary, to which Tankersley was appointed, was also passed at the same legislature.

We have here the names of nineteen representatives and six senators—twenty-five members of that legislature in all—who were appointed to lucrative offices, and all of whom are recorded in the journals of the house and senate as voting for Senator Clayton in his second election. Of the fifty-seven men who elected him, nearly one-half were appointed to office. The very pregnant question arises just here, How did this come about? Was it by design or by accident? Hadley appointed most of them, but why? What interest had he in rewarding men from whom he had received no favors, so far as the testimony shows? But we are not left entirely to conjecture in solving this question. There is much positive testimony which shows that many of these votes were obtained by contract. Hadley admits that he appointed some of them at the suggestion of Clayton. Some of these appointments were arranged in caucus before Clayton's election.

And just here I will remark that while Clayton says he never attended a single caucus during the session of the legislature, his own witness, W. S. Oliver, says that Clayton was generally present at all the caucuses. He attended them himself and saw Clayton there. Chamberlain, also his witness, says he attended a caucus of Republicans when Clayton and Bowen were present. The levee bills, the penitentiary bill, and certain railroad bills were agreed upon in caucus; so was Clayton's nomination.

Scales, a Democrat who voted for Clayton on the second election, says that in an interview he had with Governor Clayton before his election, and in talking on that subject, Clayton told him if he would name good men to fill the office of magistrate in his county he would appoint them. Hadley was present and said he would agree to whatever Clayton said he would do. That was in the event Hadley became governor. This was after Johnson was appointed secretary of state, and before the election of Clayton. Had a conversation on the same day with Isaac C. Mills, who was supporting Clayton. I think I told him I had assurances from Clayton and Hadley that these appointments would be made; told him I would support Clayton, and told Mills of my conversation with Clayton. I voted for Clayton, and considered when I voted for him that these vacant offices in my county would be filled. I gave the names of some seven or eight Democrats and Republicans to Hadley and he appointed them. Clayton appointed some before he resigned. Hadley did not appoint some I recommended, and that is the only complaint I made against him. Neal, a Democratic member of the house, voted for the articles of impeachment against Clayton. When the resolution was passed, fourteen senators, as before stated, to break the quorum of the senate, and thus to prevent action on the articles of impeachment, "took to the brush" (using the language of the witness) and were gone a week, remaining during that time at the dwellings of W. S. Oliver and Judge Bowen, and visited while there by Clayton. Meanwhile Neal had evidently been manipulated, for the committee managing the impeachment in the house was changed and Neal appointed by Tankersley, the speaker of the house, chairman of that committee. The committee on the second or third day after Neal was appointed, without taking any evidence to support the articles of impeachment, except to examine some records in Clayton's office, reported back to the house that they could find no evidence on which to sustain the charges. Neal had two measures of much importance to him pending before the legislature. He wanted two courts established and desired Clayton's influence to pass the bill. The bill was afterward passed. Neal did not vote for Clayton, and gives the reason why he did not vote at all, that the election came off at 11 o'clock instead of 12 o'clock in the day. The house journal shows, page 715, that the election was held in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress, which designates 12 meridian as the hour.

McLane swears that he was in the house when the election was going on, and that he saw Neal during the roll-call get up and leave the chamber. Neal was also interested in a railroad for which he wanted State aid, which could only be granted by the board of commissioners, of which Clayton was one of three members.

The negro (White) senator was also a competitor of Clayton's in the election, and was instructed by his constituents to vote for himself. He did so, but before the announcement of the result of the ballot, he rose and said, "I change my vote to Powell Clayton."

McConnell says that Clayton and Bowen called at his room at a late hour the night before the election and stated that they had just seen White (this senator) and another member of the legislature named Mason, and had fixed the matter with them, but that they were very expensive.

McLane swears that White told him he was visited after 12 o'clock the night before the last election of Clayton by Clayton and Hadley; that they staid with him an hour or two and fixed the matter up.

Fulton swears that White boasted that he got $25,000 worth of stock in a railroad while he was senator.

Another witness testifies that White was charged at a public meeting where he was present with having received $25,000 in bonds for his vote, and did not make any denial.

McConnell testifies that Clayton told him to say to Steele (senator), who was considered doubtful, that he (Clayton) would appoint him judge of the circuit court if he would vote for Clayton for Senator. Steele voted for Clayton and was appointed judge of that court, vice Searle, resigned.

Chamberlain (projector, with Clayton and Edwards, of the "star-chamber committee," and Clayton's witness) says: "Clayton asked me to vote for him on his second election; said if I would he would make out for me a commission as justice of the peace right then. I voted for Clayton, and got my commission afterward from Hadley." He states, however, that he did not vote in consideration of the commission. Per contra, let it be remembered that between the first and second Senatorial elections Chamberlain had broken out the traces. The impeachment of Johnson to depose him, and thus fulfill Clayton's pledge, no man can doubt, was Clayton's own work. Here Chamberlain broke. He opposed that assault and voted against it. Hence the necessity for his recapture. McConnell says that Chamberlain told him Clayton had not treated him right, and if Clayton expected his support he must pay for it.

McConnell says Clayton told him just before his second election that Johnson was going to be impeached, and he felt sure of success, and asked witness to assist. Witness saw J. P. Grady, representative, and reported to Clayton that he thought Grady was "bullheaded," meaning stubborn. Clayton said, "Tell Grady he can have the sheriff's office, or anything reasonable"; that he must have his vote. Mr. Grady voted against the previous question when it was ordered on the motion to impeach Johnson (house journal, 231). But he afterward voted for Clayton at his second election, and received the appointment of sheriff. The same witness says that Clayton told him, in the presence of Mills, district attorney, that Scales's (Democrat) vote could be got by giving him the patronage of his county.

To show that these appointments were all agreed upon before the Senatorial election, I will state that McLane testifies he was informed before the election by Tankersley that he (Tankersley) would be appointed superintendent of the penitentiary; by Sarber, that Mallory would be appointed commissioner, and that Neal would get his railroad aid and county bills, and that Waters would be appointed judge of the criminal court.

Thus it will be seen that five members of the legislature, to wit, Scales, a Democrat; Chamberlain, a Conservative, who ran on the ticket in Pulaski County, which was supported by the Democrats; Steele, who was considered doubtful as to his vote; Grady, who had refused to vote for Clayton's measure impeaching Johnson, and White, a rival candidate for the United States Senate, are shown by direct testimony to have given their votes for Clayton as Senator at the election under which he now holds his seat, under promise of a valuable consideration, which they afterward received, while the opposition of Neal, a Democrat, was overcome by some magic influence, supposed to be a grant of State aid to his road by Governor Clayton. Clayton's majority on that election was five; the men whose names are given above, excluding Neal, were five in number, and all voted for Clayton.

There is another very important fact, to which I now call attention. It is that even the majority he received would have been overcome had the delegation from the Hot Springs district and Pulaski and White Counties been allowed to take their seats. They were undoubtedly excluded by the iron hand of Clayton, and to prevent their opposition to his election. He had but one purpose, as shown by the evidence, to accomplish through the aid of that body, and that was to come to the Senate. Everything was subsidized and subordinated to that end.

McConnell says that Clayton told him, when he took Haymaker to see Clayton about his (H.'s) levee bill, that there were four levee bills before the legislature; that they were good to use for political purposes; that he would keep out of the fight for a while, and then favor the bill best suited for political purposes.

Various witnesses testify that many of Clayton's friends and supporters, in the legislature and outside of it, were interested in these bills and several railroad bills. Neal was interested in a railroad; so was Sarber; so was Judge Bowen. Judge Bennett was interested to the extent of a fee of $70,000. And all these were looking to the governor for State aid and his influence.

By the returns in the secretary's office the delegation from Pulaski and White, opposed to Clayton, were elected. But White, the secretary, sent in the roll of members-elect with the names of Clayton's supporters from those two counties upon it. Among those opposed to him and left off the roll were Hodges and Brooks. We have seen that Brooks told Clayton in that remarkable interview that he knew that Brooks and Hodges were opposed to his election, and that he told him further he knew the delegation from Hot Springs district, three in number, were also opposed to him, and that he (Clayton) had originated the Mallory or star-chamber committee, for the express purpose of keeping these opposition candidates out of the legislature; that Clayton did not deny the charge that he raised the committee, but simply stated it was raised to countervail their opposition to his getting his seat at Washington. We further know the proposition that Clayton then made, that he would consent to admit those two delegations in order to remove all obstacles to his election. That he prevented their being seated to secure his election is shown by the following facts: The Hot Springs delegation, after being kept out of their seat through the report of the Mallory committee from the 2d day of January until after Clayton's election on the 15th of March, were finally received into the house. Brooks, of the Pulaski delegation, the most powerful opponent, intellectually and morally, that Clayton had, was kept out until after the first election, was after the election declared by the committee unanimously to be entitled to his seat, was, without notice or hearing before the second election, on the report of the committee on privileges and elections, ejected from the senate, and Riley, his Democratic opponent, seated, while Hodges and the other candidates for the house from the Pulaski disrtict were never permitted to take their seats. The complexion of the delegation from Pulaski and White, who were seated, is somewhat motley, not to say significant. They were C. A. Whittemore, a Democrat; Robert A. Howard, Democrat; E. H. Chamberlain, Democrat or Conservative; J. W. House, Democrat; and Pilkington and Goad, Republicans. The seats of Goad and Pilkington were contested by Gantt and Mitchell, Democrats, who, it will be remembered, withdrew to insure the certificate of election to Edwards. Goad and Pilkington voted for Clayton.

There are many other facts which illustrate this contest for power and place, but having already extended this review further than I expected, I will refer to but few more.

At the organization of the legislature an armed force took possession of the State-house, and no one was allowed to enter the house or senate except those who held certificates of election. Tankersley entered, as several witnesses say, almost on a run, and took his seat in the speaker's chair before he was nominated. The two houses were organized on the roll furnished by the secretary of state, who, it will be remembered, excluded from the list of members-elect some who, by the returns in his office, had a majority, but who were opposed to Clayton's election. When the articles of impeachment were about to be presented against Clayton, or had been preferred, his attached friends, members of the legislature, and some outside, formed a military company for the purpose of offering resistance. Clayton ordered arms from the arsenal at Little Rock sufficient to arm from one hundred to one hundred and fifty men, and these arms were placed in the executive office ready for use. Even his own witnesses testify that Johnson, who was then considered the head of the opposition, was a very peaceable man, and that they saw no demonstrations of force on the part of either Johnson or any of his friends. One witness, Brooks, says that this armed power had a very discouraging influence on the members who had been appointed to conduct the impeachment. Clayton and his friends, as a pretext for this, threatened bloodshed, saying that they feared Johnson and his friends would endeavor to depose the governor from office in advance of a compliance with the laws of the State, but no witness testifies to any act which showed such an intention.

However much we may differ on the demurrer to these facts, on a calm survey of this whole testimony there is one conclusion as to which, I think, all men will agree. It is that Senator Clayton is responsible for all the acts of that legislature, through its committees and otherwise, which were done to promote his election. He was the doer of many of them, and all the others were done by those who either stood in the most intimate personal relations to him, and were in almost daily conference with him, or others who were bending every energy to accomplish his one purpose. Bowen was the omnipresent and ever present, his mentor and monitor, his man Friday, his very shadow. Hadley was his creature, was made governor by him, and obeyed his mandates to the letter, as shown by the appointments Hadley made. Storey said that when he applied to have the public printing restored to him Hadley answered that he could not do so until he consulted Senator Clayton, then in Washington.

Judge Bennett, appointed by Clayton circuit judge a month after his admission to the bar for his zeal and labor in this contest, was promoted during that legislature to the supreme bench by the same benefactor. He of course was subservient. Judge McClure, the recipient of a like favor, was alike devoted. Judge Searle, who withdrew in the Congressional race, received like honors. Tankersley, whom one witness calls Clayton's candidate for speaker, devoted to the end, was rewarded by being assigned through mistake to a place over the penitentiary. And so with many others: Who can doubt that their acts and sayings were Clayton's own so far as they related to his election? Who can doubt, not only from these circumstances, but from the positive evidence in this case, that the five votes of Scales, Chamberlain, White, Grady, and Steele were procured directly by Governor Clayton for a valuable consideration? Who can doubt that he is directly responsible for the exclusion of those members, ten in number, whose votes were pledged against him, and who, if admitted, would have defeated his election?

Is not the conclusion irresistible that the appointment of those members of the legislature to office by Hadley was the act of Clayton himself? And, going one step further, who does not believe, considering the history of this transaction and the extraordinary fact that nearly one-half of the members who voted for Clayton were, during the session of that legislature and soon after his election, appointed, some to the most honorable and some to the most lucrative offices within the executive patronage, that these appointments were the price of their votes?

Recurring now to the transaction with R. J. T. White, is there any room left for doubt that White sold out and that Clayton bought him? Hadley made the arrangement, Clayton recognized it by a simple word or wink from White, and then Clayton paid the price in the very amount of money and of bonds, and the very class of bonds (first-mortgage Ouachita and Red River Railroad), which Hadley told White would be paid. And Clayton by the use of this money secured the votes of his own party friends, three or four of whom on this investigation have sworn they would not have voted for him unless he had removed Johnson. Johnson was removed by removing White. If this be true, then it is clear that Clayton obtained his election solely through the power of money. If he had removed Johnson by the quo warranto on the judgment of a competent court there would have been nothing corrupt in it, or if the impeachment had resulted in deposing him after a fair trial it might have been considered very sharp but not corrupt practice. But when these failed, and he had no other means left by which to obtain a seat in the United States Senate, except the power and influence of gold, used and applied as it was, I cannot regard that means as other than corrupt. The circumstances of the bargain show that he and White were of the same opinion. Clayton's emissary approached White at a late hour of night after White had gone to bed—made the proposition. The interview was "short, sharp, and decisive." White said he would consider. When he and Clayton met on the street Clayton referred to the subject and passed on. When they met in New York after the election White renewed the subject with a single remark; Clayton signified his obligation, and when Clayton inclosed the money and bonds, instead of sending his own draft (which would have an ear-mark) he sent a certificate, reading that Jackson E. Sickles had deposited to White's credit in a New York bank $5,000.

Taking a retrospective glance over the field of this contest, brought on by ambition, made fierce by party strife, and ending in shame, what a sad spectacle do we behold! Clayton's plan of battle was laid while his enemies slept, and long before the day of action. Through executive power he commanded the situation, held it, and won, but with irreparable loss. We see executive power cruelly brought to bear on Storey, party ties subrogated, friend and foe falling without discrimination. We see legislators obeying his beck, and crushing Brooks and others at his nod. We see the representatives of the people seated and unseated at his pleasure. And all these to put him in the Senate! We see registrars appointed and protected by him when charged with fraud. We see overtures to his enemies to join hands and wage war on his friends. We see friends and foes, Democrats and Republicans, following his banner, each confident he was their leader, and each, like the irate knights, seeing a different color on either side the shield. We see an inoffensive citizen, honored by his people with the next highest State office in their gift (and given simultaneously with the highest, which they conferred on Clayton), assailed without cause, by quo warranto, to gratify ambition. We see a plain law—so plain that he who runs may read—violated, and a certificate of election issued, under a bargain made for his own promotion, to one not entitled to it. We afterward see this Democratic favorite ejected from his seat in Congress, obtained on that certificate, and his opponent, a Republican, seated by a rebuking majority vote. To furnish an apology for this act we see him raise a packed committee to investigate alleged frauds, and "to report in favor of Edwards." We see the certificate of election withheld for more than two months after it should have been issued, and more than one month after the report of that committee. This ambition still foiled, we see it turn again on Johnson with ferocity increased by disappointment, and attack not only Johnson's position but his honor. Here we see the mercenaries of this leader of two opposing parties discover the reverse side of his banner and desert. A few of their opponents desert and join them and turn upon their former leader. To escape defeat he withdraws his adherents to the headquarters of his first-lieutenant, Bowen, where they are quartered for six days. Strategy meantime is active. One of the opposing leaders, Neal, is captured—joins the enemy—carries a few followers, and the combined forces return, and Neal reports against impeachment. Still ambition is not sated. Still foiled by its foe, Johnson, it curbs passion, abandons the open field, and, encouraged by its success with Neal, again resorts to strategy. An armistice ensues, and Johnson is invited to a counsel. We there see this ambition tender gold to White and office to Johnson, and its hitherto unconquerable foe surrenders. Though the opposing chief surrendered, his followers did not, and victory was not assured. The stragglers, who had sworn they would not advance under Clayton against the opposing forces until their commander, Johnson, had been either killed or captured, hearing of his capture, returned to the ranks. This ambition, still fearing a field engagement, tried again the skill of strategy. Gold and promotion to office were tendered to a few of the enemy; they grounded their arms, joined Clayton, and, thus reenforced, he conquered.

Is it not clear, on a full review of all these facts, that money, or its equivalent, alone gave Clayton his majority of five? Taking the buying of White, by which Johnson was overcome; the votes of the Republicans opposed to his election if Johnson remained lieutenant-governor (three or four of whom testify here that they would not have voted for him except on that condition, and who further swear they did vote for him), and counting those with whom he bargained to give them lucrative offices for their votes, it is demonstrable by figures that he got more than five votes (his majority) by these two means.

The only remaining question, granting the facts, is, what is the law? On this head I shall be brief. I consider it unnecessary to cite precedents or quote authorities; for the single question is, was using money and lucrative offices in that way fraudulent and corrupt? If so, they make the election void, and the Senate may declare the seat vacant. If, in the judgment of the Senate, such conduct was not corrupt and fraudulent, there is no case made out. This I understand to be the generally accepted rule of law in such cases.

I know there are some who go to the extreme of holding that the Senate has no jurisdiction over a Senator for any offense he may have committed prior to the moment of his election, even though the act was bribery in securing his election. And it is founded on the doctrine of State rights. To my mind this rule is not only unsound but repugnant to State rights. For I can conceive of few higher rights the people of a State, who are the sovereign power of that State, have than to be represented by a Senator who is chosen in conformity to law. The legislature are but the agents of the people. They cannot exceed their delegated power. A part of their delegated power is to elect Senators for their principal, the people—the sovereign. An inseparable incident of that power thus delegated is that it shall be exercised fairly and honestly. The law will never imply that even a private agent is authorized to act fraudulently in transacting the business of his principal. His agency ceases the instant he commits the fraud, and he makes himself individually responsible for the act. He not only cannot act fraudulently, and bind thereby his principal, but he cannot bind his principal by a lawful act done extra the scope of his agency. This being true of a private agent, the rule is even more rigid as to public agents, for reasons I need not stop to enumerate. A legislature is a public agent. And while a court cannot inquire whether a statute was passed by a bribed majority, the people—the principal—to be bound by the statute may. For instance, if a charter for a private corporation should be obtained by a bribed majority, the people, through their legislature, may annul the contract by repealing the charter.

To apply this rule to the election of a Senator. He represents the State. He is in no sense the representative of the legislature. He is elected by the legislature as an agent delegated for that purpose. The agent must act strictly within the limits of his delegated power. Fraud lies outside of that power. And when a candidate bribes a sufficient number of the electors to secure his election, he and they knowingly commit a fraud on the people, and by every rule of law any act done through combination of an agent with a third party to defraud the principal is void. And the man thus elected (to use a solecism) was never elected. The election is void and the seat vacant. And when the fact is judicially ascertained by the Senate, it is only necessary to declare by resolution the seat vacant. I say further, that in such case it is the imperative duty of the Senate so to do, and for the reason that no other power can. The legislature of the State cannot. The people in sovereign character cannot. For the Senate alone, under the Constitution, can judge of the election and qualifications of its members. If the election is void, there has been no election and the State is pro tanto unrepresented in the Senate. She is entitled to two members in this body, and it would be the duty of the Senate to say one seat was vacant, that the State might fill it. Here, in my opinion, the power of the Senate to judge of the election of its members necessarily includes the right to go behind the moment and form of an election in order that it may determine whether that election was procured by bribery.

Again, the Senate is expressly clothed with power by the Constitution to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. The "qualifications" of a Senator are prescribed in the Constitution. The "returns" spoken of are the formal evidence of his election. But the power to judge is not confined to "qualifications" and "returns." It extends to the election itself, and in terms is unlimited. Is it without limit, or, in other words, may an election be declared void for any cause for which a majority of the Senate in their discretion may see fit to avoid it? Certainly not. It is not a question of discretion, but of parliamentary and constitutional law. A cause which, according to parliamentary law, consistent with the Constitution, avoids an election, is a sufficient cause. But according to parliamentary law, both in England and the United States, an election may be avoided for bribery. The provision in the Constitution is a transcript of the parliamentary law of the English House of Commons, as it existed when, and long before, the Constitution was adopted. And it is to be observed that the same clause that makes the Senate the judge of the election of a Senator makes the House the judge of the elections of its members. The clause is as follows:

"SEC. V, ART. —. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

The power of the two Houses is, therefore, the same, and no one has ever doubted that the election of a Representative may be set aside for bribery.

I see no reason for a distinction between the electors who choose a member of the House and those who choose a Senator. The members of a legislature, in choosing a Senator, act as a body of electors, just as the people act as a body of electors in choosing a Representative. Either class may be bribed, and the reasons for holding that bribery avoids the election in the one case apply with equal force to the other.

And hence I say that this right, so far from infringing on State rights, is necessary to their protection. In the case supposed, the State would be defrauded by the election of a corrupt man to the Senate without the power to vacate his seat. For with two members of the Senate admitted as her representatives, and one in a seat obtained by bribing her agent, she could not elect a third to take his place without action by the Senate declaring his seat vacant.

My conclusion on the specifications, which, as before stated, I resolved into three distinct charges, is:

First, that while the evidence satisfies me that a combination did exist between Clayton and Edwards, by which, for the support of Democrats, Clayton agreed to issue the certificate to Edwards, and did accordingly so issue it; yet, that not having obtained his seat by the election held on the 11th of January, at which he received these Democratic votes, the act is one not cognizable by the Senate;

Second, that the charge made of procuring his seat by the corrupt use of money in the transaction with White is sustained by the evidence;

And third, that he obtained 5 other votes, which make his majority, and were necessary to his election, by giving to those electors as a consideration for their votes lucrative offices; and that this was as corrupt as if for the same purpose he had paid them money in kind.

TUESDAY, March 11, 1873.

Mr. Wright submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the charges made and referred to the select committee for investigation affecting the official character and conduct of the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained, and that the committee be discharged from their further consideration."

MONDAY, March 24, 1873.

On motion by Mr. Wright that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 11th instant, declaring that the charges against the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained,

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 14.

On motion by Mr. Bayard, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Ames, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stewart, West, Windom, and Wright.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bayard, Casserly, Davis, Fenton, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman.

So the motion was agreed to.

Whereupon, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; and

The resolution having been modified by Mr. Wright, with the consent of the Senate, to read as follows:

"Resolved, That the charges made and referred to a select committee of the Senate at the last Congress for investigation affecting the official character and conduct of the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained,"

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Wright, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

TUESDAY, March 25, 1873.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Wright on the 11th instant, viz:

"Resolved, That the charges made and referred to a select committee of the Senate at the last Congress for investigation affecting the official character and conduct of the Hon. Powell Clayton are not sustained;"

And, on the question to agree thereto,

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 33, nays 6.

On motion by Mr. Davis, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Ames, Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, West, Windom, and Wright.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Cooper, Davis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Merrimon, and Norwood.

So the resolution was agreed to.

[The debate is found on pages 184–192 of the Congressional Record, special session of the Senate, 43d Cong.]

[Third session Forty-second Congress to third session Forty-sixth Congress.]

of Louisiana.

William P. Kellogg, whose term expired March 3, 1873, resigned January 13, 1873. January 22, 1873, credentials of John Ray and William L. McMillen, each claiming to have been elected to fill the unexpired term, were presented, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Ray's credentials were signed by William P. Kellogg as governor, and Mr. McMillen's by John McEnery as governor. January 16, a resolution of the Senate directing the committee to inquire and report whether there was an existing legal State government in Louisiana had been referred to the committee. February 20, the committee submitted one report on the credentials and on the resolution. They reported that the State election held in November, 1872, in which Messrs. Kellogg and McEnery each claimed to have been elected governor, was void for fraud; that the Kellogg government, so called, approached more nearly a government de facto, and the McEnery government a government de jure; that had the election been fairly conducted, Kellogg and a legislature of the same political party would have been elected, but that, while the Kellogg government was in possession of the State-house, there was not a quorum of both houses of the Kellogg legislature who had any pretense of having been elected to their seats; that, under such circumstances, Congress had authority to order a new election. The committee recommended the adoption of resolutions that there was no State government existing at the time in Louisiana, and that neither Ray nor McMillen was entitled to a seat, neither having been elected by the legislature of the State, and recommended the passage of a bill ordering an election in the State. Three members of the committee submitted separate views dissenting from the conclusions of the majority. The bill referred to was rejected February 27, 1873. No further action was taken on the credentials. The expenses incurred by Messrs. Ray and McMillen were reimbursed. The proceedings of the Senate relating to the resolution of January 16 and the bill referred to are not included in the proceedings given below.

The legislature electing Mr. McMillen for the unexpired term ending March 3, 1873, elected him for the succeeding term, and the legislature electing Mr. Ray elected Pinckney B. S. Pinchback for the succeeding term. December 4, 1873, the credentials of both were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. December 15, the committee reported that they were evenly divided upon the question as to whether Mr. Pinchback was upon his credentials entitled to be sworn as a member, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject and to refer the whole matter to the determination of the Senate. On the same day a resolution was submitted that the credentials of Mr. Pinchback being in due form he was entitled to be sworn as a member, and that any grounds of contest should be made thereafter. January 26, 1874, the resolution was modified so that the credentials of Mr. Pinchback be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the committee be instructed to inquire into the conduct of Mr. Pinchback in connection with his election. January 27, it was ordered that the credentials of Mr. McMillen be referred to the committee. The Senate debated the resolution of January 26, but no further action was taken during the session. December 23, 1874, a resolution was submitted that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to report if Mr. Pinchback was entitled to be admitted on a prima facie case, or if such admission should be postponed until after the investigation of the charges of corruption. January 22, 1875, credentials of a second election of Mr. Pinchback, signed by Mr. Kellogg as governor, were presented. They were referred the same day, together with all the papers in relation to the contested seat, to the committee. (All subsequent action by the Senate was on Mr. Pinchback's first credentials.) February 8, the committee reported that Mr. Pinchback had a prima facie title to admission, and recommended the adoption of a resolution that he be admitted. There was a minority report. The Senate debated the resolution for some days, when it was ordered to lie on the table. March 5, the same resolution was submitted and debated. December 15, 1875, the Senate resolved "that the request of W. L. McMillen, heretofore claiming a seat in the Senate, for the return of his credentials be granted." December 20, the credentials of Robert H. Marr, appointed by John McEnery as governor, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. McMillen, were presented and ordered to lie on the table. January 18, 1876, the papers purporting to be the credentials of James B. Eustis, elected by the legislature of Louisiana to the contested seat, were presented and ordered to lie on the table. January 24, they were referred to the committee. January 28, the committee reported that Mr. Pinchback having been elected to that seat, there was no vacancy, and recommended that the papers relating to Mr. Eustis be laid on the table. February 3, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution of March 5, 1875, and March 8, the resolution having been amended by inserting the word "not" before the word "admitted," the Senate resolved that Mr. Pinchback be not admitted. March 9, 1877, the Senate resolved that the credentials of Mr. Eustis be taken from the files and referred to the committee. December 1, the committee reported that the legislature electing Mr. Eustis, made up according to what was known as the "Wheeler compromise," was the lawful legislature; that a vacancy existed at the time of his election; and that the committee felt bound to regard the vote of the Senate on Mr. Pinchback's claim as final adjudication. They reported a resolution that Mr. Eustis be admitted. December 10, the resolution was agreed to, and Mr. Eustis took the seat which had been vacant since the resignation of Mr. Kellogg, January 13, 1873. Mr. Pinchback was allowed compensation from the beginning of the term to the period of the determination of the contest.

From the existence of two rival bodies, each claiming to be the legislature of Louisiana, arose another contest for the seat for the term beginning March 4, 1877. Mr. Kellogg's credentials were presented January 20, 1877. Objection having been made to the oaths being administered to him March 5, the Senate resolved, March 7, that the credentials lie on the table, to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed. October 17, the credentials of Henry M. Spofford were presented. October 18, the Senate resolved that the credentials of Mr. Spofford be referred to the committee, and that the committee also report on the credentials of Mr. Kellogg. November 26, the committee reported that Mr. Kellogg's credentials were signed by Stephen B. Packard as governor, and that he had been elected January 10, 1877, by what was known as the Packard legislature; that Mr.

Spofford's credentials were signed by Francis T. Nicholls as governor, and that he had been chosen April 24, 1877, by what was known as the Nicholls legislature; that the committee had gone behind the certificates of the returning officers of the State, and had investigated the elections of individual members of the general assembly; that they found that the returning officers in throwing out certain polls where freedom of election was utterly destroyed, and declaring Republican candidates elected, did what they believed to be legal, and what was really equitable; that a sufficient number of the members by whose votes Mr. Kellogg was elected were lawfully and equitably entitled to their seats; that afterwards the Nicholls legislature by illegal means came to contain an undisputed majority of members lawfully elected to the general assembly, but that until and after the election of Mr. Kellogg the Packard legislature was de facto and de jure the government of Louisiana; that upon that legislature devolved the duty of electing a Senator; that the duty was performed in the election of Mr. Kellogg; that no subsequent events, especially successful revolution, could undo what had been lawfully done. The committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions: "Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath. Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States." There was a minority report. November 30, the resolutions were agreed to, and Mr. Kellogg took the seat. March 21, 1879, a memorial of Mr. Spofford was presented, praying for an investigation into his claim to a seat, which was referred to a committee. May 7, the Senate resolved that the committee be authorized to make a full investigation into the subject. March 22, 1880, the committee reported that the evidence taken showed that the Packard legislature was, in fact as well as in law, not a legislature, but a body of men assembled by fraud, held together by force, and controlled by bribery, with the aid and in the interest of the sitting member. The committee reported the testimony taken and recommended the adoption of resolutions that Mr. Kellogg was not entitled to the seat in the Senate, and that Mr. Spofford was chosen by the legislature, and that he be admitted to the seat. A minority report claimed that the resolutions of November 30, 1877, were binding as final decisions by the Senate; that a change in the party majority in the Senate was the only change that had taken place since Mr. Kellogg took his seat in pursuance of a resolution of November 30, 1877. The resolutions reported by the committee were debated, but no further action was taken by the Senate. December 7, 1880, credentials of Thomas C. Manning, appointed by the governor in place of Mr. Spofford, who died August 20, 1880, were presented and referred to the committee. No further action was taken on the credentials. Compensation from March 4, 1877, to August 20, 1880, were allowed to the representatives of the estate of Mr. Spofford. The expenses incurred by Messrs. Kellogg and Manning were reimbursed.

The history of the cases here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to them from Senate Journals, 3d sess. 42d Cong. to 1st sess. 47th Cong., and the reports of the committee (except the testimony).

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below, and references to the reports are given in foot-notes.

RAY vs. McMILLEN.

Contest for seat for unexpired term ending March 3, 1873.

WEDNESDAY, January 22, 1873.

Mr. West presented the credentials of W. L. McMillen, elected a Senator by the legislature of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. West presented the credentials of John Ray, elected a Senator by the legislature of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, February 20, 1873.

Mr. Carpenter, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were directed by a resolution* of the Senate of January 16, 1873, to "inquire and report to the Senate whether there is an existing legal State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it is constituted," and to whom were referred the credentials of W. L. McMillen and John Ray, claiming seats in the Senate in the place of W. P. Kellogg, resigned, submitted a report (No. 457), accompanied by a bill† (S. 1621) to establish a government in the State of Louisiana, republican in form; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. Morton, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Trumbull, members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, each submitted views dissenting from the conclusions arrived at by the committee, which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report (No. 457).

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 20, 1873.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Carpenter submitted the following report to accompany bill S. 1621:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred Senate resolution of January 16, 1873, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire

*The resolution here given is the one on which this report was made. The one given by an error in the Senate Journal (resolution of January 7, 1873) was reported February 10 (No. 417).

and report to the Senate whether there is any existing State government in Louisiana and how and by whom it is constituted,"

And to which committee were also referred the credentials of John Ray and W. L. McMillen, both claiming the seat supposed to have been made vacant by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg, a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana, respectfully submit the following report:

Your committee have devoted weeks to the investigation of the subjects referred to them, and have taken much record and oral testimony, which accompanies this report.

On the 15th of January, 1873, John McEnery certifies, under what purports to be the great seal of the State of Louisiana, that he is governor of said State; and that on the 14th day of January, 1873, W. L. McMillen was by the legislature of said State duly elected a Senator of the United States to fill the unexpired term of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg. On the same day, January 15, 1873, William Pitt Kellogg certifies, under what purports to be the great seal of said State, that he is the governor of said State, and that John Ray was duly elected by the legislature of said State on the 15th day of January, 1873, to fill said unexpired term of said Kellogg in the Senate of the United States.

The certificate of said John McEnery is countersigned by Y. A. Woodward, assistant secretary of state; and the certificate of said Kellogg is countersigned by P. G. Deslondes, secretary of state.

The Senate must therefore determine whether either McMillen or Ray, and, if either, which, is entitled to said seat.

The extraordinary fact that two men are claiming to be the governor of said State, and that two men are certified under the great seal of the State to have been elected to one and the same seat in the Senate, and the resolution of the Senate requiring your committee to inquire and report whether there is any existing State government in Louisiana and how and by whom it is constituted, have compelled your committee to inquire fully into the condition of things in that State; and the conclusions to which your committee have arrived are now to be stated:

On the 4th day of November last, Henry C. Warmoth was governor of said State, having been elected in 1868. On that day a general election for governor and other State officers, and one-half of the senate and all the members of the house of representatives of said State, ought to have been holden.

The constitution of said State, art. 46, provides as follows:

"Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state."

The constitution, Title III, executive department, art. 48, provides as follows:

"The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the State of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the lieutenant-governor elected for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant-governor at the time and place for voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case of a tie-vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant-governor shall be lieutenant-governor; but in case of a tie-vote between two or more candidates one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant-governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly."

Article 60 provides as follows:

"He (the governor) shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, and whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for: Provided, however, That the general assembly shall have a right to prescribe the mode of appointment to all other offices established by law."

These are provisions of the constitution with which the reconstructed State of Louisiana was admitted into the Union.

On the 16th of March, 1870, the legislature of that State pretended to pass a law regulating elections, which among other things provided as follows:

"SEC. 29. Be it further enacted, &c., That in any parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, in which during the time of registration or revision of registration or on any day of election, there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any place within said parish, or at or near any poll or voting place, or place of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences shall prevent, or tend to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, it shall be the duty of the commissioner of election, if such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences occur on the day of election, or of the supervisor of registration, or any assistant supervisor of registration of the parish, if they occur during the time of registration or revision of registration, to make in duplicate and under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto, and of the effect produced by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, in preventing a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration or election, and of the number of qualified electors deterred by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, from registering or voting, which statement shall also be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish.

"When such statement is made by a commissioner of election or assistant supervisor of registration he shall forward both copies to the supervisor of registration immediately on the close of the election. The supervisor of registration shall forward one copy of all such statements, whether made by himself or a commissioner of election or by an assistant supervisor of registration, to the governor, and shall deposit one copy with the clerk of the district court of the parish.

"SEC. 53. Be it further enacted, &c., That immediately upon the close of the polls on the day of election the commissioners of election at each poll or voting place shall seal the ballot-box by pasting slips of paper over the keyhole and the opening in the top thereof, and fastening the same with sealing-wax, on which they shall impress a seal, and they shall write the names of the commissioners on the said slips of paper; they shall forthwith convey the ballot-box so sealed to the office of, and deliver said ballot-box to, the supervisor of registration for the parish, who shall keep his office open for that purpose from the hour of the close of the election until all the votes from the several polls or voting places of the precinct shall have been received and counted. The supervisor of registration shall immediately upon the receipt of said ballot-box note its condition and the state of the seals and fastenings thereof, and shall then, in the presence of the commissioners of election and three citizens, freeholders of the parish for such poll or voting place, open the ballot-box and count the ballots therein, and make a list of all the names of the persons and offices voted for, the number of votes for each person, the number of ballots in the box, and the number of ballots rejected, and the reason therefor. Said statements shall be made in triplicate, and each copy thereof shall be signed and sworn to by the commissioners of election of the poll and by the supervisor of registration. As soon as the supervisor of registration shall have made the statement above provided for, for each poll in his precinct or parish, and it shall have been sworn to and subscribed as above directed, the supervisor of registration shall inclose in an envelope of strong paper or cloth, securely sealed, one copy of such statement from each poll and one copy of the list of persons voting at each poll, and one copy of any statements as to violence or disturbance, bribery or corruption, or other offenses specified in section 29 of this act, if any there be, together with all memoranda and tally-lists used in making the count and statement of the votes, and shall send such package by mail, properly and plainly addressed, to the governor of the State. The supervisor of registration shall send a second copy of said statement to the governor of the State by the next most safe and speedy mode of conveyance, and shall retain the third copy in his own possession.

"SEC. 54. Be it further enacted, &c., That the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum and have power to make the returns of all elections. In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers. The returning officers shall, after each election, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe to the following oath before a judge of the supreme or any district court:

"'I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and diligently perform the duties of a returning officer as prescribed by law; that I will carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election: So help me God.'

"Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the supervisors of registration, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been completed. The governor shall at such meeting open in the presence of the said returning officers the statements of the supervisors of registration, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate. One copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. The returns of the elections thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers until set aside, after a contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected.

"The governor shall within thirty days thereafter issue commissions to all officers thus declared elected who are required by law to be commissioned.

"SEC. 55. Be it further enacted, &c., That in such canvass and compilation the returning officers shall observe the following order: They shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable registration and election. Whenever from any poll or voting place there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration, assistant supervisor of registration, or commissioner of election, in form as required by section 29 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable and full vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statement of votes from such poll or voting place until the statements from all other polls or voting places shall have been canvassed and compiled. The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any such poll or voting place, and if from the evidence of such statements they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did not prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting place with those previously canvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers. If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting, to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting place, but shall exclude it from their returns. The returning officers may appoint such clerks as may be necessary, for a length of time not to exceed thirty days, who shall be paid $5 per day each for the time actually served, which time shall be specified in a written account, subscribed and sworn to by such clerk, and approved by the returning officers. The auditor of public accounts shall issue his warrant upon the treasury for the amount of such account so subscribed and sworn to and approved.

"SEC 56. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last general assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the general assembly; and it shall be the duty of said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect, so furnished, upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.

"SEC. 57. Be it further enacted, &c., That should any of the returning officers named in this act be a candidate for any office at any election, he shall be disqualified to act as returning officer for that election, and a majority of the remaining returning officers shall summon some respectable citizen to act as returning officer in place of the one so disqualified."

This act is in conflict with the constitution in several particulars. First, the constitution provides that the return of the election of all members of the legislature shall be made to the secretary of state. (See art. 46.) And article 48 provides that the returns of every election for governor and lieutenant-governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives then next to be holden, and that the members of the general assembly—that is, both houses of the legislature—shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor.

The act provides that the returns shall be made to the governor, and that the governor, the lieutentant-governor, the secretary of state, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them, shall be returning officers for all elections in the State; that they shall examine, canvass, and count the votes, and determine who has been elected governor and to other State offices, and who members of the legislature. The act provides for a totally different machinery from that provided by the constitution for the safe-keeping, examination, and count of the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor. The act, in so far as it provides that Lynch and Anderson shall be members of said canvassing board, is in conflict with the provision of the constitution in relation to appointments to office.

Under these provisions of the constitution and laws of the State, a general election was held in the State on the 4th day of November, 1872, for governor and other State officers, and members of the legislature. At this election McEnery and Kellogg were candidates for governor, and Dibble, who was then judge of the eighth district court of New Orleans, and Elmore were candidates for the office of judge of said court.

The election was in fact conducted, and returns thereof made, in pretended pursuance of the election law above quoted from. Governor Warmoth held in his own hands the entire machinery of the election. He appointed the registrars and they appointed the commissioners of election, and the returns from the parishes were made to him, as the law required, and not to the secretary of state, as required by the constitution.

On the 13th of November, 1872, there was a meeting of the returning or canvassing board. Present: Warmoth, governor; Pinchback, lieutenant-governor; Herron, secretary of state, and Lynch, Anderson being absent. At this meeting Governor Warmoth was elected chairman of the board, Lynch was elected secretary, and the board adjourned to November 14, 12 m.

It seems that Governor Warmoth had become satisfied that the board, as constituted, would not do his bidding or execute his schemes, and he resolved to reconstruct it.

This makes it necessary to consider the imbroglio which then existed in regard to the secretary of state. At the election in 1868, at which Warmoth was elected governor, Bovee was elected secretary of state. In August, 1871, upon pretense of some malfeasance by Bovee, Warmoth issued a so-called "executive order," suspending Bovee as secretary of state, and appointing Herron in his place. This "executive order," so far as your committee can ascertain, had no warrant in the constitution or laws of the State, but was an act of usurpation. But Bovee commenced suit against Herron in the eighth district court of New Orleans, under the "intrusion act," and in that court, Emerson, judge, presiding, it was declared that the governor had authority to suspend Bovee; that such suspension created a vacancy in the office, which the governor could fill by commission, to extend until the close of the next session of the legislature. Bovee attempted to appeal from this decision, but the supreme court dimissed the appeal for the reason that it had not been taken in time. This left the decision of the court below in full force, and it has never been set aside or reversed.

The legislature next met in January, 1872, when Governor Warmoth presented to the house of representatives charges against Bovee, and the house appointed a committee to investigate these charges, with a view to his impeachment. This investigation lasted for some time, and, finally, near the close of the session, on the application of Bovee, was continued to the next session of the legislature, upon the condition that Bovee should remain suspended until the next session.

In March, 1872, after the adjournment of the legislature, Bovee brought a second suit against Herron in the eighth district court of New Orleans, and this court decided, Dibble, J., presiding, that Bovee was entitled to the office, upon the ground that, conceding his original removal and the appointment of Herron in his place to have been legal, yet the commission of Herron expired with the session of the legislature next after the removal of Bovee and appointment of Herron. This decison was appealed from to the supreme court, and affirmed about the 2d day of December, 1872.

In the mean time, on the 14th of November, 1872, at 10 a. m., Governor Warmoth had appointed Wharton in place of Herron, who up to that time had been secretary of state de facto; and the governor defends this upon two grounds: first, that Herron's commission expired with the adjournment of the legislature, leaving the office vacant, and that by the constitution the governor is authorized to fill all vacancies happening during the vacation of the legislature; and, second, that Herron was a defaulter in a former office, and by a provision in an amendment to the constitution was ineligible to any office while thus in default. Wharton, under his appointment, obtained possession of the the office and held it, performing its duties down to the time when the supreme court—about December 2, 1872—decided, in Bovee's second suit, that he (Bovee) was entitled to the office.

Governor Warmoth, apparently apprehending that this decision of the supreme court, on being certified to the eighth district court of New Orleans, would be executed by the installation of Bovee in the office of secretary of state, issued a commission to Elmore as judge of said court, upon the ground that Elmore had been elected at the election of November 4, 1872, in place of Dibble, and seated him by force on the bench to the exclusion of Dibble, although no canvass had been made of the votes given at said election for the office of judge of said court; and when the mandate went down from the supreme court in the suit in which that court had decided that Bovee was legally secretary of state, Judge Elmore refused to execute the mandate and issue the proper writ to put Bovee in possession of the office. Thereupon the supreme court adjudged Elmore to be in contempt, and sentenced him to a fine of $50, and imprisonment for ten days, which fine and imprisonment Governor Warmoth remitted by pardon. No writ in favor of Bovee was issued before the troops of the United States took possession of the State-house, as hereinafter stated, about the 6th of December, 1872, when Wharton was excluded from, and Bovee admitted to, the exercise of the office.

Let us now return to the narrative of events following the last November election. We have seen that the first meeting of the board of canvassers, or returning officers, as styled by the law, was held November 13, 1872, and adjourned to November 14, at 12 noon. Before the adjourned meeting of the board, to wit, November 14, 10 a. m., Governor Warmoth removed Herron and appointed Wharton in his place, who qualified both as secretary of state and a member of the canvassing board; and at 12 noon on that day, the hour to which said board stood adjourned, Warmoth, governor, Herron, secretary of state, Pinchback, lieutenant-governor, and Lynch appeared in said board. Pinchback and Anderson, having been candidates at the last November election, were disqualified to serve on said board. Wharton at this time appeared and presented his commission as secretary of state, and claimed a seat in the board in place of Herron. How these two vacancies were filled is disputed in the testimony. Governor Warmoth, Wharton, Cooley, Bragdon, Sheridan, and others swear that Hatch and Da Ponte were elected in the place of Pinchback and Anderson; while on the other hand it is testified by Lynch and Herron that Longstreet and Hawkins were elected to fill these vacancies. This difference gave rise to two boards: First, Warmoth, governor, Wharton as secretary of state, Hatch, and Da Ponte, claiming to be a majority of the board, admitting that Lynch was entitled to a seat, from which, however, he absented himself. Second, Herron, claiming still to be secretary of state, notwithstanding Wharton's appointment; Longstreet and Hawkins, claiming to have been elected to fill the vacancies of Pinchback and Anderson; this board admitting that Governor Warmoth was one of its members, but he absenting himself from its sessions. These boards, for convenience of designation, will hereafter be called the Warmoth board and the Lynch board.

Each of these boards appealed to the court. The Lynch board, about November 18, 1872, commenced suit against the Warmoth board in the eighth district court of New Orleans, Dibble, J., presiding. About the same time the Warmoth board commenced suit against the Lynch board in the same court, and before the same judge. Dibble granted an injunction in both cases, enjoining both boards. In connection with this extraordinary proceeding of injunction against injunction, it should be borne in mind that Dibble was a judge holding over until his successor should be commissioned, and was therefore directly interested in restraining any canvass of votes which must determine that his opponent (Elmore) was duly elected and entitled to his (Dibble's) seat; and that he would continue in office as long as the injunctions granted by him should prevent a legal determination that his opponent (Elmore) had been elected in his place. That Elmore had, in fact, been elected over Dibble, two to one, is admitted by all parties in this controversy.

About the 19th of November Dibble decided the suit commenced by the Lynch board in their favor, and enjoined the Warmoth board, and on the same day dismissed the suit in favor of the Warmoth board against the Lynch board.

Thereupon Governor Warmoth took from his safe a bill which had been passed by the legislature in the previous spring, but never approved by him so as to become a law, and on the 20th of November, 1872, gave it his approval.

This act, approved November 20, 1872, among other things, provides as follows:

"SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, and have power to make the returns of all elections. In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise, by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers. The returning officers shall, after each election, before entering on their duties, take and subscribe to the following oath before a judge of the supreme or any district court:

"'I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and diligently perform the duties of a returning officer as prescribed by law; that I will carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election: So help me God.'

"Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statement of votes made by the commissioners of election, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been compiled. The presiding officer shall, at such meeting, open, in the presence of said returning officers, the statements of the commissioners of election, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate; one copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation, by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. The return of the election thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers, until set aside after contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected. The governor shall, within thirty days thereafter, issue commissions to all officers thus declared elected who are required by law to be commissioned."

And further, as follows:

"SEC. 71. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall take effect from and after its passage, and that all others on the subject of election laws be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Governor Warmoth claimed that the effect of this act was to abolish all previously existing canvassing or returning boards; and that inasmuch as the act took effect during the vacation of the legislature he was authorized to appoint the board under that provision of the constitution before quoted, which authorizes the governor to fill vacancies occurring during such vacation.

On the same day upon which the governor approved the last-named act he issued a proclamation calling a session of the legislature to convene on the 9th day of December, 1872. It is admitted on all hands that the members of the legislature elected November 4, 1872, if any were elected, were authorized to convene under this proclamation.

On the 21st of November motion was made before Judge Dibble for a new trial in the suit of the Lynch board against the Warmoth board, in which the judge had decided in favor of the Lynch board, enjoining the Warmoth board, and in the suit in favor of the Warmoth board against the Lynch board, which that judge had dismissed; and these motions were set down for hearing before Judge Dibble on the 25th of November. Before this day arrived Governor Warmoth pretended to be convinced that Elmore had been elected in place of Dibble; commissioned Elmore, who, supported by the sheriff and a posse comitatus of roughs and thugs, took his place on the bench and excluded Dibble. It should be stated, however, in this connection that although no legal canvass had been made ascertaining the fact that Elmore was elected, nevertheless it is admitted by all parties that he was in fact elected by about 9,000 majority.

On the 3d of December, Elmore, who had been commissioned as aforesaid, and was seated on the bench substantially by force, granted the motion for new trial in both cases upon the ground that the act approved November 20 had abolished all former boards; and he dissolved the injunction granted against the Warmoth board and dismissed both suits.

Governor Warmoth having thus by the judgment of a judge by him prematurely commissioned rid himself of the embarrassment arising from the two boards of canvassers pretending to act, on the evening of the 3d of December proceeded to fill the board provided for by the act of November 20 by appointing De Feriet, Wiltz, Isabel, Austin, and Taylor in pretended pursuance of the authority conferred upon him by article 61 of the constitution, to fill vacancies happening in the vacation of the legislature.

We now come to the saddest chapter in this melancholy business—the interference of Federal authority with the affairs of the State of Louisiana.

The fifteenth amendment of the Constitution provides as follows:

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The subject of suffrage belongs entirely to the States and must be regulated by them exclusively, with the single exception created by this amendment, that no State can deny to a citizen of the United States the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and the extent of the power of Congress over the subject is to see to it that the States do not violate this provision. Congress has the undoubted power to enact such laws as are necessary and proper to secure to the colored citizen his right to vote upon the same terms and conditions and with the same effect as the right is enjoyed and exercised by white citizens; and, speaking of the case before us, this is the extent of jurisdiction possessed by the National Government in regard to State elections.

The act of Congress of May 31, 1870 (16 Stat. at Large, 140), provides as follows:

"SECTION 1. That all citizens of the United States who are or shall be otherwise qualified by law to vote at any election by the people in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be entitled and allowed to vote at all such elections without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, any constitution, law, custom, usage, or regulation of any State or Territory, or by or under its authority, to the contrary notwithstanding."

The second section provides for registration under the laws of the State without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and section 3 provides that where any act is required by any State law—as registration, for instance—"the offer of any such citizen to perform the act required to be done, as aforesaid, shall, if it fail to be carried into execution by the wrongful act" of the State officer, be deemed and held a performance in law of the act required; and that the person so offering and failing, as aforesaid, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner as if he had in fact performed such act.

Section 23 is as follows:

"That when any person shall be defeated or deprived of his election to any office, except elector of President or Vice-President, Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State legislature, by reason of the denial to any citizen or citizens who shall offer to vote, of the right to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, his right to hold and enjoy such office and the emoluments thereof shall not be impaired by such denial; and such person may bring any appropriate suit or proceeding to recover possession of such office; and in cases where it shall appear that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of the denial of the right to vote to citizens who so offered to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, such suit or proceeding may be instituted in the circuit or district court of the United States of the circuit or district in which such person resides. And said circuit or district court shall have, concurrently with the State courts, jurisdiction thereof, so far as to determine the rights of the parties to such office by reason of the denial of the right guaranteed by the fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States and secured by this act."

This act was amended by the act of February 28, 1871, 16 Stat. L., 433, section 15, providing as follows:

"That the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States shall extend to all cases in law or equity arising under the provisions of this act or the act hereby amended; and if any person shall receive any injury to his person or property, for or on account of any act by him done under any of the provisions of this act or the act hereby amended, he shall be entitled to maintain suit for damages therefor in the circuit court of the United States in the district wherein the party doing the injury may reside or shall be found."

These acts were passed to give effect to the provisions of the fifteenth amendment and regulate elections for members of Congress; and, so far as they apply to the election of State officers and members of State legislatures, they are confined to the single purpose of securing to all citizens the right to vote without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and an act of Congress attempting to go beyond this would be void for want of authority in Congress to enact it. Therefore, a contest between two citizens of the same State in relation to the office of governor, or other State office, cannot be waged in a Federal court, except upon the ground that the contestant has been defeated or deprived of his election by reason of the denial to any citizen or citizens of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If the contestant has been defeated in consequence of a denial to citizens of the right to vote on account of their belonging to a particular political party, or a particular church, or for any reason, except race, color, or previous condition of servitude, no Federal court has power to hear and determine it.

Keeping this in mind, we come to consider the proceedings in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana.

On the 16th of November, 1872, Kellogg filed his bill on the equity side of said circuit court against the Warmoth board—Warmoth, Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte—and against McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, publishers of the New Orleans Republican, being the official journal of the State, stating that a general election was held on the 4th day of November, 1872, for governor and other State officers; that Kellogg and McEnery were candidates for governor at said election; that Governor Warmoth had the power by law to appoint registrars; and that prior to the election Warmoth had repeatedly avowed his intention to unlawfully defeat the election of Kellogg, and to that end had appointed persons who would aid him in his purpose; and made it a condition of their appointment that they should so aid him, and that one of his plans was to deprive a large number of citizens of the right to vote, by refusing them registration on account of their race, color, and previous condition; that this plan was carried into execution, so that at least 10,000 voters were on that account deprived of registration; that persons so refused registration applied to vote at the election and were denied; that he (Kellogg) was in possession of evidence of this fact; and that he is informed and believes that from three to five thousand persons who had offered to be registered had been denied the right to vote on account of race and color.

That Warmoth, combining with the officers appointed by him, had caused a dishonest and false count of votes cast at said election, and had falsified and caused false returns of the election to be made; that a number of ballots of citizens of color, sufficient to have elected him, had not been counted.

That when the canvassing board met, November 14, 1872, Longstreet and Hawkins were elected by the board to fill the vacancies of Pinchback and Anderson; that Warmoth, being in possession of returns, refused to open and present the same to said board; that Warmoth, without authority, had pretended to eject Herron from the office of secretary of state, and had attempted with force and arms to take possession of the records and archives of that office, and had unlawfully pretended to appoint Wharton secretary of state; and that Wharton pretended to be a member of the board, and that Warmoth and Wharton had pretended to elect Hatch and Da Ponte to fill the vacancies of Pinchback and Anderson, and that Warmoth had unlawfully opened and submitted the returns to this illegal board, and that it was the intention of the board to make a false canvass and declare McEnery elected; that although the canvass by such unlawful board would be void, yet their determination would embarrass him in legal proceedings to obtain said office; and that it was the intention of Warmoth and his board to destroy the returns; and the intention of McEnery and the Warmoth board to have it declared and published in the official paper that he (McEnery) was elected.

That Warmoth had totally disregarded the law in regard to said election; that he had done everything in his power to defeat the will of the people; that he intended to destroy the returns and all evidences of the election, so as to render it impossible for him (Kellogg) ever to establish his right to the office.

The bill prayed an injunction against Warmoth, restraining him from canvassing the returns except in presence of the Lynch board, and commanding him not to deliver the returns to the Warmoth board, and restraining the Warmoth board from acting or making any return or certificate in regard to said election; and restraining McEnery from pretending to act as governor, or asserting any claim to the office, by virtue of any certificate or canvass then made, or thereafter to be made, by the Warmoth board; and restraining the publishers of the official newspaper from publishing any canvass made by the Warmoth board.

The prayer for the relief is as follows:

"And it may also please your honors to order and adjudge that the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, within a period of time to be fixed by your honors, do make and deposit in this honorable court, in the office of the clerk thereof, full, true, and exact sworn copies of each and every paper, document, affidavit, tally-sheet, list, sworn statement, or certificate or letter which he may have received or may have come into his possession from any commissioner or commissioners, or any officer concerned in the control or management of said election, or who had any duties to perform in connection therewith, and from all supervisors or assistant supervisors of election, in any manner relating to said election, in order that the same may be beyond the power of destruction by the said defendant Warmoth and his said confederates, and in order that the same may be saved to your orator as evidence to enable him to establish his right to the office of governor as aforesaid in any judicial proceedings which he may be compelled to institute in this court to establish and vindicate the same.

"And that the same may be also preserved for use or proof in support of your orator's bill in this behalf, and to establish his right to the relief by him herein and hereby prayed for, and that the said evidence, documents, &c., to be produced remain on file in this court in order that the same may be preserved as evidence in any action which your orator may be required to institute in this court to establish his said right to said office."

The bill also contained prayer for process and for general relief.

It is at least questionable whether this bill on its face presented a case within the jurisdiction of the Federal court. Although it is alleged in the former part of the bill that about ten thousand persons had been denied registration on account of race and color, and that from three to five thousand of those thus deprived of registration were denied the right to vote, yet this wrong was completed at the time the bill was filed, and it was not in the power of the court to undo it. In the subsequent part of the bill the pleader appears to ignore the fact of race, color, or previous condition of servitude as an element of jurisdiction.

Again, it can hardly be claimed that Kellogg had been deprived of his office of governor at the time the bill was filed. The bill states, indeed, Kellogg's apprehension that this board would declare McEnery elected, and that such declaration would embarrass him in the enforcement of his legal right to the office.

On the other hand, it may reasonably be claimed that if Warmoth should destroy the returns it would be out of Kellogg's power to establish the fact that he had been defeated because citizens had not been allowed to vote on account of race and color.

Conceding, however, that the bill did present a case within the jurisdiction of the court, that jurisdiction was limited by the scope of the bill, and gave no warrant to the extraordinary proceedings which were subsequently had in the case. The only legitimate purpose of this bill was to preserve testimony, and the subsequent attempt of the court, on a bill in equity, to determine the title of Warmoth, Wharton, and others to act as State canvassers was a matter wholly beyond the jurisdiction of Federal courts. The bill shows that Warmoth, Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte claimed to be members of the board, and were acting as such; and alleges that they were not members of the board, but that Lynch, Herron, Longstreet, Hawkins, and Warmoth were the legal members of said board. What jurisdiction had the Federal court to determine the right between these contending boards? They were State officers, and it is not alleged in the bill that any colored man was deprived of any right which had resulted in the election of Hatch and Da Ponte. Besides, the question of right to this office was entirely collateral in the proceedings. Wharton and Longstreet might have contested their respective rights in the State courts under the "intrusion act" of that State, which corresponds to proceedings by quo warranto at the common law. But it was never before pretended that such a question could be settled by suit in equity.

The utmost which the court had authority to do upon this bill was to restrain the destruction of the returns and documents, to preserve which the bill was filed. They were State records, and the Federal court had no right to take possession of them. The bill did not ask the court to do so, but only to require copies to be filed. But the court issued the following restraining order:

"United States of America, circuit court of the United States, fifth circuit and district of Louisiana, November term, A. D. 1872.

"NEW ORLEANS, Saturday, November 16, 1872.

"Court met pursuant to adjournment. Present, the Hon. E. H. Durell, district judge.

"WILLIAM P. KELLOGG vs. "H. C. WARMOTH ET AL. } No. 6830.

"On motion of J. R. Beckwith, counsel and solicitor for complainant, it is ordered that H. C. Warmoth, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, John McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, publishers of the New Orleans Republican, a newspaper, being the official journal of the State of Louisiana, be enjoined and restrained from in any manner, either directly or indirectly, pretending to consider or canvass any certificate, statement, or return of any supervisor of registration, except in the presence of the legal returning officers named in the bill of complaint filed this day, to wit, John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and Francis J. Herron; and it is further ordered that the said H. C. Warmoth desist and refrain from submitting to the defendants, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, and Durant Da Ponte, or any or either of them, either as pretended members of any board of returning officers of elections of the State of Louisiana, or as individuals, any statements, certificates of returns, or pretended statements, certificates, or returns of election, and to desist from assisting, aiding, abetting, or permitting any other person or persons whatsoever other than John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and Francis J. Herron, or their duly qualified successors, as returning officers, to inspect, consider, or have custody of or access to said statements, certificates, or returns of said supervisors of registration, or any other paper, document, affidavit, or proof that may have come into the hands of said Warmoth, or shall hereafter come into his hand, relating to said election, or to the fairness or correctness thereof, and which by law it is his duty to submit to the said John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and Francis J. Herron, the said legal board of returning officers of elections, and which should be properly considered by them.

"And it is further ordered that the said H. C. Warmoth, Jack Wharton, Frank H.

Hatch, and Durant Da Ponte, and each of them, be commanded and enjoined to refrain and desist from pretending to act together as a board of returning officers, or as returning officers of elections, from canvassing or attempting to canvass or consider any certificate, document, affidavit, return, statement of votes, or any paper whatsoever properly relating to said election mentioned in the said bill of complaint, and from attempting to make a canvass, to make, declare, or publish any pretended deduction, calculation, statement, or proclamation based thereon, or pretended to be derived therefrom, in any way relating or pertaining to said election mentioned in the said bill of complaint, held on the 4th day of November, 1872, or certifying to any candidate for office at said election any certificate of election, or any statement of the result of said election tending to show any right to office in any person growing out of ballots cast at said election, and from meddling with, altering, suppressing, falsifying, obliterating, or destroying any document, paper, voucher, proof, statement of votes, or certificate relating to said election. And it is further ordered that the said John McEnery be commanded, enjoined, restrained, and inhibited from in any manner acting or pretending to act as governor of the State of Louisiana, and from making any pretensions or asserting any claim to the office of governor of said State by virtue of any pretended evidence of election thereto under or by virtue of any certificate, document, or count, canvass, or adjudication now or hereafter made by the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, and the said defendants, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, in this bill charged to be unlawfully combined and conspired as returning officers. And it is further ordered that the said New Orleans Republican Printing Company, under whose control and direction the newspaper called the New Orleans Republican, the official journal of the State of Louisiana, is published, whereof W. R. Fish is president, be enjoined and restrained from in any manner publishing any official notice, document, or statement relating to any canvass or statement of votes made, or pretended to be made, or in any manner emanating from the said H. C. Warmoth, and said Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, or either of them, as a pretended board of returning officers of elections, in any manner relating to the said election held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872.

"And it is further ordered that the said defendants, H. C. Warmoth, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, John McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, named in the bill of complaint this day filed, be so commanded, enjoined, and restrained until the further order of this honorable court."

And this order was duly served by the marshal on the 17th of November, 1872.

On the 19th of November, 1872, Kellogg filed an affidavit, as follows:

"William P. Kellogg, being first duly sworn, deposeth and saith that he is advised and informed, and thereby believes, that the said defendants, H. C. Warmoth, Durant Da Ponte, Jack Wharton, and Frank H. Hatch, are now, and at all times since the making and service of the restraining order, issued in this cause, have been acting in disregard and in disobedience thereof, in contempt of the lawful orders of this court, and have aided, abetted, and countenanced the continued possession, custody, and canvass of the returns, certificates of officers connected with said elections, by persons other than the said Lynch, Longstreet, Herron, and Hawkins, and have in other material respects disobeyed the orders of this honorable court.

"WM. P. KELLOGG.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 19th November, 1872.

"J. W. GURLEY,
"United States Commissioner."

A rule was granted against Warmoth and others to show cause, upon which interrogatories and answers were filed, and this matter was slowly progressing when Governor Warmoth, to escape the clutches of Judge Durell, approved the act of November 20, 1872, which act repealed all the laws before then in force in regard to canvassing boards, and of course legislated both the Warmoth and Lynch boards out of existence. After this it is difficult to see what was left of the case made by Kellogg's bill in the United States court. Warmoth exercised the legislative power of the State, took the whole subject away from the United States court, and, on the evening of December 3, appointed De Feriet, Wiltz, Isabelle, Austin, and Taylor a canvassing board under the act of November 20, and at the same time, as governor, commenced suit in the eighth district court before Judge Elmore, and obtained an injunction restraining the Lynch board, upon the ground that the act of November 20 had abolished that board. The Lynch board applied to the Federal court for a certiorari to remove this suit of Warmoth against the Lynch board into the Federal court. The State court treated the writ with contempt and made no return to it. No proceedings were had in the Federal court on the certiorari, nor was any motion made in that court to dissolve the injunction which had been granted against the Lynch board. Conceding the right of the Federal court to issue this writ of certi-orari, its effect, when served upon the State court, was to transfer the cause to the Federal court; and the Lynch board might have applied to the Federal court to compel a return, and for a dissolution of the injunction granted by the State court. But as no such application was made to the Federal court, the injunction granted by the State court remains in full force against the Lynch board.

Warmoth having thus become master of the situation, having by the act approved November 20 legislated all former boards out of existence, and obtained an injunction against the Lynch board, restraining them upon the ground that their offices had been abolished, ordered the De Feriet board to the front; and that board, on the 4th day of December, made their canvass, declaring McEnery elected governor, Penn lieutenant-governor, Graham auditor, Armistead secretary of state, Ogden attorney-general, and Lusher superintendent of education; and declaring, also, who had been elected members of the legislature; and on the same day Governor Warmoth issued his proclamation promulgating this result, and therewith published the certificate of Wharton, secretary of state, containing the list of members of the legislature, to the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives, as required by law; being those declared by the De Feriet board to have been elected at said November election. (See pages 303, 304 of testimony attached to this report.)

The governor undoubtedly congratulated himself at this point that he had secured a complete victory over Judge Durell; but, unfortunately for the governor's joy, Judge Durell took a very different view of the situation; and, out of court, at his house, late at night, December 5, without application by any party, made the following order, which is without parallel, and it is hoped will remain so, in judicial proceedings.

"Circuit court of the United States, fifth circuit and district of Louisiana, in equity.

"WILLIAM P. KELLOGG vs. "H. C. WARMOTH ET AL. } No. 6830.

"Whereas Henry C. Warmoth, one of the respondents herein, has, in violation of the restraining order herein, issued the following proclamation and returns of certain persons claiming to be a board of returning officers, all in violation and contempt of the said restraining order, as follows, viz:

"'Proclamation.

"'STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
"'New Orleans, December 4, 1872.

"'Whereas P. S. Wiltz, Gabriel De Feriet, Thomas Isabelle, J. A. Taylor, and J. E. Austin, returning officers appointed by the governor to fill vacancies existing, in accordance with the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana, have made declaration of the result of an election held November 4, 1872, and have declared certain persons elected to the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana, as will appear from the returns herewith attached and made a part of this proclamation; and

"'Whereas such returns are compiled from the official returns of commissioners of election and supervisors of registration, on file in this office, and are in fact and in form accurate and correct, and made in accordance with law:

"'Now, therefore, I, Henry Clay Warmoth, governor of the State of Louisiana, do issue this my proclamation, making known the result of said election aforesaid, and command all officers and persons within the State of Louisiana to take notice of and respect the same.

"'Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 4th day of December, A. D. 1872, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

"'H. C. WARMOTH.

"'By the governor:

"'Y. A. WOODWARD,
"'Assistant Secretary of State.'

"Now, therefore, in order to prevent the further obstruction of the proceedings in this cause, and, further, to prevent a violation of the orders of this court, to the imminent danger of disturbing the public peace, it is hereby ordered that the marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana shall forthwith take possession of the building known as the Mechanics' Institute, and occupied as the State-house for the assembling of the legislature therein, in the city of New Orleans, and hold the same subject to the further order of this court, and meanwhile to prevent all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said pretended returning officers in contempt and violation of said restraining order; but the marshal is directed to allow the ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same.

"E. H. DURELL."

It is impossible to conceive of a more irregular, illegal, and in every way inexcusable act on the part of a judge. Conceding the power of the court to make such an order, the judge, out of court, had no more authority to make it than had the marshal. It has not even the form of judicial process. It was not sealed, nor was it signed by the clerk, and had no more legal effect than an order issued by any private citizen.

There had been no amendment of the bill of complaint. The law of November 20 had been promulgated. The De Feriet board had been appointed in pretended pursuance thereof. Whether under the constitution the governor had the power, in the vacation of the legislature, to appoint that board, upon the ground that the act of November 20 created offices, and therefore vacancies in office, your committee do not inquire. But it is understood that the constitution has been so construed in that State, and that Judge Dibble was appointed by the governor under similar circumstances.

The De Feriet board, therefore, had color of official existence. Their canvass was completed, and the result promulgated under color of the State law, and it is clear that this gave the Federal court no more right to seize the State-house than to seize this Capitol.

The marshal, on receiving this pretended order, called for a detachment of United States troops to act as a posse comitatus, seized the State-house at 2 a. m. of December 6, and held it for weeks.

Afterward, on the same day, Judge Durell delivered an opinion in the Kellogg case on the application for injunctions pendente lite, and made an order granting the injunction as prayed for by the bill. As matter of justice to Judge Durell, we give his opinion, order, and injunction in full:

"United States circuit court, in equity.

vs.
"HENRY C. WARMOTH ET AL. } No. 6830.

"Filed December 6, 1872.

"Opinion of the court.

"This application comes before me under a bill to preserve evidence to enable the complainant to prosecute a suit at law. This bill is well known to courts of chancery, and is founded upon the statute, being chapter 104 of the second session of the Forty-first Congress, sixteenth Statutes at Large, page 140, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes,' and upon the amendment to the same, being chapter 99 of the third session of the same Congress, sixteenth Statutes at Large, page 433. Section 1 of the first act cited provides as follows:

"'That all citizens of the United States who are or shall be otherwise qualified by law to vote at any election by the people in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be entitled and allowed to vote at all such elections without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, any constitution, law, custom, usage, or regulation of any State or Territory by or under its authority to the contrary notwithstanding.'

"Section 3 of the same act provides:

"'That whenever, by or under the authority of laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is or shall be required to be done by any citizen as a prerequisite to qualify or entitle him to vote, the offer of any such citizen to perform the act required to be done as aforesaid shall, if it fail to be carried into execution by reason of the wrongful act or omission aforesaid of the person or officer charged with the duty of receiving or permitting such performance or offer to perform, or acting therein, be deemed and held as a performance in law of such act. And the person so offering and failing, as aforesaid, being otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner and in the same extent as if he had in fact performed such act.'

"Section 23 provides as follows:

"'That whenever any person shall be defeated or deprived of his election to any office except elector or President or Vice-President, Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State legislature, by reason of the denial to any citizen or citizens who shall offer to vote, of the right to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, his right to hold and enjoy any such office and the emoluments thereof shall not be impaired by such denial.'

"And section 15 of the amending act provides as follows:

"'That the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States shall extend to all cases in law or equity arising under the provisions of this act, or the act hereby amended, and if any person shall receive any injury to his person or property for or on account of any act by him done, under any of the provisions of this act or the act hereby amended, he shall be entitled to maintain a suit for damages thereof in the circuit court of the United States in the district wherein the party doing the injury may reside or shall be found.'

"These two acts were passed by Congress to enforce the provision of the Constitution of the United States known as the fifteenth amendment (16 Statutes at Large, pages 140 and 433), which reads as follows:

"'The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.'

"The whole matter involved in the discussion, which has occupied more than a week before me, has been presented on both sides with such ability, research, and fullness that I feel greatly indebted to the solicitors of both the complainant and the respondents for the aid which they have rendered in enabling me to come to an early decision.

"The first question to be solved is, are the acts referred to constitutional? Do they fall within the appropriate legislation authorized and imposed as a duty upon Congress by the second section of the amendment? To solve this question we must look to the object proposed to be attained by the amendment. It was to protect all citizens of the United States, including the recently emancipated and enfranchised colored citizens, in the full and free exercise of the right to vote. Nine years previous to the adoption of the amendment, and the enactment of the statutes passed to enforce the same, four millions of those who now constitute the great body of the citizens of the United States were slaves. It is not necessary here to repeat the history of slavery in this country; how it was and continued to be from the very foundation of our Government a source of internal disquiet, increasing year by year until it culminated in a most bitter and devastating civil war. The result of that war was the emancipation and enfranchisement of four millions of people, who thus passed rapidly from a state of bondage to the possession of all the civil and political rights of citizens of the United States. It was impossible that so large a body of people should be suffered to remain exposed to the assaults of the prejudice naturally growing out of their former condition without securing to them through Congressional legislation a free and perfect use of the vote which the fifteenth amendment gave to them as a shield and a sword of protection for their persons, their liberties, and their property.

"Congress has legislated and given us the acts referred to as the means most appropriate for effecting the object proposed. These acts have been highly eulogized by the solicitors on both sides, and they seem to me to be most wise and in the highest sense appropriate. It is to be remarked that the fifteenth amendment is most broad in its comprehensiveness. Though called into existence in order to protect the freedman, it protects as well all other citizens, both native and foreign. It would protect the foreigner who had become a citizen should another Know-Nothing excitement agitate the nation, and it would protect the native-born should the foreign-born citizen ever gain in any State or locality an ascendency and attempt to use that ascendency oppressively. The same may be said of the acts of Congress to give practical effect to the amendment. The provision of the Constitution that no State shall pass a law impairing the obligations of contracts needed no legislation to enforce it beyond giving the right of review in the Supreme Court of the United States to the party feeling himself aggrieved; but in the case of the fifteenth amendment the helplessness of the party to be protected rendered a larger and peculiar jurisdiction necessary.

"Congress, then, in the acts under consideration, threw around all classes of citizens these effective laws and secured obedience thereto—first, by criminal punishment; second, by clothing the candidate of the voter with the right to prevent or redress the wrong attempted or perpetrated upon the vote by an appropriate civil action. Now, what are the grievances set forth in this case? What are the allegations made in the bill? They are that 10,000 citizens of this State have been on account of race, color, and previous condition deprived of registration, and after due proffer of the right to vote; and that that 10,000 votes which were in fact cast for the complainant for the office of governor have been or are about to be suppressed by an illegally constituted board of returning officers; and that without the interference of this court these votes, both those refused and those cast, which ought to be counted for the complainant, will be lost to him, and that thereby he will be defeated for said office.

"The allegations are supported by upward of four thousand affidavits of the actual voters. The chief defendant, namely, H. C. Warmoth, meets this weight of testimony solely by his answer and affidavit; and certain acts done by him since the canvass commenced force upon my mind the belief that his defense rests upon no solid foundation. The further allegation is made that the board of canvassers legally constituted are deprived by this respondent of the proper returns with the view to deprive the citizens of the right to vote. In other words, that the respondent has prevented a fair canvass of the votes by impeding the legal board and setting up an illegal board. This leads me to consider the facts with reference to these two boards.

"By an act of the State legislature of March 16, 1870, the board of returning officers was made to consist of the governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, Mr. Lynch, and Mr. Anderson. The lieutenant-governor and Mr. Anderson being disqualified on account of having been candidates, the governor, Lynch, and Herron, as a majority of the board, met to fill vacancies. The governor attempted to remove Herron, who was certainly de facto secretary of state, who seems to have some sort of judgment in his favor against Bovee, the elected secretary of state, who has for a long period attested all the statutes of the State, and who, without going into his title to the office as against Bovee, was the de facto officer clothed with sufficient authority to act as one of the board. The attempt to remove Herron I dismiss with the remark that if all the governor alleges against him had been true, it could have been established only by judicial inquiry, and gave the governor no right to displace him. Herron and Lynch by a majority vote filled the vacancies by electing Hawkins and General Longstreet, and these four, together with the governor, are clearly the legal board of returning officers. Wharton's vote goes for nothing, as he never had any legal status in the board, and with him necessarily fall out Da Ponte and Hatch. Thus it appears that the board which we will call the Herron board, in contradistinction to the Wharton board, is the board which this court feels bound to recognize as having been the legal board at the time this suit was commenced. And this brings me to inquire as to the effect of the approval by the governor of the act of November 20, 1872. The only question before me at this stage of the case connected with the effect of that approval is, did it change in any way the legal status of the Herron board? The act contained a repealing clause, and since it covered the whole subject of the election, and the election cannot be said to be complete until the final counting is concluded, I was at first startled by what seemed to me to be the logical inference of some of the authorities cited by the learned solicitors of the respondents, that if the act of 1870 was at that time repealed it might vitiate the whole election. But it is not necessary for me to pass upon the question, for giving the act of November 20 all the force of law, still the Herron returning board must continue to discharge their duties until their successors are inducted into office. Article 122 of the State constitution of 1868 reads thus:

"'ART. 122. All officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their offices until their successors shall have been inducted into office, except in cases of impeachment or suspension.'

"Indeed, the Herron board must finish the canvass of the votes, or a new legislature cannot be legally organized so as to create a board of canvassers in accordance with sections 2 and 44 of the law of the 20th of November, 1872.

"'SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, and have power to make the returns of all elections. In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise, by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers. The returning officers shall, after each election, before entering on their duties, take and subscribe to the following oath before a judge of the supreme or any district court:

"'I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and diligently perform the duties of a returning officer as prescribed by law; that I will carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election: So help me God.'

"'Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statement of votes made by the commissioners of election, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been compiled. The presiding officer shall at such meeting open, in the presence of the said returning officers, the statement of the commissioners of election, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate; one copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. The return of the election thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers until set aside after a contest, according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected. The governor shall, within thirty days thereafter, issue commissions to all officers thus declared elected, who are required by law to be commissioned.

"'SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last general assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the general assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State.'

"I see, therefore, no way of avoiding the conclusion that, in any view of the case, the Herron board of returning officers are still authorized to continue their duties, and are still entitled to the protection of the court.

"The court keeps within the acts of Congress and the fifteenth amendment. It does not pretend in any way to make a governor of the State, or in any degree to interfere with the voice of the people expressed through the ballot-box. What it does is to aid in making known the voice of the people, in accordance with sections 3 and 23 of the act of Congress, and with section 15 of the amendment thereto, and in its action is only a clearly needed adjunct of the legal returning board. Many propositions were discussed during the argument which it is not necessary for me to now pass upon. It is enough that I find the statute constitution; that the court has jurisdiction, and that the board of returning officers, composed of H. C. Warmoth and Messrs. Hawkins, Lynch, Longstreet, and Herron, are the legal board, and as such entitled to the protection of this court.

"As to the question of the ineligibility of the complainant in the bill to the office of governor, this question cannot arise under the bill, and could only come before this court in a direct action at law to test the title to the office. It is not, therefore, necessary or proper for me to decide it now; but were it otherwise, I would say that the reason of the thing seems to favor his eligibility, the object of the provision of the constitution being to prevent a man serving two masters and having a divided allegiance. And the fact that, contemporaneously with the adoption of the constitution which first contained this provision, the then Territorial governor was by the then constitutional convention made governor of the State provisionally, and at the ensuing election made by the people the first governor of the State, would seem to indicate that the meaning of the inhibition was understood to be as I above stated.

"It only remains for me now to make the following order:

"Circuit court of the United States, district of Louisiana, in equity.

"WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG, COMPLAINANT,
vs.
"HENRY C. WARMOTH, JACK WHARTON, FRANK H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, and John McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, defendants.

No. 6830.—Order entered December 6, 1872.

"This cause having come on for hearing on the complainant's motion for writs of injunction pendente lite, and for other interlocutory orders prayed for in complainant's bill and amended bill of complaint, and the court having considered the pleadings, affidavits, and exhibits filed in the cause, and having heard counsel as well for the complainant as for said defendants, and the court having considered the premises,

"It is ordered—

"That the said defendant, Henry C. Warmoth, during the pendency of this cause, be, and he hereby is, until the further order of this court, enjoined, inhibited, and restrained from in any manner, either directly or indirectly, considering, or pretending to consider or canvass, any statement, certificate, or return of any supervisor or assistant supervisor of registration, or any office, having any duties to perform about or concerning an election held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, in the State of Louisiana, or relating to any votes or ballots cast at said election, except in the presence of John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and George E. Bovee, a board of returning officers for said election; and that he do further desist and refrain from submitting, or allowing to be submitted, or from aiding or assisting in the submission to the defendants, Frank Hatch, Jack Wharton, Durant Da Ponte, or any other person or persons whatsoever, other than the said Hawkins, Bovee, Lynch, and Longstreet, any paper, document, affidavit, statement of votes, return of officers of election, or other proof in any manner relating to said election, and from allowing any other person or persons whatsoever, other than those in this order excepted, whether pretending to act as returning officers, or in any other capacity, to inspect, consider, have access to, canvass, or tamper with any paper, document, affidavit, statement of votes, returns or written proof relating to said election or to the fairness and correctness thereof, that may have heretofore or may hereafter come into his hands or possession, and which, by law, should properly be laid before, submitted to, or considered by such returning officers of election in making a canvass thereof. And that the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, be further enjoined and inhibited from altering, suppressing, mutilating, destroying, or secreting any such document, proof, or paper. And that he further desist and be enjoined from in any manner interfering with, obstructing, or hindering the said Lynch, Longstreet, Bovee, and Hawkins, or either of them, from full and complete access to, as well as custody of, all such documents, papers, and proofs relating to said election, as he may or shall have in his possession, custody, or control, or as they shall or may demand, either by refusing to deliver such documents or proofs to them, or either of them, or by any suit or proceeding instituted with the intent to hinder, delay, or obstruct them in the performance of their duty as returning officers. And that he be further restrained and enjoined from issuing commissions to any persons based upon any calculation, deduction, or pretended canvass of ballots cast at said election, or make, publish, sign, or deposit in the office of the secretary of state, or in any other public office, or cause to be so deposited, any document, statement of persons elected to any offices or positions of trust at said election, and from giving any effect to the same if already filed and deposited, unless the same be with the concurrent action and lawfully given consent of the said Lynch, Hawkins, Bovee, and Longstreet, or a majority thereof, or of a sufficient number of them to constitute a majority of a board of returning officers, acting as such returning officers.

"And it is further ordered that the said defendants, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, until the final hearing of this cause, or until the further order of the court, be severally and respectively enjoined and restrained to the same extent, effect, and manner as said complainant has in his said bill of complaint prayed they may severally and respectively be restrained. And that writs of injunction in due form of law issue against the said defendants, in accordance with the terms of this order. And that the returning order heretofore issued and allowed in this cause continue in full force and effect until the court shall otherwise order.

"And in order that the evidence relating to said election may be perpetuated and preserved, that it may be of avail upon the hearing of this cause, and in any cause which the said complainant may hereafter be compelled to institute and prosecute to test or determine his right to the office of governor of said State, and in order that public inconvenience may not result therefrom, it is further ordered that the said Henry C. Warmoth do forthwith and without delay deliver unto the said returning officers, John Lynch, George E. Bovee, Jacob Hawkins, and James Longstreet, each and every paper, document, affidavit, tally-sheet, list, sworn statement, certificate, letter, communication, or proof which he has or may have in his possession, or which may hereafter come into his possession from any supervisor or assistant supervisor of registration or election, or any officer or person, commissioner or commissioners, in any manner concerned in the conduct, control, management, or direction of said election, held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872, in any manner relating to said election, or any voting or ballots cast at said election or in any manner relating thereto, in order that they may consider, canvass, and make due return thereof, as required by law; and when the same are no longer required for the purpose of said canvass, it is ordered that the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, do thereafter immediately file and deposit the same with the clerk of this court, there to remain until true, accurate, and complete attested copies thereof be made by the clerk, subject to the direction of the court.

"Injunction.—Issued December 6, 1872.

vs.
"HENRY C. WARMOTH, JACK WHARTON, FRANK H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, John McEnery, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company. } No. 6830.

"Circuit court of the United States, fifth circuit and district of Louisiana.

"The President of the United States, greeting:

"Whereas it has been represented to us in our said circuit court on the part of William P. Kellogg, by his bill of complaint lately exhibited against you and each of you, touching certain matters and things therein set forth:

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the allegations in said bill contained, you, the said above-named defendants, your attorneys and each of you, are hereby commanded and strictly enjoined under the penalty of the law that you absolutely refrain and desist during the pendency of this cause, until the further order of this court, from in any manner, either directly or indirectly, considering or pretending to consider or canvass any statement, certificate, or return of any supervisor or assistant supervisor of registration, or any officer having any duties to perform about or concerning an election held on the 4th day of November, 1872, in the State of Louisiana, or relating to any votes or ballots cast at said election, except in the presence of John Lynch, Jacob Hawkins, James Longstreet, and George E. Bovee, a board of returning officers for said election, or from submitting or allowing to be submitted, or from aiding or assisting in the submission to the said defendants, Frank H. Hatch, Jack Wharton, Durant Da Ponte, or any other person or persons whatsoever other than the said Hawkins, Bovee, Lynch, and Longstreet, any paper, document, affidavit, statement of votes, return of officers of election, or other proof in any manner relating to said election, and from allowing any other person or persons whatsoever other than those in this order excepted, whether pretending to act as returning officers, or in any other capacity, to inspect, consider, have access to, canvass, or tamper with any paper, document, affidavit, statement of votes, return, or written proof relating to said election, or to the fairness and correctness thereof, that may have heretofore or may hereafter come into his hands or possession, and which by law should properly be laid before, submitted to, or considered by such returning officers of election in making a canvass thereof; and that the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, be further enjoined and inhibited from altering, suppressing, mutilating, destroying, or secreting any such document, proof, or paper.

"And that he further desist and be enjoined from in any manner interfering with, obstructing, or hindering the said Lynch, Longstreet, Bovee, and Hawkins, or either of them, from full and complete access to, as well as custody of, such documents, proof, or paper.

"And that he further desist and be enjoined from in any manner interfering with, obstructing, or hindering the said Lynch, Longstreet, Bovee, and Hawkins, or either of them, from full and complete access to, as well as custody of, such documents, papers, and proofs relating to said election as he may or shall have in his possession, custody, or control, or as they shall or may demand, either by refusing to deliver such documents or proofs to them, or either of them, or by any suit or proceeding instituted with the intent to hinder, delay, or obstruct them in the performance of their duty as returning officers; and that he be further restrained and enjoined from issuing any commissions to any persons based upon any calculation, deduction, or pretended canvass of ballots cast at said election, or make, publish, sign, or deposit in the office of the secretary of state or in any other public office, or cause to be so deposited, any document, statement of persons elected to any offices or positions of trust at said election, and from giving any effect to the same, if already filed and deposited, unless the same be with the concurrent action and lawfully-given consent of the said Lynch, Hawkins, Bovee, and Longstreet, or a majority thereof, or of a sufficient number of them to constitute a majority of a board of returning officers.

"And it is further ordered that the said defendants, Jack Wharton, Frank H. Hatch, Durant Da Ponte, and the New Orleans Republican Printing Company, until the final hearing of this cause, or until the further order of the court, be severally and respectively enjoined and restrained to the same extent, effect, and manner as said complainant has in his bill of complaint prayed they may severally and respectively be restrained.

"And that writs of injunction in due form of law issue against the said defendants in accordance with the terms of this order.

"And that the restraining order heretofore issued and allowed in this cause continue in full force and effect until the court shall otherwise order.

"Witness the Honorable Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, at the city of New Orleans, this 6th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1872.

"[SEAL.] F. A. WOOLFLEY, Clerk.

"Marshal's return.

"Received December 7, 1872, by the United States marshal, and on the same day, month, and year served the within-named persons with a copy of this injunction, as follows: On H. C. Warmoth, by handing the same to him in person at the Saint Charles Hotel, in this city; Jack Wharton, same day, month, and year, served the within injunction by handing the same to him in person at the Saint Charles Hotel, in this city; on Durant Da Ponte, same day, month, and year, by handing the same to him in person in this city; on Frank H. Hatch, same day, month, and year, by handing the same to him in person in this city; on the New Orleans Republican, December 9, 1872, by handing the same to W. R. Fish, president of said paper.

"C. R. STEELE,
"Deputy United States Marshal."

It is somewhat remarkable that in this opinion the judge makes no allusion to the fact that the State-house was then in possession of Federal troops, under an order issued by him, out of court, the night before. The opinion materially misstates the allegations of the bill, and wholly ignores the fact that, under the act of November 20, the governor had appointed a new canvassing board which had in fact canvassed the votes; of all which he was aware, because the proclamation of the governor officially promulgating these facts was embodied in the order for seizing the State-house, made by the judge the night before. The judge also declares that about four thousand affidavits sustain the averments of the bill.

Your committee have examined many of these affidavits, and it is admitted that none of them contain the statement that right of registration or right of voting was denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

But in this opinion he disposes of the act of November 20 in a remarkable way. He seems to admit its validity, but seems also determined that it shall not take effect at an inconveniently early date. He admits that it repealed all former election laws, and covered the whole subject of elections; but from this he draws two singular conclusions: First, that inasmuch as the act of November 20 repealed all former election laws, all that had been done under such repealed laws was void; and second, to avoid this difficulty, which he says at first startled him, that it was his duty to continue the old laws in force until the old boards could have a reasonable opportunity to complete all the business before them.

One of two things is certain: The governor's approval of the new election law on the 20th of November gave it effect on that day, or it did not. Assuming that the approval on that day was regular, the new law absolutely repealed all the laws under which the Warmoth board and the Lynch board were pretending to act, and, of course, abolished both boards without regard to the question which was the legal one. All that had been done in the election of November, 1872, in pursuance of the old laws—that is, the registration, voting, and returns—was as valid after the act of November 20 as before. If the canvass had been made by the proper board under the old law, and in all things completed, the rights of parties based upon that canvass would not have been affected by the repeal of the laws. But the act of November 20, taking effect after the returns were made, and before they were canvassed, transferred the duty of canvassing to the new board created by the act.

Congress, a year or two ago, passed an act creating a new judicial district in the State of Wisconsin, carved out of the territory of the then existing district. When the President signed the bill, the circuit court for the old district was in session, and in the midst of a jury-trial, in that part of the State which the act erected into a new district. What would have been said if the court had determined not to regard the act of Congress until that trial could be completed? The court stopped, and the trial fell. Acts have frequently been passed abolishing courts. It never was pretended that the abolished court could proceed and dispose of pending causes. If the act abolishing a court transfers its jurisdiction to another court, or creates a new court in its stead, the new court assumes jurisdiction and proceeds with the causes, and orders and injunctions granted by the old court are valid in the new.

A few years since, on admitting one of the new States, by which the Territorial courts were abolished, Congress, by inadvertence, omitted to provide for pending causes in those courts; and, after a suspension of jurisdiction for a year or more, Congress passed an act transferring those causes which were of Federal cognizance to the courts of the Union, and the Supreme Court held it valid.

In the opinion of your committee there can be no doubt—conceding the validity of the act of November 20—that it transferred the duty of canvassing the returns of the last election to the board to be elected under the provisions of the act. The act provided for such election by the senate, and, taking effect in the vacation of the legislature, created offices to be filled thereafter by the senate. This is what is styled in that State an original vacancy, which, happening in the vacation of the legislature, the governor is authorized to fill by appointment; and it is said that the courts of that State have repeatedly recognized the right of the governor to make such appointments.

Viewed in any light in which your committee can consider them, the orders and injunctions made and granted by Judge Durell in this cause are most reprehensible, erroneous in point of law, and are wholly void for want of jurisdiction; and your committee must express their sorrow and humiliation that a judge of the United States should have proceeded in such flagrant disregard of his duty, and have so far overstepped the limits of Federal jurisdiction.

After the foregoing decision was made by Judge Durell, Armstead filed a bill in the eighth district court against the members of the Lynch board, and obtained an injunction commanding them to make no canvass of the November election, except upon the returns made in pursuance of law. This injunction in no way conflicted with the decision of Judge Durell; for, conceding Lynch that the board was, notwithstanding the repeal of the law creating it, a valid board, it cannot be doubted that the courts of the State might restrain that board from canvassing any but the legal returns of the election.

A writ of certiorari was issued by the Federal court in this case, which was disregarded by the State court. No subsequent proceedings were had in the Federal court upon said writ, and the injunction remains in full force.

On the 6th of December, 1872, the Lynch board—Bovee (who was then acting as secretary of state in place of Herron), Lynch, Longstreet, and Hawkins—pretended to have canvassed the returns of the election, and certified to the secretary of state that Kellogg had been elected governor; Antoine, lieutenant-governor; Clinton, auditor; Field, attorney-general; Brown, superintendent of education, and Deslondes, secretary of state; and also certified a list of persons whom they had determined to be elected to the legislature.

There is nothing in all the comedy of blunders and frauds under consideration more indefensible than the pretended canvass of this board.

The following are some of the objections to the validity of their proceedings:

1. The board had been abolished by the act of November 20.

2. The board was under valid and existing injunctions restraining it from acting at all, and an injunction in the Armstead case restraining it from making any canvass not based upon the official returns of the election.

3. Conceding the board was in existence, and had full authority to canvass the returns, it had no returns to canvass.

The returns from the parishes had been made, under the law of 1870, to the governor, and not one of them was before the Lynch board.

It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a republican legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns, in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements, and in other cases, where they had nothing whatever to act upon, they made an estimate based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish, of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits, and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session. It is quite unnecessary to waste time in considering this part of the case, for no person can examine the testimony ever so cursorily without seeing that this pretended canvass had no semblance of integrity.

But it has been claimed before your committee that a decision of the supreme court of Louisiana, rendered since this investigation commenced, has determined that the Lynch board was the legal returning board at the time it pretended to canvass the votes; and it is urged that a wholesome regard for the rights of the State precludes the Senate from investigating this subject back of that decision; that the canvassers were a board of officers created by the State law, and that the decision of the supreme court having determined that the Lynch board was the legal board the United States is esstopped by that decision, and the canvass made by the board. To this there are three answers:

First. The supreme court, in the case referred to, is understood not to have had any testimony before it showing the character of the proceedings by the Lynch board, which testimony is before your committee very fully. Fraud vitiates everything, and it is certain that no court, upon the testimony before your committee, could hold the canvass by that board to be valid.

Second. In the opinion of your committee the supreme court had no jurisdiction of the case in which they made the decision. The judgments of every court, the most exalted in character, are absolutely void if rendered without jurisdiction. But this point will be considered more fully hereafter.

Third. But for the interference of Judge Durell in the matter of this State election, a matter wholly beyond his jurisdiction, the McEnery government would to-day have been the de facto government of the State. Judge Durell interposed the Army of the United States between the people of Louisiana and the only government which has the semblance of regularity, and the result of this has been to establish the Kellogg government, so far as that State now has any government. For the United States to interfere in a State election, and, by the employment of troops, set up a governor and legislature without a shadow of right, and then to refuse redress of the wrong, upon the ground that to grant relief would be interfering with the rights of the State, is a proposition difficult to utter with a grave countenance. Besides, it is impossible to determine to what extent the supreme court may have been influenced in rendering this decision by the fact that the Kellogg government, the creation of the Lynch board, had already been established, and the expectation that it would be sustained by Federal authority.

But so much stress is laid upon this decision of the supreme court that it merits a more particular notice, and we shall examine it with a view to determine whether the court had jurisdiction. It is said that the supreme court of a State is the sole judge of its jurisdiction under State laws, and that the supreme court here expressly decided that it had jurisdiction of this cause. Every judgment implies an assertion of jurisdiction, but it is well settled that no judgment of any court has validity when it is shown that it was rendered without jurisdiction. The Constitution of the United States declares that in each State full faith and credit shall be given to the records and judicial proceedings of every other State. And yet it is well settled that when the record of a judgment rendered by the court of another State is produced, inquiry may be made as to the jurisdiction of the court to render such judgment, and that, too, although the court rendering the judgment may have expressly asserted its jurisdiction. Whoever presents the record of any judicial proceeding, and claims for it conclusive effect, asserts that the court had jurisdiction, and if it can be shown that such jurisdiction did not exist the paper is no record.

Now, to examine the decision in question with reference to jurisdiction:

The suit was commenced in the eighth district court of New Orleans, by the Lynch board against the Warmoth board, on the 14th of November, 1872, under the "intrusion act," for the purpose of determining which was the legal board. This suit was analogous to a proceeding by quo warranto at the common law. The only question involved—the entire subject-matter of the suit—was whether Lynch and the other members of that board, or Warmoth and the other members of his board, were authorized to act as State canvassers. The plaintiffs averred themselves to be the legal members of the board, and that the defendants had intruded into their offices. This was the only question that could be settled by that proceeding.

On the 19th November the court decided in favor of the plaintiffs, the Lynch board. On the 21st November motion for new trial was made, and was set for hearing on the 25th November. The hearing of the motion was on that day postponed, and was finally had, and the motion granted on the 3d of December; and the suit was dismissed upon the ground that the act of November 20 repealed all former election laws, and abolished the office.

By the constitution, article 74, the appellate power of the supreme court extends only to cases "where the matter in dispute shall exceed $500."

It is well settled by adjudications that where an office is in dispute the amount involved is determined by the amount of salary attached to the office. In this case the board had no salary. Therefore the Lynch board could not appeal from the judgment dismissing the suit.

On the 19th day of December, A. P. Field, a stranger to the cause, presented his petition for intervention and appeal.

His petition states that he was elected attorney-general at the November election, 1872, and that it had been so declared by the Lynch board, and that he had been duly commissioned; that he was interested in this case, for that the plaintiffs were legal returning officers, and had returned that he had been duly elected; and that the judgment in said case, against the plaintiffs therein, "jeopardizes the position of your petitioner in his said office, whereby your petitioner has an interest in having such judgment reversed and set aside;" and that he had an interest in this case exceeding $500, the salary of attorney-general being $5,000 per annum. The petitioner prayed an appeal to the supreme court, which was granted.

In the opinion of the majority of the supreme court it is attempted to be shown that the Lynch board might have appealed from the judgment dismissing their suit, upon the ground that, although it did not involve the amount of $500, pecuniary interest, it was very important to the people of the State. The theory that, although a case involves no pecuniary amount, it may, from its magnificence or public importance, be cognizable by a court whose jurisdiction is, by the constitution, limited to cases involving $500, is new to your committee; but, conceding its correctness, its materiality is not perceived, because the Lynch board did not appeal.

We have carefully examined the opinions of the majority of the court, and the cases cited, and also the dissenting opinions of Judge Wyly and Judge Kennard, with the cases referred to by them. We are of opinion that the dissenting opinions of Wyly and Kennard declare the true principles of law applicable to this subject, and we adopt the opinion of Judge Wyly as a part of this report:

Opinion of Judge Wyly.

"State ex rel. Attorney-General et al. vs. Jack Wharton et al. Wyly, judge, dissenting.

"The judgment of a court without jurisdiction ratione materiæ is a nullity so absolute it need not be pronounced. The court will notice the want of jurisdiction ex proprio motu.

"It is well settled that an intervention is not allowable where the party seeking to intervene would have no separate cause of action against either or both of the litigants, or where he has no claim to the immediate object of the litigation.

"The immediate object of the litigation in the case before us is to determine the title to the offices of the returning board of election, under act No. 100 of the acts of 1870.

"The controversy is between the relators and the defendants for these offices.

"A. P. Field, who intervenes and brings up this appeal, does not claim the offices in dispute. He holds the office of attorney-general, and as neither the relators nor the defendants set up a claim to his office, or attempt in any manner to impede the administration thereof, he has no cause of action against either of them.

"He, therefore, has no right to intervene, because the law will not allow a party to thrust himself into a litigation he would be prohibited from instituting for himself. The object of interpleading is to abridge litigation, and avoid the multiplicity of suits. Having no cause of action against either of the litigants, and not claiming the offices in dispute, how can A. P. Field interplead, and, by appealing, protract a vexatious litigation dropped by the original parties?

"Such pleading is not allowable in ordinary suits; but this is a proceeding under the intrusion act to determine whether the relators or the defendants are entitled to the offices of the returning board of election under the act of 1870.

"The law provides that suits of this character must be brought in the name of the State, on the relation of the district attorney or the attorney-general, against the party accused of intruding into or unlawfully holding an office; that the name of the person claiming to be rightfully entitled to said office may be joined as plaintiff with the State; and that when the intrusion is made apparent the court may decide the defendant to be an intruder, eject him from office, and order that the person joined with the State as plaintiff may be inducted into office. (Acts of 1868, pages 71 and 199.)

"No provision is made for an intervention in a suit of this kind, and in my opinion it is not allowable. If a controversy for a certain office be settled improperly under a proceeding of this character, and the person inducted into office is not entitled to it, as against a third party, who was not joined as plaintiff with the State, the rights of such party are in no manner impaired. He can by mandamus if necessary compel the district attorney or the attorney-general to institute in his behalf a proceeding in the name of the State, under the intrusion act, and have his title to the office established and the previously successful litigant ejected therefrom. After the time for contesting the election has passed, the only suit to establish title to office that can be brought is a suit under the intrusion act, and that, as before remarked, must be brought in the name of the State. The State, as before remarked by this court, must take the initiative; no one can litigate for office under that statute in his own name. And if a person cannot in his own name bring an action for the office he claims, how can he accomplish the same object by filing a petition of intervention in his own name, setting up his separate demand?

"As I understand the intrusion law, no one will be allowed to demand an office in this State in a proceeding in his own name, whether he pleads directly in a separate action or whether he interpleads in an action between other parties. Whenever he sees fit to set up his demand for an office the statutes to which I have referred prescribe the precise form or mode of procedure in which he must bring that demand in order that the court may decide the title to the office.

"If the State under the intrusion law must be the prominent litigant, and no demand for office can be set up except in the name of the State, how can there be an intervention? Can this State intervene in her own suit? Can the State, suing for A, set up a separate demand in her own suit in behalf of B? Can the same party be both plaintiff and intervenor in the same suit? Such a proposition to a legal mind is utterly absurd. But then, how are the rights of several persons claiming a particular office to be determined without numerous suits, which the law abhors? The answer is plain and simple.

"It is found in section 9 of the intrusion law, being act No. 58 of the acts of 1868. It is in these words: 'That where several persons claim to be entitled to the same office or franchise one action may be brought against all such persons in the same action, in order to try their respective rights to such office or franchise.'

"Here, then, to simplify pleading and to settle conflicting titles to office, the State has enacted a law by which she can in her own name in one action sue all the claimants to the office in dispute, and in the same action 'try their respective rights to such office or franchise.'

"From the very language of the law it is apparent that no interpleading was contemplated by the lawgiver. And, indeed, under the statute it could not be done, because, as before observed, the State alone can bring the suit, and she cannot in the same action occupy two contradictory positions, that of plaintiff, the prominent litigant, and that of intervenor, a third party, a stranger to the suit. Is it doubted that the State is the real litigant in suits under the intrusion law? I point to the State vs. Krieder, 21 An., 482, and numerous other decisions wherein this court has so often affirmed it, and I refer to the statute itself.

"It is well settled that in a contest for office the pecuniary interest involved is the amount of the salary.

"In the suit before us there is no salary at all. Consequently, as between the original parties, the matter in dispute does not exceed $500, and this court is without jurisdiction ratione materiæ. To ascertain the jurisdiction of the court it is idle to discuss general principles or to cite the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States, because it does not spring from such sources. The jurisdiction of this court is limited and defined in precise terms in the constitution of this State, the instrument creating it, and beyond these limitations we cannot go without usurpation.

"This court has only appellate jurisdiction, 'which shall extend to all cases when the matter in dispute shall exceed $500.' * * * (Article 74, constitution of 1868.)

"But the intervenor and appellant contends that as his salary of attorney-general is $5,000 he has a pecuniary interest in this litigation exceeding $500, and therefore the court as to him has jurisdiction. For argument let us assume that it is so. We then have no anomaly of a jurisdiction as to one litigant, and no jurisdiction as to the others, and positively no jurisdiction as to the offices in controversy, the immediate object in dispute, and of the litigation.

"The matter in dispute between A and B, the very object of their litigation, has a pecuniary value less than $500; neither can appeal to this court for want of jurisdiction; the difficulty can be obviated; the judgment below can be reversed; all that is necessary is for a third party to aver that as he owns some other object worth $500 he has a pecuniary interest in the controversy exceeding $500 and therefore can intervene and appeal. If the doctrine contended for be true, all the inferior courts of this State, including justices of the peace, may in the same manner be brought before this court for revision. Such a proposition is unreasonable and absurd. In my judgment the title to an office the salary of which is less than $500 cannot be determined by this court, for want of jurisdiction ratione materiæ, it matters not who is the appellant, and it matters not how many affidavits are filed setting up a pecuniary interest exceeding the amount of the salary. A third party appealing from a judgment must show a direct pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of the suit. (Attorney-general vs. Markey, Kaiser, 21 Ann., 743; 1 N. S., 308; 4 N. S., 342; 2 R., 391.) The subject-matter of this suit is the title to the offices of the returning boards of election under act No. 100 of the acts of 1870, to which offices there is no salary. Therefore neither the original litigants nor the intervenor has a direct pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of this suit and therefore cannot appeal, because this court is without jurisdiction ratione materiæ. It is therefore my judgment that if an intervention in a case like this were allowable, and if a third party could intervene and appeal from a judgment not appealable by the original litigants, because the matter in dispute is less than $500, the intervenor, A. P. Field, has not shown a direct pecuniary interest in this suit sufficient to entitle him to the appeal or sufficient to give this court jurisdiction.

"If he had been joined as plaintiff with the State in this suit, he could not appeal, because the subject-matter of the suit is less than $500. The argument, however, is urged that Field has a direct pecuniary interest in this case, because, as the time for contesting elections has passed (more than ten days after the election having elapsed), he has no other way to vindicate his title to the office of attorney-general. That if the board by whom he was returned as elected was not the lawful returning board, then his title to the office has no basis upon which to rest. Consequently, his entire salary as attorney-general is involved in this controversy between the two returning boards.

"The answer to this is twofold: First, the controversy between these returning boards in no way prevented him from instituting, within proper time, the usual proceedings to contest the election. Second, his title to the office of attorney-general cannot now be determined as against H. N. Ogden, his opponent at the election, because the latter is not a party to these proceedings. Besides, in a controversy for one office the title to another office (separate and distinct) cannot be determined. A proceeding under the "intrusion act" can only determine the title to the office in dispute, and no one can become a party to that proceeding who does not claim the immediate object of the litigation. If A. P. Field, who was returned as elected attorney-general, can intervene in this controversy, every candidate for office at the late election, every person expecting an office if his party prevails, and every person incidentally or remotely interested in the settlement of the issue may intervene, and the rights of everybody, the titles to all the offices in the State, may at once be determined, notwithstanding the opponents of these various intervenors were not cited, and were not parties to the suit between these returning boards. An argument that leads to such monstrous absurdities ought not to be accepted by this court as correct. In

State vs. Mason et al., 149, 506, A., where parties not claiming the offices of mayor and councilmen of Carrollton contested the election of the defendants to said offices, this court said: 'It appears reasonable that no one but a person pretending to have a right to an office should be permitted to test the right of the incumbent to that office.' In Voisin and others vs. Leche et al., 23 A., 25, a similar case, this doctrine was affirmed by this court, the identical language being adopted by Chief-Justice Ludeling, the organ of the court. In State ex rel. Sullivan et al. vs. Mount et al., 21 A., 755, where the controversy was between two boards of school directors, and where Kendall, the secretary of one of the boards, appealed, claiming that as his salary was $1,800 he had a pecuniary interest in the controversy exceeding $500, this court held that 'in a controversy for office under the intrusion act' a third party, not holding or claiming the office in dispute, cannot appeal from the judgment of the court a qua. There the board that appointed Kendall secretary was unsuccessful in the controversy with the other board of school directors, and could not appeal because of the want of pecuniary interest (there being no salary allowed the school directors of the parish of Orleans). Kendall, the secretary, appealed, and contended that, unless his right to appeal was maintained, he would lose his office, affording him a salary of $1,800 per annum; that the very basis of his office rested upon the reversal of the judgment in the controversy between these two boards of school directors. The court held that as he did not claim the offices in dispute (the immediate object of the litigation), Kendall could not 'appeal from the judgment of the court a qua.' Here neither of the returning boards of election has appealed from the judgment in the controversy between them, because, having no salary, there is no pecuniary interest involved as between them. A. P. Field, claiming to be returned as attorney-general by one of these boards, whose suit under the 'intrusion act' was dismissed, has appealed, and he contends that unless that judgment is reversed and the board which returned him as elected attorney-general is recognized by this court and declared the lawful board, his title to that office has no basis upon which to rest. The case presented by him is identical in principle with that presented by Kendall, and should have the same solution. He is a third party, not claiming the offices in controversy, and cannot appeal from the judgment of the court a qua, 21 A., 735. The appellant cites the case of Byerly vs. Judge of the Eighth District Court, 23 A., 768, to show that a third party having an appealable interest may appeal. That case is not like the one before the court. Byerly showed a direct pecuniary interest in the matter in dispute.

"I deem it proper to remark, however, that there is a feature of that case that I do not approve of. I was not present at the hearing, and took no part in its decision. Whatever comfort it may give the appellant, however, is utterly annihilated in the subsequent final decision of that same case reported in 24 A., 115.

"The case in 12 A., 48, cited to show that a third party may appeal, is wholly unlike the case before the court. There the property of a third party had been seized, and the appeal was from the judgment dissolving his injunction. It being a separate demand, C. P., 398, and the value of the property being sufficient to give this court jurisdiction, there was no error in maintaining the appeal.

"There are other grounds for dismissing the appeal, which I deem it unnecessary to notice, because, to my mind, the argument which I have endeavored to make fully maintains the exception of the defendants that A. P. Field has no right to take this appeal.

"Believing that the case is not within the jurisdiction of the court and that the decree of a court without jurisdiction, ratione materiæ, is an absolute nullity, I hardly think it necessary to enter upon an elaborate discussion of the issues presented for adjudication upon the merits. I will state, however, some of the conclusions forced upon my mind from a careful consideration of these questions.

"I believe the governor had the right to sign the new election law on the 20th of November, 1872; that it became operative from the moment of the signing, and that it entirely repealed the law creating the offices in controversy, to wit, act No. 100 of the acts of 1870.

"That the governor has the right in this State to sign and approve laws after the session of the legislature has ended has often been decided by this court; indeed, I regard the jurisprudence settled on this point. But the appellant contends with some show of plausibility that when this act was signed (the 20th of November, 1872) the legislature that enacted the law had passed out of existence (the terms of most all the members of the general assembly having expired); that with the cessation of their terms ended all of their unfinished business, so that the governor could not complete by his approval and signature a statute after its authors had ceased to exist.

"This argument is ingenious but unsound. The fallacy lies in supposing that the law-making power had ceased to exist. While our structure of government remains neither of the co-ordinate branches thereof can cease to exist, although the persons intrusted by the people to administer them often discontinue to do so because of death, resignation, or the lapse of the terms for which these public functions were chosen.

"In this State the effect of a repealing law is not always a question of construction. When a repealing law like any other law 'is clear and free from ambiguity, the letter of it is not to be disregarded under pretext of pursuing its spirit' (C. C., 13);

"It is only when the law is dubious in its language that its meaning must be sought by construction (C. C., 16);

"In my opinion the election law approved 20th November, 1872, entirely repealed the law of 1870. It devised a new and different way of canvassing the votes and making the returns, and it entirely abolished the offices involved in this controversy. How the incumbents of offices that have been abolished can pretend to hold over under article 122 of the constitution till their successors are inducted into office I cannot imagine.

"How can there be an inducting of successors into offices that do not exist?

"But great stress is laid on the case of Kreider, 21 A., 482, and it is insisted that the ruling in that case covers this one. I do not think so. The statute interpreted in that case differed very materially from the one now under examination. There the court held that the thirteenth section of the act of September 14, 1868, repealing the charter of Jefferson, approved March 8, 1867, did not abolish the office of the corporation. This clause only repealed the old charter in so far as its provisions were not incorporated in the new charter.

"The title of that act was 'An act for revising and amending the charter of the city of Jefferson.'

"The title of the act only proposed to 'revise and amend' the charter.

"Under cover of such a title the old act could not be abolished, and any clause to that effect would be repugnant to article 114 of the constitution requiring the objects of every statute to be expressed in the title thereof. In the Kreider case it was held that the 'clause only repealed the old charter in so far as its provisions were not incorporated in the new charter.'

"The provisions of that act did not abolish the offices of the corporation, but continued them.

"In the statute before us the officers of returning boards in the old law are not carried over and incorporated in it. Therefore these offices are abolished under the authority of Kreider's case, which has been produced to show the reverse.

"In my judgment the act approved 20th November, 1872, is not mere revisory legislation; but whether it is or not is of no consequence, because the offices claimed by the relators under the old law are abolished, if not directly at least by implication, because the continuing of said offices is not provided for in the new law, and it is inconsistent therewith.

"The provision of act No. 100 of the acts of 1870, creating these offices and designating the duties to be performed therein, is in conflict with the provisions of the act of 20th November, 1872, and is therefore repealed.

"This was the view taken by this court in the analogous case of the State ex rel. Martien vs. Lavigne (23 A., 111);

"Here, to my mind, another difficulty arises. What judicial effect can the decision have? What legal right shall we order to be executed? A. P. Field cannot be put into the offices in controversy, because he don't claim them.

"We cannot eject the defendants and induct into these offices the relators, because the plaintiffs have not appealed from the judgment dismissing their suit. (1 N. S., 308.) Besides, the defendants are not claiming the offices, but contend that they, as well as the plaintiffs, are not out of office by reason of the approval of the election law of 1872.

"Furthermore, if the approval of said law is not valid the relators have nothing to contend for, having canvassed and made their returns. Notwithstanding the suit, they have exhausted the powers confided to them, and they are now functus officio—they are no longer excluded from office. There are other questiods which I deem it unnecessary to discuss.

"With all due respect for the views of my learned associates, who compose the quorum deciding this case, I feel constrained to differ with them in the conclusion to which they have arrived, because I believe their decision is not in harmony with the analogies of our law, and the numerous adjudications of ourselves and our predecessors. I believe that it practically overrules many important principles and points of practice heretofore deemed settled, and that it is a new departure in the jurisprudence of our State.

"For the reason stated, I feel constrained to dissent in this case."

No man can be said to be aggrieved by a judgment unless he has some direct interest in it. A man may be aggrieved in the sense of being distressed or afflicted at the defeat of his neighbor or friend, or because he thinks the judgment will have injurious effects upon public interests. But before he can intervene and appeal he must show that some right of his is injuriously affected by the judgment. In a suit by quo warranto against a person who had been for years acting as a judge of a court it would hardly be maintained that every person who had recovered a judgment while the defendant had been acting as judge could intervene and appeal from a judgment determining that the judge had wrongfully exercised the office. One reason is that a judgment rendered by a de facto judge is as valid between the parties as if rendered by a judge de jure. And in this suit the supreme court, although they declare that Field was entitled to an appeal, make no decision in his favor; do not declare that he is entitled to the office of attorney-general, and could not, for his opponent was not before the court; but reverse the judgment below solely upon the ground that it was erroneous as to the Lynch board, who had not appealed. We therefore dismiss the further consideration of this decision of the supreme court of the State with the further remark that if the jurisdiction of the supreme court were conceded their decision would not be conclusive against the United States in an inquiry like this, to ascertain if the State has a government.

We now proceed to consider another case pending before Judge Durell, in which, if possible, he has still more flagrantly transcended his jurisdiction.

The act of Congress of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. L., 146 sec 23, provides:

"That whenever any person shall be defeated or deprived of his election to any office, except elector of President or Vice-President, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State legislature, by reason of the denial to any citizen or citizens who shall offer to vote of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," such person may have his action in the Federal court, &c.

On the 7th day of December, 1872, C. C. Antoine, claiming that he had been elected lieutenant-governor at the election in November, 1872, filed his bill of complaint on the equity side of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, against the Warmoth board—Warmoth, Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte—against the holding-over clerk of the house of representatives, and the holding-over secretary of the senate; and against Y. A. Woodward, assistant secretary of state; against Penn, claiming to be lieutenant-governor; and against Armstead, claiming to be secretary of state; against Blanchard, state registrar of voters; against the metropolitan police of the city of New Orleans; against all the persons determined by the board composed of De Feriet and others, appointed under the act of November 20, to have been elected senators and members of the house of representatives: and against the De Feriet board.

This bill contained, in substance, the allegations contained in the Kellogg bill, though more in detail; and set forth that secret and confidential instructions were issued to the State supervisors of registration to exclude the supervisors appointed by the United States from the canvass of State and parish officers; and to permit no person to vote who had been denied registration, unless they knew that he had been so denied; and that Warmoth manipulated the election so as to defeat the complainant; excluding the votes given by colored citizens from the count, &c.; the approval by the governor of the act of November 20; the appointment of De Feriet and others, canvassers under the said act; that said De Feriet board pretended to make a canvass, and that proclamation thereof was made, &c.; that by law it was the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to Vigers, clerk of the house, and Merritt, secretary of the senate, a list of the persons elected to the legislature; they being the only persons competent to organize the legislature; that Wharton, as secretary of state, had furnished to the secretary of the senate the list of persons declared by the De Feriet board to be elected, and that it was the intention of Merritt to organize the senate accordingly; and the same as to the house of representatives; and that the legislature, if so organized, would deprive the complainant of his rights, &c.; that Bovee is the lawful secretary of state, and Wharton has no right to said office; that the metropolitan police are acting in collusion and will aid the fraudulent purpose, &c.

The bill prays injunction against Warmoth, restraining him from interfering with the organization of the legislature on the 9th day of January, 1873, or on any future day, &c.; and from aiding any person to a seat not certified by Bovee; and an injunction against the police from interfering, &c.; and against the members of the legislature certified by the De Feriet board; and against Merritt, secretary of the senate, restraining him from placing on the roll any name not certified by Bovee; same as to the house of representatives against Bovee, restraining the clerk from receiving any returns except from the Lynch board.

The prayer for relief is as follows:

"And may it also please your honors to order and adjudge that the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, within a period of time to be fixed by your honors, do make and deposit in this honorable court, in the office of the clerk thereof, full, true, and exact sworn copies of each and every paper, document, affidavit, tally-sheet, list, sworn statement or certificate, or letter which he may have received, or may have come into his possession from any commissioner or commissioners, or any officer concerned in the control or management of said election, or who had any duties to perform in connection therewith, and from all supervisors or assistant supervisors of election, in any manner relating to said election, in order that the same may be beyond the power of destruction by the said defendant, Warmoth, and his said confederates, and in order that the same may be saved to your orator as evidence to enable him to establish his right to the office as aforesaid in any judicial proceedings which he may be compelled to institute in this court to establish and vindicate the same, and that the same may be also preserved for use or proof in support of your orator's bill in this behalf, and to establish his right to the relief by him herein and hereby prayed for; and that the said evidence, documents, &c., to be produced remain on file in this court, in order that the same may be preserved as evidence in any action which your orator may be required to institute in this court to establish his right to said office."

The bill also contained prayer for process and for general relief.

The court granted a rule to show cause, returnable on the 11th December, 1872, why injunctions pendente lite should not be allowed as prayed for, and granted restraining order in the mean time to the extent and effect prayed for in the bill; and for the purpose of explaining the extent and scope of the order directed the clerk to attach thereto a copy of the prayer for injunction, which order and copy attached are as follows:

"Circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Louisiana, in equity.

"C. C. ANTOINE
vs.
"H. C. WARMOTH ET AL. } No. 6861.

"Restraining order.—Issued December 7, 1872.

"Whereas the plaintiff herein has this day filed and exhibited his bill of complaint against the said defendant, H. C. Warmoth, and the other defendants named in said bill of complaint, and has therein prayed that injunctions, pendente lite, issue against the defendants therein, and that a restraining order be also issued restraining the said defendants as prayed for in said bill from doing or permitting to be done the acts in said bill complained of:

"Now, therefore, on motion of J. R. Beckwith and E. C. Billings, solicitors for complainant, it is ordered that the defendants named in said bill do show cause on the 11th day of December, 1872, why injunctions, pendente lite, should not be allowed as prayed for. It is further ordered that said defendants, each and every one of them, be, and are hereby, commanded and restrained to the extent and effect as in said bill of complaint prayed [the clerk will attach to this order a copy of the prayer for injunction as set forth in said bill of complaint] until the hearing and determination of said rule for injunction and until the further order of the court in the premises.

"E. H. DURELL, Judge.

"A true and correct copy of the original order on file in this cause.

"F. A. WOOLFLEY, Clerk.

"Wherefore your orator humbly prays that your honor will grant unto him all just and proper relief in the premises; that you will allow and grant unto him the most gracious writ of injunction issued under the seal of this honorable court, directed to the said defendant, Henry C. Warmoth, enjoining and restraining him from in any manner, directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other officer of the State, city, or parish, or through any other person, from controlling or attempting to control, interfering with, or attempting to interfere with, the organization of either branch of this general assembly of the State of Louisiana, called to assemble on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1872, or that may be called to assemble at any future day, and from directly or indirectly, either by himself or through any other person, preventing any person claiming to be a member of said general assembly from having full and free ingress and egress to and from the place, building, and room of that branch of said general assembly of which he may claim to be a member, or from issuing any written or oral order or instruction, request, or direction, calculated or designed to directly or indirectly control or interfere with the organization of either of the branches of said general assembly, or calculated or designed to prevent any person from having free access thereto, who claims to be a member thereof, and from doing any act, or from giving any order, direction, or making any request which may directly or indirectly prevent or hinder any person from being present and taking part in the organization of said senate, called to convene on the said 9th day of December, or at any future day, who may be returned as a member thereof by the board of returning officers, composed of the said Henry C. Warmoth, George E. Bovee, James Longstreet, Jacob Hawkins, and John Lynch, and whose name shall also be transmitted by the said George E. Bovee, secretary of state, to Charles H. Merritt, the secretary of the senate of the last general assembly, and placed by the said Merritt upon the roll of said senate, so to be convened, and from in any manner, directly or indirectly, aiding or abetting any person who is not so returned by said returning board as a member of said senate, so to be convened, and whose name is not so transmitted as a member elected to said senate, and is not so placed upon the roll of said senate, from participating in the organization of said senate, and from doing any act, or from giving any order, direction, or making any request which may directly or indirectly prevent or hinder any person from being present and taking part in the organization of said house, called to convene on the said 9th day of December, or that may be called to convene at any future day, who may be returned as a member thereof by the board of returning officers, composed of the said Henry C. Warmoth, George E. Bovee, James Longstreet, Jacob Hawkins, and John Lynch, and whose name shall also be transmitted by the said George E. Bovee, secretary of state, to William Vigers, the secretary of the house of the last general assembly, and placed by the said William Vigers upon the roll of said house so to be convened, and from in any manner directly or indirectly aiding or abetting any person who is not so returned by said returning board as a member of said house, so to be convened, and whose name is not so transmitted as a member elected to said house, and is not so placed upon the roll of said house, from participating in the organization of said house.

"Except that the said Henry C. Warmoth is not hereby prohibited from participating in the canvass and return of the members elected to the said branches of said general assembly, so to be convened, provided he do the same in conjunction with and in the presence of said George E. Bovee, James Longstreet, Jacob Hawkins, and John Lynch, but not otherwise. And that he further be enjoined and restrained from in any manner obstructing or hindering the said William Vigers, clerk of the house of representatives, or the said secretary of the senate, Charles H. Merritt, in the free and unobstructed discharge of their duties, or in full and complete obedience to the orders of this court, and from suspending, removing them, or either of them, from office, or appointing or ordering, or abetting any other person or persons to perform any act which by law or the orders of this court devolves on either the said Vigers, Merritt, or upon George E. Bovee, secretary of state, and from recognizing any validity in any act done or performed by any other person or persons pretending to act in the office or capacity of either of said officers.

"And that a writ of injunction may also issue, directed to A. S. Badger, chief of metropolitan police, and to each member of the board of the metropolitan police, and to the board of metropolitan police, enjoining and restraining them and each of them from interfering in any manner with the organization of either branch of the general assembly to be convened on the 9th of December, A. D. 1872, or at any time thereafter, except to preserve the peace, and to prevent no person from having access to either of the halls of said houses who is certified by George E. Bovee as being a member-elect of the same.

"And that writs of injunction also issue, directed to the said E. Booth, A. Voorhies, A. J. Lewis, B. F. Jonas, T. B. Stamps, D. S. Cage, R. C. White, T. C. Anderson, J. M. Thompson, E. S. Weber, A. S. Herron, Robert Worrall, O. H. Brewster, E. M. Graham, J. W. McDonald, A. H. Leonard, C. J. C. Puckett, James G. White, J. F. Kelly, enjoining and restraining them and each of them from participating in any manner in the organization of the senate to be convened on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1872, or at any time thereafter, or from doing any act or thing toward, in, or about the organization of said senate, either by casting a vote or otherwise, unless his name shall be and appear on the list of names of members of said senate transmitted to the secretary of the same by George E. Bovee, secretary of state, as having been elected thereto.

"CLERK'S OFFICE.

"I, Francis A. Woolfley, clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the fifth circuit and district of Louisiana, do hereby certify that the foregoing pages contain and form a full, complete, true, and perfect transcript of the record and proceedings had, except entries from minutes of continuances, &c., in the case of C. C. Antoine vs. H. C. Warmoth et al., No. 6851 of the docket, so far as the same now remains of record or on file in said court.

"Witness my hand and the seal of said court, at the city of New Orleans, this 3d day of January, A. D. 1873.

"[SEAL.] F. A. WOOLFLEY, Clerk."

Here was a restraining order, having the force of an injunction, issued for no purpose under heaven except to control the organization of the legislature and compel the seating of those members who had been returned and certified to by the Lynch board, and exclude those who had been certified by the De Feriet board.

When we consider that the act of Congress under which this proceeding was instituted by express words excludes members of the State legislature from the right to maintain any proceedings in a Federal court to obtain their seats, even when they have been defeated and deprived of their rights, because citizens have been denied the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and that the State-house was held by Federal troops under the unlawful and void order of Judge Durell, hereinbefore set forth, which order commanded the marshal to prevent "all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said De Feriet board," we can comprehend the full force and effect of the additional restraining order in the Antoine case.

It was claimed that section 15 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1871, which provides "that the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States shall extend to all cases in law or equity arising under the provisions of this act, or the act hereby amended," had the effect to repeal the exception in regard to "members of a State legislature" in section 23 of the act of May 31, 1870.

But we think this proposition cannot be maintained. The case of a member of a State legislature claiming his seat was not a case arising under the former act, because it was expressly excluded by that act. It was not a case arising under the latter act, because there is no provision of that act applicable to such a case, or recognizing any purpose of Congress to extend the jurisdiction of circuit courts to the cases excepted in the twenty-third section of the original act. It must be borne in mind that if the fifteenth section of the latter act extended the jurisdiction of the circuit court over the election of members of a State legislature, it did so as to members of Congress, which would be clearly unconstitutional, because the Constitution makes each House of Congress the exclusive judge of the election, returns, and qualification of its own members. The constitution of every State of the Union contains similar provisions in regard to the houses of the legislature of the State. The intention of Congress to pass a law in violation of the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States cannot be maintained unless that intention be expressed in words so plain as to admit of no other construction. There is no provision of the latter act compelling or justifying such a construction. On the contrary, remedies are given by the latter act which fully explain the purpose of that portion of section 15 above quoted, without holding it to be a repeal of the exceptions in section 23 of the former act.

And if a member of a State legislature cannot maintain a suit in the Federal courts to secure his right to sit in the legislature, it can require no argument to show that the lieutenant-governor cannot maintain a suit in the Federal courts on behalf of a hundred such members.

Indeed, it is impossible not to see that this bill was filed, and the restraining order thereon was issued, for the sole purpose of accomplishing, what no Federal court has the jurisdiction to do, the organization of a State legislature.

And your committee cannot refrain from expressing their astonishment that any judge of the United States should thus unwarrantably have interfered with a State government, and know no language too strong to express their condemnation of such a proceeding.

It is the opinion of your committee that but for the unjustifiable interference of Judge Durell, whose orders were executed by United States troops, the canvass made by the De Feriet board, and promulgated by the governor, declaring McEnery to have been elected governor, &c., and also declaring who had been elected to the legislature, would have been acquiesced in by the people, and that government would have entered quietly upon the exercise of the sovereign power of the State. But the proceedings of Judge Durell, and the support given to him by United States troops, resulted in establishing the authority de facto of Kellogg and his associates in State offices, and of the persons declared by the Lynch board to be elected to the legislature. We have already seen that the proceedings of that board cannot be sustained without disregarding all the principles of law applicable to the subject, and ignoring the distinction between good faith and fraud.

Your committee are, therefore, led to the conclusion that if the election held in November, 1872, be not absolutely void for frauds committed therein, McEnery and his associates in State offices, and the persons certified as members of the legislature by the De Feriet board, ought to be recognized as the legal government of the State. Considering all the facts established before your committee, there seems no escape from the alternative that the McEnery government must be recognized by Congress, or Congress must provide for a re-election. And this brings us to consider—

1. Whether the election of November last is void for fraud; and
2. If void, has Congress the authority to order a re-election?

First. A careful consideration of the testimony convinces us that, had the election of November last been fairly conducted and returned, Kellogg and his associates, and a legislature composed of the same political party, would have been elected. The colored population of that State outnumbers the white, and in the last election the colored voters were almost unanimous in their support of the Republican ticket. Governor Warmoth, who was elected by the Republicans of the State in 1868, had passed into opposition, and held in his hands the entire machinery of the election. He appointed the supervisors of registration, and they appointed the commissioners of election. The testimony shows a systematic purpose on the part of those conducting the election to throw every possible difficulty in the way of the colored voters in the matter of registration. The polling places are not fixed by law, and at the last election they were purposely established by those conducting the election at places inconvenient of access, in those parishes which were known to be largely Republican; so that, in some instances, voters had to travel over twenty miles to reach the polls. The election was generally conducted in quiet, and was, perhaps, unusually free from disturbance or riot. Governor Warmoth, who was the master spirit in the whole proceeding, seems to have relied upon craft rather than violence to carry the State for McEnery. In the canvass of votes which determined the McEnery government to be elected the votes of several Republican parishes were rejected.

The testimony shows that leading and sagacious politicians of the State, who were acting with Warmoth, entertained the opinion before the election that Warmoth's control of the election machinery was equivalent to 20,000 votes; and we are satisfied by the testimony that this opinion was well founded. We believe that had registration been accessible to all, and polling places been properly established, the result of the election would have been entirely different. And although we cannot approve of such a canvass as that made by the Lynch board, who seem to have acted upon the principle of "fighting the devil with fire," and circumventing fraud by fraud, and cannot say that Kellogg's government was elected, nevertheless we believe that Kellogg's government was defeated, and the popular voice reversed, by the fraudulent manipulation of the election.

If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State, and McMillen, if regularly elected by that legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg. But your committee believe that this would be recognizing a government based upon fraud, in defiance of the wishes and intention of the voters of that State.

Second. If the Senate shall concur with us in the opinion that the frauds committed in the election are sufficient to annul it, then it will be necessary for the Senate to consider whether Congress has the power to order a re-election.

This is one of the most important and delicate questions that can arise under the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution, article 4, section 4, provides:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government," &c.

This provision of the Constitution requires that the United States shall guarantee to every State two things: First, a government; and second, a government which is republican in form.

What is meant by the term "government" in this part of the Constitution? That man or body of men, in any community, who exercise sovereign power constitute the government of that community; and the best definition of a republican government ever given in the English tongue is that given by President Lincoln: "A government of the people, by the people, for the people." A standard author thus defines sovereignty:

"In every society, not being in a state of nature or a state of anarchy, some person or persons must possess the supreme or sovereign power.

"The marks by which the possession of the sovereign power may be distinguished are mainly two, the one positive and the other negative, viz:

"1. A habit of obedience to some determinate person or persons by the community which he or they assume to govern.

"2. The absence of a habit of obedience, on the part of the same person or persons, to any person or government."

This definition furnishes us a criterion for determining whether there is at present any government in the State of Louisiana. And, judging the condition of things by this rule, it is impossible to say that the State has any government whatever. The McEnery government, so called, approaches more nearly a government de jure, and the Kellogg government a government de facto.

The Kellogg government is in possession of the State-house, the seal, archives, and records of the State, and its empty treasury. There are two bodies of men in that State, one claiming to be the senate and the other the house of representatives, who recognize Kellogg and his associates as the officers of the State. But there is not, and never has been, a quorum of both houses who have any pretense of having been elected to their seats. This pretended legislature is daily passing laws, and Kellogg is approving or vetoing them. This is the legislature which pretended to elect Ray to fill the unexpired portion of Kellogg's term in the Senate. McEnery and his associates claim to be the rightful officers of the State, and two other bodies of men claim to be the senate and house of representatives of the State. And this is the legislature which pretended to elect McMillen to fill Kellogg's unexpired term in the Senate.

But it is claimed that the validity of the Kellogg government has been established by a decision of the supreme court of that State, and that this question is therefore precluded. Before proceeding to consider the case relied upon, it may be well to recall some general principles applicable to this subject.

In Luther vs. Borden, 7 Howard, 1, the Supreme Court had occasion to examine a case growing out of the Dorr rebellion in Rhode Island. The action was a trespass for certain acts done by the defendant under authority of the charter government, after the declaration of martial law by that government. The plaintiff set forth the facts constituting the injury complained of, and the defendant pleaded the existence of a rebellion, the declaration of martial law, and that the acts complained of were done under orders of a military superior while martial law was in force. The plaintiff replied that the act declaring martial law was invalid, because the government which adopted it was not the legal government of Rhode Island. That the people of the State had previously adopted a new constitution, under which the legal government of the State was organized, and therefore the pretended declaration of martial law was the act of a defunct government and absolutely void. The issue thus formed raised the question: Which was the legal government of Rhode Island at the time the alleged trespass was committed?

After stating this to be the question presented by the case, the court, by C. J. Taney, say:

"Indeed, we do not see how the question could be tried and judicially decided in the State court. Judicial power presupposes an established government capable of enacting laws and enforcing their execution, and of appointing judges to expound and administer them. The acceptance of the judicial office is a recognition of the authority of the government from which it is derived. And if the authority of that government is assailed and overthrown, the power of its courts and other officers is annulled with it. And if a State court should enter upon the inquiry proposed in this case, and it should come to the conclusion that the government under which it acted had been put aside and displaced by an opposing government, it would cease to be a court, and be incapable of pronouncing a judicial decision upon the question it undertook to try. If it decides at all as a court, it necessarily affirms the existence and authority of the government under which it is exercising judicial power."

Much reliance is placed upon some detached expressions in this opinion, which, unless considered with reference to the facts, might seem to conflict with the paragraph above quoted.

The Dorr government only pretended to exist for about one year, and in that year the acts were committed of which the plaintiff complained. In 1843 the people of that State adopted a constitution under which the government of the State was organized, which was universally admitted to be the legitimate government, supplanting all former government of the State; and after the new government was established, a government which was altogether free from question, Dorr was brought to trial for acts done by him—not under the government of the State existing when the indictment was found, but during the year when the question of legitimacy was in dispute between the Dorr government and the charter government. In this cause, under the new and unquestioned government, Dorr, in his defense, set up, as a fact, that the Dorr government was the real government, when, &c., and that he did the things charged to be treason in the capacity of governor, as he lawfully might.

The court, that is, the court of the new government, under the constitution of 1843, decided that the Dorr government, so called, was a fraud, and not a government. And it was of the decisions of this court that Chief-Justice Taney was speaking when he employed the language now relied upon to show that the supreme court of Louisiana, by recognizing one of the rival governments, now contending for supremacy in that State, can settle the question so as to preclude the United States from entering upon that field of inquiry.

The Chief-Justice, to guard against the use of his language now sought to be made, says:

"It is worthy of remark, however, when we are referring to the authority of the State decisions, that the trial of Thomas W. Dorr took place after the constitution of 1843 went into operation. The judges who decided that case held their authority under that constitution," &c.

Bearing these principles in mind, we come to consider the case decided by the supreme court of Louisiana, which is The State ex rel. P. H. Morgan vs. J. H. Kennard. Your committee know nothing of this case except from the opinions delivered by the judges therein, the record not being before us.

In November, 1872, Judge Howe, of the supreme court, resigned, and Governor Warmoth commissioned J. H. Kennard to fill the vacancy. After the Kellogg legislature was organized under Judge Durell's injunctions, enforced by United States troops, the house of representatives of that legislature pretended to impeach and suspend Governor Warmoth, whereupon Pinchback, who had been elected president of the senate in place of Lieutenant-Governor Dunn, deceased, which under the constitution made him lieutenant-governor, proclaimed himself acting governor in place of Warmoth, impeached and suspended. Pinchback afterward nominated Morgan, who was confirmed by the senate, to fill the same vacancy.

On the 15th of January, 1873, the Kellogg legislature passed an act entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in contestation between persons claiming a judicial office." This act provides that, if the incumbent shall refuse to vacate the office, the person "so commissioned shall have the right to proceed by rule. * * * Such rule shall be taken contradictorily with such incumbent, and shall be made returnable within twenty-four hours, and shall be tried immediately, without jury, and by preference over all other matters or causes depending in such court, and the judgment thereon shall be signed the same day of rendition.

"That either party to such rule may take an appeal from the judgment thereon, but such an appeal shall be applied for within one legal day from the rendition of the judgment on such rule, and shall be made returnable to the supreme court within two days.

"The appeal shall be taken up in the supreme court by preference over all other cases, immediately on the application of either party, and the judgment thereon shall become final after the expiration of one legal day, whether judicial or not."

Whatever else may be said of this law, it cannot be said that it was intended to delay the administration of justice. A decision rendered at 11.55 Saturday night, as it might be, would have to be appealed from within five minutes after its rendition, or the right of appeal would be gone forever.

But your committee, for the purpose of this report, will concede the constitutionality and validity of this act.

This act was approved on the 15th day of January, 1873, and on the next day the plaintiff in some subordinate court filed the following motion or rule:

"On motion of A. P. Field, attorney-general of the State of Louisiana, herein appearing upon the relation of Philip Hickey Morgan, a resident of the parish of Orleans, and upon suggesting and giving the court to understand, and be informed as follows, to wit:

"That said P. H. Morgan was nominated by the acting governor of the State to the senate thereof, to fill the vacancy of associate justice of the supreme court of Louisiana; that his said nomination was confirmed; that he was commissioned thereto on the 4th of January, 1873; that he has taken and subscribed the oath required by law; that he is entitled and empowered to execute and fill the duties of said office according to law, and to have and to hold said office, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereof;

"And on further suggesting that John H. Kennard, also a resident of said parish, unlawfully holds said office and executes the duties thereof, and claims the right to the said office, and to the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereof,

"It is ordered, That said John H. Kennard show cause, on Saturday, January 18, 1873, at 11 o'clock a. m., why it should not be forthwith adjudged and decreed that he is unlawfully holding and exercising the duties of said office of associate justice of the supreme court of the State of Louisiana, and the said P. H. Morgan be decreed and adjudged entitled thereto."

On the 18th of January, 1873, the defendant filed the following exception, to wit:

"And now comes John H. Kennard, and excepts that there has been no citation issued herein, or served on him in this case, and prays to be hence dismissed with costs."

On the same day the following exception and answer was also filed, to wit:

"Now comes John H. Kennard, defendant in this suit, and excepts to the rule herein taken by A. P. Field, attorney-general, on the relation of P. H. Morgan, on the ground that said proceeding by rule, in manner and form as set forth in said rule, is not authorized by law; and further, that the act of the 15th January, 1873, entitled 'An act to regulate proceedings in contestations between persons claiming a judicial office,' as to its first section is unconstitutional and void, not being in conformity to the title of said act; and further that said act is prospective, and does not apply to pending litigation. And further, that said act in relation to sections 2 and 3 is unconstitutional, as it authorizes proceedings which amount to a denial of justice. And further, that if said act is to be construed as applicable to suits instituted prior to its passage, it is retroactive and void, because in violation of article 110 of the constitution. In case these exceptions be overruled, and not otherwise, for answer to said rule this respondent avers that he was duly appointed by the governor of the State to the office of associate justice of the supreme court of the State of Louisiana, on the 3d day of December, 1872, vice W. W. Howe, resigned during the recess of the senate, and that on the same day he was duly qualified and took possession of said office, having complied with all legal requirements, and his term of office has not yet expired."

On the same day (Saturday, January 18, 1873), these exceptions were overruled by the court, and the case was continued for trial till Monday, the 20th January, 1873, on which day the defendant filed the following supplemental answer, to wit:

"Now comes in J. H. Kennard, and for further answer prays for a trial by jury, and pleads that the said act of the legislature under which the relator, P. H. Morgan, claims to proceed is null and void, as violative of section 1, article 14, of the Constitution of the United States, which forbids any State from making any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of its citizens, and prohibits any State from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or to deny to any person, within its jurisdiction, the legal protection of its laws; and if said act is void, this court has no jurisdiction to proceed by rule in the manner and form as set forth in said rule."

On the same day the prayer for trial by jury was refused, the case was tried, and judgment entered for the plaintiff. The defendant immediately took an appeal.

The only question to be settled by this suit was whether Morgan, the relator, or Kennard, the defendant, was entitled to hold the office of associate justice of the supreme court in place of Howe, resigned; and the idea that in disposing of this single question the court had any authority or jurisdiction to determine as between Warmoth and Pinchback, neither of whom was a party to the cause, which of them was entitled to exercise the office of governor, and between two or three hundred persons, the Kellogg legislature, and as many more, the McEnery legislature, not one of whom was a party to the suit, which of the rival bodies was authorized to exercise the legislative power of that State, is too preposterous a proposition to require serious refutation.

The utmost that can be claimed for this decision is that the court recognizes the Kellogg government as a government de facto, which may be conceded without touching the question whether it has been established by a regular election or set up and established by the usurpation of the individuals composing it, sustained by the military forces of the United States.

The question we are considering is not a judicial question and no judicial court can determine it. The question is political in its character, and, so far as the United States have to deal with it, must be determined by the political department of this Government. We must therefore investigate the facts, and no decision of any branch of a pretended State government can estop us in this inquiry.

The people of the State are about equally divided in sentiment in regard to these two pretended governments. The people of New Orleans, which is the seat of government, support the McEnery government, two to one; and it is believed that if Federal support were withdrawn from the Kellogg government it would be immediately supplanted by the McEnery government. The people of the State, as a body, neither support nor submit to either government. Neither government can collect taxes, for the people have no assurance that payment to one will prevent collection by the other government. Business is interrupted, and public confidence destroyed; and should Congress adjourn without making provision for the case, one of two things must result: Either collision and bloodshed between the adherents of the two governments, or the President must continue the support of Federal authority to the Kellogg government. The alternative of civil war or the maintenance by military power of a State government not elected is exceedingly embarrassing; and in the opinion of your committee the best solution of this difficulty is for Congress to order a re-election, and provide for holding it under authority of the United States; to the end that a government may be elected by the people, to which they will submit, or which, in case of disturbance, the United States can honestly maintain.

Your committee have prepared a bill which they believe will insure an honest election, and result in the establishment of a republican form of government in that State, and your committee recommend its passage.

We are aware that ordering an election in a State upon the ground that an election which has been held is void for fraud is an exercise of power which ought never to be undertaken by Congress without stern necessity. It will be said that if such power resides in Congress it may be exercised improperly. This is true. But the same may be said of every power conferred upon a government. The people, in adopting the Constitution of the United States, saw fit to confer upon the General Government authority to guarantee to each of the States a government republican in form. This undoubtedly confers the power to determine whether a particular State has a government, and, if so, whether it be republican in form. There is no doubt Congress might to-morrow, as a question of mere power, declare that the government of Massachusetts is not republican in form, and set up in its place a government which it might determine to be so. This would, of course, be a great abuse of this power. When a judge has jurisdiction to decide a cause, he has as much power to decide it wrong as right; and an erroneous judgment is as valid as any other, until vacated or reversed by competent authority. In exercising this power Congress should act with great caution and prudence. The clamor usually raised by those who are defeated in an election should not, and would not, induce Congress to interfere. Ordinarily, even a government elected by fraud, but going quietly into the exercise of power, and submitted to by the people, may better be left to fill its brief term than be interfered with by Congress. But when the frauds committed are so glaring and widespread as to create public discontent in the State, and the organization of two rival governments threatening civil war, and it is manifest that neither government has been fairly elected, this power of the National Government must be regarded as wise and salutary. It cannot be maintained that its prudent exercise violates the rights of the States, because the States, for their own protection and security, have conferred the power upon the National Government; and this Government cannot refuse or neglect to exercise it, in a proper case, without disregarding the obligation which the Constitution has devolved upon it. We think the melancholy condition of the people of Louisiana, who are substantially in a state of anarchy, makes it the duty of Congress to act in the premises.

Therefore your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That there is no State government at present existing in the State of Louisiana.

2. Resolved, That neither John Ray nor W. L. McMillen is entitled to a seat in the Senate, neither having been elected by the legislature of the State of Louisiana.

And your committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

MATT. H. CARPENTER.
JOHN A. LOGAN.
J. L. ALCORN.
H. B. ANTHONY.

VIEWS OF MR. TRUMBULL.

The undersigned, unable to agree to the recommendations and some of the conclusions of the majority of the committee, asks leave to present the following views:

He agrees with the majority that portions of the Louisiana election law are in conflict with the constitution of the State; that Wharton was de facto secretary of state, and, as such, ex officio a member of the returning board; that under the statute the Warmoth-Wharton board was the legal and rightful board to canvass the official returns; that it was illegally restrained by United States District Judge Durell from making such canvass; that by the election law approved November 20, 1872, all previous returning boards were abolished; that the De Feriet-Wiltz board was authorized under that act to complete the canvass which had been begun under the Wharton board; that said De Feriet board did canvass the official returns, and the result was duly proclaimed by the governor December 4; that Herron ceased to be the secretary of state when Wharton was appointed and took possession of the office; that the Lynch returning board never had authority to examine the official returns, and never had any to examine; that neither Kellogg nor any of the persons returned as elected to State offices by the Lynch board were elected according to the official returns; that neither the Pinchback nor the Kellogg State government could have been set up, nor the persons returned by the Lynch board as elected to the legislature have assembled and organized as a legislature, but for the unauthorized and usurped authority exercised by Judge Durell, supported by United States troops.

On the contrary, that but for such illegal and unwarranted interference, the McEnery State government and legislature would have been peacefully inaugurated, and that there has been no decision of the supreme court of Louisiana declaring the Kellogg State government and legislature legal in any case over which said court had jurisdiction to make such decision. The undersigned cannot, however, agree, because a United States district judge, supported by United States troops, has, by usurpation, caused a governor and a legislature not elected by the people to be installed in power in a State, that such usurpation authorizes Congress to intervene and order a new election in the State when there is in existence in such State a governor, other State officers, and members of the legislature duly elected by the people. All that is necessary in such a case is for the Senate to recognize the legitimate legislature by admitting to his seat in the Senate the person they have chosen to represent the State, and to forbid the use of United States troops to carry into effect the void orders of a usurping judge. The whole trouble in Louisiana has grown out of the illegal interference of the United States authorities, civil and military, with the internal affairs of the State.

According to the official returns, the fusion State ticket, headed by McEnery for governor, received an average majority of about 10,000 votes, and a large majority of the persons elected to the legislature were of the same party; and but for the illegal interference of the United States authorities, as is stated in the report of the majority, the McEnery government would have been peacefully inaugurated.

How skillfully the plan was laid to overthrow the legitimate State government, set aside an election, and inaugurate the Pinchback and Kellogg administrations and legislatures, and how well Judge Durell was supported in all these revolutionary and illegal proceedings by other United States officials, will appear by reference to a few facts disclosed in the evidence. The legislature had been called by Governor Warmoth to assemble December 9; December 3 the following dispatch was sent from Washington:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,
United States Marshal, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

This dispatch, so far as the evidence shows, was not responsive to any call for troops; there had been no resistance to any process of the United States courts, nor does it appear that any was threatened. R. H. Jackson, a captain in the First Artillery, United States Army, testified that he went to New Orleans on the night of December 5 with two batteries of his regiment and eighty-six men.

The same night, December 5, between 9 and 11 o'clock, Judge Durell, at his private lodgings, issued his order, which, for want of jurisdiction, was void, and entitled to no respect from anybody, directing the United States marshal forthwith to take possession of the State-house, to hold the same until the further order of the court, and prevent all unlawful assemblage of persons therein, having reference to the persons returned as elected to the legislature according to the official returns. Captain Jackson testifies that he took possession of the State-house at about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 6th, with instructions to take and hold it under the direction of the United States marshal, and to act in obedience to his orders. He further testified that he was not stationed in the State-house to prevent riots, but to hold the building, and that if a riot had occurred in front of the building he would not have interfered. He posted two soldiers at the entrance door, who guarded it with crossed bayonets, and suffered no one to enter the building except by permission of the United States marshal, one of whose deputies was at all times present. These troops continued to occupy the State-house for more than six weeks, until January 21, and it is manifest, from the whole testimony, that they were not there to preserve the peace, but to carry out the illegal orders of Judge Durell, and prevent the legally elected members of the legislature from assembling and organizing.

Can it be that the Attorney-General sent his telegram, and that Captain Jackson was ordered to New Orleans with his batteries, in anticipation of the unauthorized orders of United States District Judge Durell to seize the State-house and prevent the legislature from organizing except with such persons as he should declare legally elected; or that the Attorney-General supposed it the duty of the Executive to support with the military power the decrees and mandates of United States courts issued without jurisdiction, and consequently void? In no conceivable case could a United States court or judge have jurisdiction to issue orders such as were promulgated by Judge Durell. As well might a United States district judge make an order to seize the Federal Capitol and prevent all members of Congress from entering the building except such as he should declare elected. Would the President direct General Emory to furnish the troops to execute such an order? He has no more right to aid the execution of an order of court, void for want of jurisdiction, than the judge has to make it. It is his duty to discriminate between the orders of courts which may be lawful and those which must necessarily be void for want of jurisdiction. Had the troops been withdrawn when the character of the orders they were enforcing was made known, it might be inferred that the Attorney-General did not intend they should be used for such a purpose; but they held possession of the State-house for more than six weeks.

The next telegram was from Casey, United States collector of the port of New Orleans, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, December 6, 1872.

President GRANT:

Marshal Packard took possession of State-house this morning, at an early hour, with military posse, in obedience to a mandate of circuit court, to prevent illegal assemblage of persons under guise of authority of Warmoth's returning board, in violation of injunction of circuit court. Decree of court just rendered declares Warmoth's returning board illegal, and orders the returns of the election to be forthwith placed before the legal board. This board will probably soon declare the result of the election of officers of State and legislature, which will meet in State-house with protection of court. The decree was sweeping in its provisions, and if enforced will save the Republican majority and give Louisiana Republican legislature and State government, and check Warmoth in his usurpations. Warmoth's Democratic supporters are becoming disgusted with him, and charging that his usurpations are ruining their cause.

JAS. F. CASEY.

What a spectacle is this, to see a State legislature set up and made Republican by the usurped authority of a United States district judge.

The next dispatches are as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, December 6, 1872.

Attorney-General WILLIAMS, Washington, D. C.:

Returning board provided by election of '70, under which election was held, and which United States court sustains, promulgated in official journal this morning result of election of legislature: House stands 77 Republicans, 32 Democratic; senate 28 Republicans, 8 Democratic. Board counted ballots attached to affidavits of colored persons wrongfully prevented from voting, filed with chief supervisor.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

Hon. GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.:

Returning board has officially promulgated in official journal this morning the result of the election for State officers. Kellogg's majority, 18,861.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

The returning board here referred to is the illegal Lynch board, which never had an official return before it. Lynch, in testifying before the committee, said:

"We took all the evidence we had before us, and our knowledge of the parishes and their political complexion, and we then decided.

"By Mr. CARPENTER:

"Q. You estimated it, then, upon the basis of what you thought the vote ought to have been?

"A. Yes, sir. That was just the fact, and I think on the whole we were pretty correct."

Much of what Lynch called evidence was shown to be newspaper reports, letters, and forged affidavits. Then followed in quick succession the following dispatches:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

Hon. GEO. H. WILLIAMS, Attorney-General:

Governor Warmoth has been impeached by vote of 58 to 6. Warmoth's legislature returned by his board has made no pretense of a session.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, LA., December 9, 1872

Hon. GEO. H. WILLIAMS, Attorney-General:

Senate, by vote of 17 to 5, have resolved into high court of impeachment. Senator Harris elected president of the senate, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback being now governor.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

Hon. GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.:

Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback qualified and took possession of the governor's office to-night. Senate organized as high court of impeachment, Chief-Justice Ludeling presiding, and adjourned to meet Monday next. It is believed that all the Democrats, members of general assembly, will qualify and take seats to-morrow.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

We have the honor to transmit to your excellency the following concurrent resolution of both houses of the general assembly and to request an early reply:

"Whereas the general assembly is now convened, in compliance with the call of the governor, and certain evil-disposed persons are reported to be forming combinations to disturb the public peace, defy the lawful authority, and the State is threatened with violence: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana in general assembly convened, That the President of the United States be requested to afford the protection guaranteed each State by the Constitution of the United States when threatened with domestic violence, and that the presiding officers of the general assembly transmit this resolution immediately by telegraph or otherwise to the President of the United States."

Adopted in general assembly convened this 9th day of December, A. D. 1872.

P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
Lieutenant-Governor, and President of the Senate.
CHAS. W. LOWELL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1872.

President GRANT:

Having taken the oath of office and being in the possession of the gubernatorial office, it devolves upon me to urge the necessity of a favorable consideration of the request of the general assembly as conveyed in the concurrent resolution of this day telegraphed to you requesting the protection of the United States Government. Be pleased to send the necessary orders to General Emory. This seems to me a necessary measure of precaution, although all is quiet here.

P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
Lieutenant-Governor, Acting Governor of Louisiana.

This pretended legislature, made up of persons returned as members by the Lynch board, perfected its organization, impeached the governor, suspended him from office, and installed Pinchback in his place. All this was done on the same day and within a few hours, and that, too, in disregard of a statute of the State, which, as stated to the committee, provides that the officer sought to be impeached shall be summoned before a committee of the house of representatives; shall have permission to cross-examine witnesses that are brought against him; shall have citation of the witnesses he may desire to summon; that the house of representatives shall act only in case the committee report in favor of the impeachment; that if the committee report adversely to it, that is itself an acquittal, and the officer cannot ever be arraigned on the charges then reported on. No such proceedings were had in this case.

It may not be amiss to remark in this connection that each of the members of the Lynch board was immediately rewarded by Pinchback with a lucrative office, except Lynch, and his son was given an appointment.

While these revolutionary proceedings were being enacted, Judge Durell was busy fulminating new injunctions and restraining orders, and calling Governor Warmoth and his associates of the legal returning board before him to answer for alleged contempts of his void orders.

The Pinchback administration and legislature thus set up was so entirely without the moral support and respect of the people that it was in great danger of falling to pieces unless it could get the further support of the Federal administration backed by a larger military force. So well was this understood that Pinchback and United States officials at New Orleans kept the telegraph busy calling on the President for help and additional forces. The two batteries and eighty-six men under Captain Jackson were not deemed sufficient to protect Pinchback and his legislature from the just indignation of an outraged people. Hence the cries for help which were continually being sent to Washington. The following are specimens of some of these cries:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, LA., December 11, 1872.

Hon. GEO. H. WILLIAMS, Attorney-General:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch. May I suggest that the commanding general be authorized to furnish troops upon my requisition upon him for the protection of the legislature and the gubernatorial office? The moral effect would be great, and in my judgment tend greatly to allay any trouble likely to grow out of the recent inflammatory proclamation of Warmoth. I beg you to believe that I will act in all things with discretion.

P. B. S. PINCHBACK,
Lieutenant-Governor, Acting Governor.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 11, 1872.

President GRANT:

Parties interested in the success of the Democratic party, particularly the New Orleans Times, are making desperate efforts to array the people against us. Old citizens are dragooned into an opposition they do not feel, and pressure is hourly growing; our members are poor and adversaries are rich, and offers are made that are difficult for them to withstand. There is danger that they will break our quorum. The delay in placing troops at disposal of Governor Pinchback, in accordance with joint resolution of Monday, is disheartening our friends and cheering our enemies. If requisition of legislature is complied with all difficulty will be dissipated, the party saved, and everything go on smoothly. If this is done the tide will be turned at once in our favor. The real underlying sentiment is with us if it can but be encouraged, Governor Pinchback acting with great discretion, as is the legislature, and they will so continue.

Collector.

NEW ORLEANS, 11, 1872.

President GRANT:

Democratic members of the legislature taking their seats. Most, if not all, will so in next few days. Important that you immediately recognize Governor Pinchback's legislature in some manner, either by instructing General Emory to comply with any requisition by Governor Pinchback, under joint resolution of legislature of Monday, or otherwise. This would quiet matters much. I earnestly urge this and ask a reply.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1872.

President GRANT:

The condition of affairs is this: The United States circuit court has decided which is the legal board of canvassers. Upon the basis of that decision a legislature has been organized in strict conformity with the laws of the State, Warmoth impeached, and thus Pinchback, as provided by the constitution, became acting governor. The chief-justice of the supreme court organized the senate into a court of impeachment, and Associate Justice Tallifeiro administered oath to Governor Pinchback. The legislature, fully organized, has proceeded in regular routine of business since Monday. Notwithstanding this, Warmoth has organized a pretended legislature, and it is proceeding with pretended legislation. A conflict between these two organizations may at any time occur. A conflict may occur at any hour, and in my opinion there is no safety for the legal government, without the Federal troops are given in compliance with the requisition of the legislature. The supreme court is known to be in sympathy with the Republican State government. If a decided recognition of Governor Pinchback and the legal legislature were made, in my judgment it would settle the whole matter. General Longstreet has been appointed by Governor Pinchback as adjutant-general of State militia.

JAMES F. CASEY.

In reply to these appeals for help the Attorney-General answered as follows:

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 12, 1872.

Acting Governor PINCHBACK,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and that the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute is the lawful legislature of the State, and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect, and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS.
Attorney-General.

The following telegrams were sent to the President by the friends of the State government which was being subverted:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 11, 1872.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Under an order from the judge of the United States district court, investing James Longstreet, Jacob Hawkins, and others with the powers and duties of returning officers under the State election law, and charging them with the duty of completing the legal returns and declaring the result in accordance therewith, those persons have promulgated results based upon no returns whatever, and no evidence except ex parte statements. They have constructed a pretended general assembly, composed mainly of candidates defeated at the election, and those candidates, protected by United States military forces, have taken possession of the State-house and have organized a pretended legislature, which to-day has passed pretended articles of impeachment against the governor; in pursuance of which, the person claiming to be a lieutenant-governor, but whose term had expired, proclaimed himself acting governor, broke into the executive office under the protection of United States soldiers, and took possession of the archives. In the mean time the general assembly has met at the city hall, and organized for business with sixty members in the house and twenty-one in the senate, being more than a quorum of both bodies. I ask and believe that no violent action be taken, and no force used by the Government, at least until the supreme court shall have passed final judgment on the case. A full statement of the facts will be laid before you and the Congress in a few days.

H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of Louisiana.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, 12*th*, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President United States:

Claiming to be governor-elect of this State, I beg you, in the name of all justice, to suspend recognition of either of the dual governments now in operation here until there can be laid before you all facts, and both sides, touching legitimacy of either government. The people denying the legitimacy of Pinchback government and its legislature simply ask to be heard, through committee of many of our best citizens on eve of departure for Washington, before you recognize the one or the other of said governments. I do not believe we will be condemned before we are fully heard.

JNO. McENERY.

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, December 12, 1872.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President of the United States:

SIR: As chairman of a committee of citizens appointed under authority of a mass-meeting recently held in this city, I am instructed to inform you that said committee is about leaving here for Washington to lay before you and the Congress of the United States the facts of the political difficulties at present existing in this State, and further earnestly to request you to delay executive action in the premises until after the arrival and hearing of said committee, which is composed of business and professional men without regard to past political affiliations.

THOMAS A. ADAMS,
Chairman.

To these respectful appeals on behalf of the legitimate governor and people of Louisiana, asking to be heard before a usurping executive and legislature should be forced upon them, the President, through the Attorney-General and War Department, returned the following replies:

[Telegram.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 13, 1872.

Hon. JOHN MCENERY,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in the sooner good order and peace will be restored.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1872.

General W. H. EMORY, U. S. A.,
Commanding New Orleans, Louisiana:

You may use all necessary force to preserve the peace, and will recognize the authority of Governor Pinchback.

By order of the President:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

The history of the world does not furnish a more palpable instance of usurpation than that by which Pinchback was made governor and the persons returned by the Lynch board the legislature of Louisiana; nor can a parallel be found for the unfeeling and despotic answers sent by order of the President to the respectful appeals of the people of Louisiana. This pretended legislature, installed in power by the aid of the United States Army, in pursuance of a void order of a United States district judge, proceeded to elect John Ray to represent the State of Louisiana in the Senate of the United States; and it is said the Senate must receive him because the supreme court of Louisiana has decided the Pinchback legislature to be the rightful legislature of the State, and that the Senate is bound to follow the decision of the State court as to what constitutes its legislature.

It is true, as a rule, that the Federal courts follow the decisions of the State courts in regard to the construction of their own constitution and laws; but it is not true that the legislative department of the Government follows the decisions of the courts upon political questions. The inquiry, what is the established government in a State, belongs to the political, and not the judicial power. The Senate, by the Constitution, is made the sole and only judge of the election of its members, who can only be chosen by the legislatures of the respective States. Ordinarily the body recognized in a State as its legislature would be held by the Senate to be the body authorized to elect a Senator; but when, as in the case of Louisiana, there are two bodies in a State, each claiming to be its legislature, and each of which has chosen a person to represent the State in the Senate, in deciding between the claimants the Senate must necessarily determine which body was the rightful legislature and had authority to make the election.

In view of the facts as shown to exist in Louisiana, the decisions of its courts in favor of the validity of the Pinchback legislature are entitled to no respect whatever. As has been already shown, that legislature was not elected nor brought into being by the people of the State, but owes its existence to the void proceedings of the United States court supported by military force. It was the creature of force and fraud. Its first act was to impeach and suspend the governor (Warmoth) and install Pinchback in his place. It then abolished one court and set up another in its place, and Pinchback appointed Hawkins, one of the Lynch returning board, judge of the newly established court. To give any consideration to the decisions of the court thus set up would be to aid the usurpation. Hawkins counts in spurious members of the legislature; that legislature makes a governor, who makes Hawkins judge, and Hawkins then decides the legislature to be legal.

The Morgan case, in which a majority of the supreme court judges went out of the record to express opinions upon the legal status of Pinchback as acting governor, and the persons acting with him claiming to be a State senate, was commenced before this same Judge Hawkins under laws passed by this pretended legislature. As to the invalidity and extraordinary character of those laws, and the shameful proceedings of a majority of the members of the supreme court in Morgan's case, I concur with what is said by the majority of the committee in their report. Could anything be more preposterous than to give validity to such proceedings? Had the supreme court of the State stood in the way of this pretended legislature its judges would no doubt have been summarily impeached and suspended, as Governor Warmoth was. That a wholesome fear of such proceedings operated upon a majority of the members of that court to make them obsequious to the demands of the pretended legislature is inferable from the fact that they make haste, in advance of any case coming before them involving the validity of the legislature, to make known their sympathy with it, as appears from the following extract from the dispatch sent by United States Collector Casey to the President December 12: "The supreme court is known to be in sympathy with the Republican State government."

The proper tribunal to decide between the contending legislatures in Louisiana is the Senate of the United States in passing upon the admission of the Senators by them respectively chosen.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Luther vs. Borden, say:

"When Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the Government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the Government, and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal."

The credentials of William L. McMillen are signed by Mr. McEnery as governor of the State, with the seal of the State attached. He was elected by what is known as the McEnery legislature, which, including Senators holding over, consisted of a quorum in each branch of the persons elected according to the official returns as canvassed by the De Feriet board. The result of that canvass was duly proclaimed by Governor Warmoth, together with the list of the names of the persons elected to the senate and house of representatives, certified by Jack Wharton, who was at the time the acting secretary of state. The official returns also show that McEnery was elected governor by some 10,000 majority. These returns were before the committee, and their tabulation, showing the results above stated, were proven to be correct. It is true the members of the McEnery legislature did not meet at the time and place fixed in the governor's proclamation, and the facts show that it was out of their power to do so, for the reason that the Mechanics' Institute, in which they were called to assemble, was then occupied by United States troops, acting under the orders of a United States marshal in the execution of a void order of a United States court, which prohibited their assembling and organizing as a legislature in said building. The fact that when thus prevented from assembling in the Mechanics' Institute the members got together as soon as practicable in another building in the same city and proceeded to organize cannot vitiate their proceedings any more than if the Mechanics' Institute had burned down before the time for assembling had arrived. It is difficult to conceive upon what principle McMillen is to be refused his seat, unless the election in Louisiana in November last be declared void, and Louisiana to be without a State government, propositions to which the undersigned cannot give his assent. He believes the De Feriet board had color of authority at least to make the canvass of the returns for the legislature; that Wharton was de facto secretary of state at the time, and the proper person to make out the list of members on which the legislature is organized according to the laws of the State; but whether this were so or not is not perhaps material, because the official returns from the parishes were before us, and we know that the results at which the De Feriet board arrived were substantially correct. It is the fact that certain persons received a majority of the votes cast; that is of the substance of the election. The canvass of the returns is but machinery, and whoever receives a majority of the votes polled at an election for an office ought not to be deprived of the benefit of it unless in obedience to some positive statute.

It is, however, said by a majority of the committee that the election of November 4 was so tainted with fraud as to render it wholly void, and they recommend the passage of a law for holding a new election under the authority of Congress.

If it were admitted, as it is not, that Congress has authority to inquire into the fairness and regularity of a State election, it is denied that there was any such fraud in the late Louisiana election as would justify setting it aside. It was confessedly one of the most quiet and peaceful elections ever held in the State, and the evidence shows that it was substantially free and fair.

The vote polled was 20,000 larger than ever before cast in the State, and against more than two-thirds of it no complaint of unfairness is even alleged.

S. B. Packard, United States marshal for the district of Louisiana, was chairman of the Republican State executive committee, and his office in the custom-house was the headquarters of the organization of which he was one, if not the leading spirit. He appointed from one to four special deputy marshals in every parish, and upward of six hundred in New Orleans, who were to be at the polls. Some of them served for seventy days; and he made requisitions on the Attorney-General, previous to the election, for the money to pay deputy marshals and United States supervisors. Under the law, one of the two United States supervisors appointed by the court is selected from each party, but in appointing his special deputies United States Marshal Packard confined himself exclusively to his own party, so far as the testimony shows. This United States marshal and chairman of the Republican executive committee issued instructions to the Republican United States supervisor in each parish in regard to the supervision of the vote for State and local officers, but gave no such instructions to the supervisor appointed on the fusion side. With all the sources of information which the hundreds of his subordinates scattered through the State, and his position as United States marshal and chairman of the State Republican executive committee, afforded him, Packard testified before the committee that "in a majority of the parishes, in my judgment, the election was as fair as you usually have it in any State election.

"Rapides and Natchitoches, I should say, were the two worst. Then I would add Madison, Caddo, and Bossier, and East Baton Rouge; a portion of the returns for West Baton Rouge.

"A. These parishes I have named were the worst cases.

"Q. Seven of these cases?

"A. Yes, sir. There is also the parish of Assumption, which I believe to be a Republican parish, which went about 700 Republican in 1870, is returned differently.

"Q. I want to know about how many there were in which there were notorious charges of fraud, such as are not usually made in elections?

"A. That is the number, or about the number. It would increase the number, perhaps, ten or fifteen, if I were to add those in which I believed the returns were not in accordance with the facts."

The State is divided into fifty-six parishes, from only about twenty of which, containing less than one-third of the population of the State, frauds were even reported, and these reports were not supported by the direct testimony of a single witness before the committee, unless proof that the places of registration and of voting were established at inconvenient places in two or three parishes should be regarded as evidence of fraud. The only evidence to sustain the charges of fraud made by the Republicans were the opinions of witnesses who took an active part in the election on the Republican side, and were disappointed in the result, or ex parte "affidavits, the statements of supervisors of election, appointed under the act of Congress, letters, and verbal statements," which were laid before and made to the Lynch returning board, and upon which the committee have already reported that the Lynch returning board, "with the sort of evidence which was before them, had no power under the law of the State to investigate these charges of fraud and injury, or act upon their convictions of wrongs that had been suffered."

It was also in evidence before the committee that many of the affidavits before the Lynch board for the purpose of proving unfairness in the election, and upon which that board acted, were forged, and that others were triplicated.

No returns were made to the governor, as required by law, from two parishes, and the returns were irregular from two others. Informalities also existed in some few other parishes or parts of parishes, but not so as to affect the general result, which for State officers, according to the official returns, showed an average majority of over 10,000 for the fusion ticket. These returns were produced before the committee, and the tabulation as contained in the evidence, page 81, proved to be correct.

It has been said that the colored voters were all Republicans, that the colored population of the State outnumbers the whites, and that therefore if the election had been fair the Republican ticket must have succeeded; but the census of 1870 shows that there were in the State one hundred and fifty-three more white than colored males over twenty one years of age; and it is also in evidence that from eight to ten thousand colored persons voted the fusion ticket, while the number of whites who voted the Republican ticket is not believed to have exceeded half that number.

That fraud was practiced in some of the parishes, that irregularities existed in others, may be admitted; and still, in the absence of any legitimate evidence to establish those frauds, or of any sort of complaint even against the fairness of the election in more than two-thirds of the State, the undersigned cannot admit that such a case exists as would authorize the interference of Congress with the election in any form, and his conclusion is, that by the admission of McMillen to his seat in the Senate, and the recognition thereby of the McEnery legislature as the legitimate legislature of the State, the peace of Louisiana will be speedily restored, and effect given to the fairly expressed will of her people.

LYMAN TRUMBULL.

VIEWS OF MR. MORTON.

Article 46 of the constitution of Louisiana is in the following words: "Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state." This leaves it to the legislature to provide the necessary machinery for the conduct of elections and the organization of the new legislature after each election.

In March, 1870, the necessary machinery was provided in the registration and election law; and the latter law requires all returns to be made to the governor, and to be by him laid before the returning board, of which the secretary of state is ex officio a member, which shall count the votes, and that the board shall then deposit the returns with the secretary of state, as also a copy of their count or finding.

Article 48 of the constitution provides, in regard to the election of governor and lieutenant-governor, that "the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes."

In this regard also the law provides a somewhat circuitous route by which the returns of the election shall reach the secretary of state, yet apparently with as little objection, in a constitutional point of view, as in the case of the members of the general assembly. The returns in both cases reach the secretary of state through the governor and the returning board. The constitution provides that the legislature shall count the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor, but makes no provision for counting them as to other State officers or members of the legislature, and leaving all that machinery to be provided by statute.

The act of 1870 provides for supervisors of registration in the parishes, and commissioners of election to be appointed by the supervisors, and the returns of the election in the several parishes to be sent to the governor, to be by him laid before the returning board, and by the returning board, together with the result of their finding, deposited with the secretary of state. These provisions are held by the courts in Louisiana to be a compliance with the constitutional provisions, and I see no objection to them on that score. The law makes the governor, with other members of the returning board, "returning officers" under the constitution, to which I can see no objection.

For a statement of the facts attending the election on the 4th of November, and the counting of the votes, I refer to the preliminary report already made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the election of Presidential electors. By the law of 1870 the governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, and John Lynch and T. C. Anderson by name, were constituted a board to count the votes. Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback and Mr. Anderson, having been candidates for Congress, were, by a provision of the law, prevented from acting on the board, and a struggle arose between Governor Warmoth on the one side, and Mr. Lynch, and Herron, the acting secretary of state, on the other, to fill the vacancies. The governor attempted to depose Herron by appointing Jack Wharton in his place, and claimed that by his vote and Wharton's they had elected F. H. Hatch and Durant Da Ponte to fill the vacancies, while Lynch and Herron claimed that by their votes they had elected James Longstreet and Jacob Hawkins. On the next day, the 15th of November, a suit was commenced in the eighth district court, before Judge Dibble, in the name of the State, on the relation of Lynch and others, to restrain Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte from acting as members of the returning board, upon which a preliminary restraining order was granted. On the next day, the 16th, a suit was commenced in the same court by Governor Warmoth to restrain Herron, Hawkins, and Longstreet from acting as members of the board, upon which a like restraining order was granted. Both cases came on for hearing upon the 19th of November, when the court decided that Lynch, Herron, Hawkins, Longstreet, and Governor Warmoth constituted the legal returning board, dismissed the Warmoth suit, and enjoined Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte from assuming to act as members of the board. Two days afterward Judge Dibble, the clerk, and the sheriff were forcibly ejected from the court-room, and Judge Elmore took possession of the bench, having been commissioned that morning as judge by Governor Warmoth, but the votes for whom had never been counted by any person having authority. Upon the 3d of December following Judge Elmore annulled the judgment rendered by Judge Dibble and dismissed the suit. This case was finally appealed to the supreme court of the State, in which it was decided, on the 23d day of January, that the legal returning board, on the day when the case was decided in the lower court, was composed of Governor Warmoth, John Lynch, F. J. Herron (acting secretary of state when the suit was commenced), James Longstreet, and Jacob Hawkins; that Governor Warmoth had no power to remove Herron and appoint Wharton secretary of state; and that Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte had no authority whatever.

On the 16th of November, Kellogg, who claimed to have been elected governor, commenced a suit in the circuit court of the United States before Judge Durell, for the ostensible purpose of perpetuating testimony, in which he alleged that he had been a candidate for governor before the election, and had been deprived of the office by the wrongful denial of the right to vote of 10,000 persons on account of their race, color, and previous condition of servitude. Upon the filing of the bill Judge Durell granted an order restraining Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte from acting as members of the returning board, opening and counting the votes, or in any way meddling with the election returns. On the 6th of December he decided the case, holding that Lynch, Hawkins, Longstreet, and Bovee, secretary of state, together with Governor Warmoth, constituted the legal returning board, and enjoining Wharton, Hatch, and Da Ponte from assuming to act as members thereof. On the day previous he had issued an order to the United States marshal to take possession of the State-house, and prevent any illegal assemblage, which the marshal executed by summoning as a posse comitatus a detachment of United States troops. On the 6th of December, Armstead, who claimed to have been elected secretary of state, commenced a suit before Judge Elmore to restrain the members of the Lynch board from counting the votes and making returns in the absence of the official returns of the election. The restraining order was granted, but the case was removed the next day to the circuit court of the United States by certiorari. On the 7th of December, Antoine, who claimed to have been elected lieutenant-governor on the same ticket with Kellogg, commenced suit in the circuit court of the United States, upon which Judge Durell granted an order restraining all persons from taking part in organizing the legislature whose names were not on the lists issued by the secretary of state, and returned as elected by the Lynch board.

In the month of March, 1872, the legislature passed a new election act, which assumed to abolish the returning board, as created by the law of 1870, and authorized the State senate to elect a board of five from outside of its own members, which act Governor Warmoth kept in his possession without signing until the 20th of November, and then signed and published it as a law; but the supreme court of the State, in the case before referred to, decided that this law did not have the effect to abolish the returning board, as created by the law of 1870, until after the returns for the election of 1872, which had been held before the bill was signed, had been counted and the new legislature organized. On the 21st of November, Governor Warmoth, assuming that the act he had signed the day before had abolished the returning board as created by the law of 1870, and that he had power under the constitution to fill vacancies, appointed Mr. De Feriet and four other persons to act as a returning board, to count the votes for State officers and members of the legislature. He placed in their hands for that purpose what purported to be the official returns of the election, upon which they proceeded to count the votes and make proclamation of their finding as to members of the legislature.

Mr. Bovee was elected secretary of state in 1868, to hold his office for the same term as the governor, and until the meeting of the regular session of the legislature in 1873. On the 21st day of August, 1871, Governor Warmoth assumed the power to suspend Mr. Bovee from office and appoint in his stead F. J. Herron as acting secretary of state during the suspension of Mr. Bovee. In March, 1872, Mr. Bovee commenced a suit to assert his title to the office, which was appealed to the supreme court, and decided in his favor on the 2d December, 1872; but he was not restored to the actual possession of the office until the 6th December.

On the 20th day of November, in the exercise of the power reposed in him by the constitution, Governor Warmoth issued a proclamation convening the legislature in extra session on the 9th of December, at the Mechanics' Institute, in the city of New Orleans, then used and known as the State-house. By the law the house consisted of one hundred and eight members and the senate of thirty-six members, and, under the construction of the clause in the constitution in regard to a quorum, it was held that it required a majority of the whole number of which each house should properly consist to constitute a quorum; that is, 55 in the house, and 19 in the senate.

The members of the house held their office for two years, and of the senate for four years; one-half of the senate to be elected every two years. Owing to several causes there were but fifteen senators left of those holding over from the election in 1870, and twenty-one were to have been elected at the late election. Mr. Pinchback, who had been elected a senator in 1868, and whose time would expire on the 4th November, 1872, had, on the death of Lieutenant-Governor Dunn, in December, 1871, been elected president of the senate and lieutenant-governor of the State in accordance with the law.

The act to provide for filling a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor is in these words: "In case of vacancy in the office of governor the lieutenant-governor shall be governor; in case of vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor the senate shall elect a president, who shall be lieutenant-governor."—(Sec. 1580 rev. stat., act of 1865.)

There was a dispute in regard to the character of his office, it being held by one party that he was only acting lieutenant-governor by his election as president of the senate, and by the other that he actually became lieutenant-governor, and would continue to hold that office after his term as senator had expired. It is not necessary to go into this question, as it has since been decided by the supreme court of the State that, by such election, Mr. Pinchback became lieutenant-governor, and his office as such did not expire with his term of senator; that he continued legally to perform the duties of lieutenant-governor up to the period when the term of Lieutenant-Governor Dunn would have expired had he lived.

By the law of the State the legislature was to be organized by the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives of the last legislature. The secretary of state is directed to furnish to those officers a list of the members of the senate and of the house returned as elected by the legal returning board, and no person is entitled to take a seat in either house whose name is not found upon such list.

On the day fixed for the meeting of the legislature in extra session, Governor Pinchback appeared in the senate, took the chair and proceeded to the organization of that body. The secretary of the last senate produced a list from the secretary of state of the newly elected senators, and fourteen appeared and were sworn in; two others appeared the next day, and were admitted to their seats upon taking the oath; and these with fourteen of the senators holding over made thirty present on the second day. Of the sixteen new senators, seven were returned by both the Lynch and De Feriet boards, and about their election there was no dispute. Four others were returned by the Lynch board from strong Republican districts, in which the regular official returns had been thrown out by the De Feriet board, in whole or in part, and about whose actual election by the votes cast there can hardly be any dispute.

The house of representatives was organized by the clerk of the last house, who had a list of the members from the secretary of state returned as elected by the Lynch board; and representatives thus returned as elected appeared and were sworn in to the number of seventy-six. Of this number, forty-five were returned as elected by both the Lynch and De Feriet boards, and about their election there is no dispute, leaving thirty-one who were returned by the Lynch board only, whose election was disputed by the De Feriet board.

The house then proceeded to the election of a speaker and other officers, and the two bodies were declared to be duly organized according to law.

Within three days after this eleven members seceded from the house, and six members from the senate, who proceeded to Lyceum Hall, and there, in connection with a number of persons who had been returned by the De Feriet board, attempted to organize a new legislature, which we will disignate as the "McEnery legislature." This pretended legislature was organized by the admission of persons who were not returned as elected by any person having authority, and in the absence of those lists of elected members to be issued by the secretary of state as expressly required by the law. It did not meet until three days after the time fixed in the governor's proclamation for the assembling of the legislature, nor at the place fixed in that proclamation; and it has no semblance of legal authority in any respect, but rests entirely upon the unauthorized and unofficial declarations that the persons composing it were elected at the election on the 4th of November last.

But I do not think it necessary to pursue its history any further, as in my opinion it could not under any circumstances come to be regarded as the legal legislature of the State. If, after the legal organization of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States at the beginning of a new Congress, even a majority of the lawfully elected members of each body should secede from it and go to the city hall and there attempt to organize a new Congress, it will not be pretended that such new organization could legally become the Congress of the United States. By such act they might disable either House from doing business; but it would be absurd to say that the new one could be received as the legal Congress. The proposition that, after a legislature has been completely organized, it is in the power of seceding members to form a new one which, in contemplation of law, can take the place of the first, is so manifestly unreasonable that I dismiss the claim of the McEnery legislature from further consideration.

After the legislature became duly organized, as already stated, it was invested with power expressly conferred by the constitution of Louisiana to determine the qualifications and elections of its own members. This is in its nature an exclusive power. One house cannot divide it with the other, nor can the exercise of it be controlled by courts. From that time each house has the exclusive control over its membership, whether in the retention of old members or in the admission of new ones. If in the original organization a number of persons were admitted as members who had not been legally elected, but whose names were on the list of persons furnished by the secretary of state returned as elected by the proper returning board, their seats were liable to contest, and such contest could only be determined by the house of which they claimed to be members; and under no circumstance could a court inquire into the expulsion of a member of either house or the admission of a new one. Such a power has never been recognized in any State or by any Federal court in regard to Congress. If a quorum in each house, who were on the list furnished by the secretary of state as having been returned as elected by the legal returning board, take their seats and proceed to the work of organization, such organization must in contemplation of law be held to be legal.

The action of Congress in regard to Georgia is no exception to this principle. That was put upon the ground that Georgia had not been fully reconstructed, and that the fundamental conditions upon which reconstruction was to take place, as prescribed by Congress, had been violated before the work of reconstruction had been completed. But this precedent will not apply to the case of any State which has been fully received into the Union and occupies the situation of other States. This principle that each house has the exclusive jurisdiction over all questions touching the election and qualification of its members, and is to determine for itself whether a lawful quorum is present to do business, is so well established that it has been holden by the courts in all the States in which the question has arisen, as well as by the Supreme Court of the United States, that the validity of a statute cannot be impeached by a plea that members took part in its enactment who were not lawfully elected, or that it was passed in the absence of a lawful quorum, or that its enactment was procured by bribery, or attended by other gross irregularity.

After the organization of the two houses was completed, the house of representatives passed a resolution impeaching Governor Warmoth of high crimes and misdemeanors, of which the senate was notified, and then a joint resolution was passed by both houses suspending him from office pending the trial. This devolved the duties of governor, under the constitution, upon Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback. Early in December, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback, acting as governor, nominated to the senate for confirmation P. H. Morgan for associate justice of the supreme court to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of W. W. Howe. The nomination was confirmed; but J. H. Kennard, who had been previously appointed by Governor Warmoth to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Howe and not confirmed by the senate, refused to surrender his seat, and a proceeding was instituted by Morgan to get possession of the office, which was carried by appeal to the supreme court, and on the 31st day of January the supreme court decided that Pinchback was lieutenant-governor, and by the impeachment of Governor Warmoth was legally acting as governor; that his nomination of Morgan to the senate for associate justice was in accordance with law; that the senate by which Morgan was confirmed was the legal senate of Louisiana, and that Morgan was entitled to take his seat upon the bench. The legislature during its extra session, which terminated on the 6th of January, passed a number of laws of a general character, which went into operation and were recognized by the courts as being the laws of the State, and among them one abolishing the seventh and eight district courts and creating the superior district court of New Orleans, which court was duly organized and is in the active discharge of its duties. A few minutes after the adjournment of the extra session the regular session began, as provided by the constitution of the State, and the legislature proceeded to the business of the session.

Under the laws of Louisiana the life-time of a legislature, like that of a Congress, is two years, and when once it is organized that organization extends throughout the period. The organization at the beginning of the extra session rendered any subsequent one unnecessary, and at the opening of the regular session the members who had been admitted at the extra session appeared and took their seats without further qualification, and by the rules the unfinished business of the extra session was continued in the regular session as if no interregnum had taken place. Should the President convene an extra session of Congress in the month of March, the organization of the House of Representatives then made would continue through the Congress just as if it was made at the beginning of the regular session.

On the 14th of January, an act was passed to promote the speedy trial of contests for judicial offices, the validity of which came before the supreme court in the case of Morgan vs. Kennard, and in regard to which the court held that while they could not determine judicially the persons who composed the legislature, yet that they could take judicial notice of the body constituting the legal legislature, and that the law in question was passed by the legal legislature. This legislature has continued in session up to this time engaged in general and special legislation, the validity of which is recognized by all the courts of the State and generally by the people.

Louisiana has a constitution which has been ratified by the people; a code of laws enacted by her legislature from time to time; a general system and body of law which is recognized and administered by her courts; a supreme court in full operation, district and subordinate courts discharging their duties without obstruction in every part of the State. She has her full complement of parish and local officers, who are performing their duties without resistance or interruption. She has a legislature which was organized under the forms of law, the members of which were declared elected by a tribunal which has been pronounced by the supreme court the lawful one for that purpose, and this legislature has been expressly recognized by the supreme court as being the lawful legislature. She has an acting governor who has been declared elected by the legislature and installed in office under the forms of law. It cannot be said, therefore, that Louisiana has not a State government, and that the government is not in all outward aspects legal and normal.

The late insurrectionary States at the end of the war were without governments of any kind. They were without governors, legislatures, courts, State or subordinate officers; and the United States had the power to provide for the reconstruction of the State governments, and it was their duty to do so. The broad difference between the condition of Louisiana at present and the insurrectionary States at the end of the war must be comprehended by all. The interference of the United States at that time, and undertaking the work of reconstruction, was a constitutional and political necessity. The Constitution declares that the United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and, by generally received construction, this does not limit the power of Congress to a mere inquiry as to the form, but it is construed to mean as if it read, "the United States shall guarantee to each State a government, republican in its form." Where there are two rival governments in a State, Congress must first ascertain which is the legal government before it can determine the question whether it is republican in form; and if there be no legal actual government, it is impossible that it should be republican in form. But it is not every irregularity in a State government that will destroy its existence or impair its republican or legal character. A State government consists of too many constituent parts to say that the absence of the governor or the presence of a fraudulent one will destroy its existence, and the Constitution and laws have provided the machinery by which the intruder may be expelled and the lawful governor put in his place. Should the legislature be broken up by the secession or resignation of a majority of its members leaving it without a quorum—which has happened in many of the States—that would not destroy the existence of a State government; or, if it be irregularly or fraudulently organized by the admission of persons as members who were not elected, it could not be said to have destroyed the existence of the State government. It is hardly necessary to consider how many of the constituent parts of a State government must disappear before the government ceases to exist. The presence of governors and State officers who secured their offices by fraud has occurred many times in our political history, and has never been held to have destroyed the existence of a State government or its legal character. And we know that there have been numerous instances where State legislatures have been broken up by the resignation of members, or by what is commonly called "bolting," and yet it was never claimed that such a result destroyed the State government or took away its legal character.

The theory of our system is that every State government possesses the power and machinery to correct the wrongs and frauds within itself, practiced under color of or in open violation of its own laws, and that the decision of its own tribunals, created by its constitution and laws for such purpose, must be received as final. When the constitution of a State provides that each house of its legislature shall be the judge of its election and qualification of its members, full faith and credit must be given to their action; and should the Government of the United States go behind their action to inquire whether the members have been lawfully elected to the legislature, their independence would be wholly destroyed and the validity of their action made to depend upon the will of Congress. So, when the laws of a State have constitutionally created a returning board to ascertain who are elected State officers and members of the legislature, if Congress may go behind the decision of that board and inquire whether they had the returns before them, and whether they were acting in accordance with the laws of the State, the election of State officers and members of the legislature would be placed absolutely under the control of Congress.

The Constitution says that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years." The manner of constituting the legislature is left absolutely to each State, and the question of its organization must be left to be decided by such tribunals or regulations as are provided by the constitution and laws of the State; and the only question about which the Senate may inquire in determining the admission of Senators is whether they have been chosen by the legislature of the State—that legislature recognized by the State, or whose organization has been accepted by other departments of the State government. Under our complex system of government all questions of the organization of State governments, under their own laws, must be left to the decision of the tribunals in such States created for that purpose; and when such decisions have been made they must be accepted by the Government of the United States in their dealings with such States. It is no answer to this to say that in a particular case such tribunals will or have decided wrongfully. The Government of the United States has no right to review their decisions so long as the State possesses a government republican in its form.

The doctrine that all questions of election arising exclusively under the constitution and laws of a State must be left to the settlement and determination of the proper tribunals created by the State for the adjustment of such matters, was distinctly recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in the celebrated case of Luther vs. Borden, growing out of the attempt in the State of Rhode Island to overturn the old charter government and establish a new one in its stead. In that case the Supreme Court said:

"The point, then, raised here has been already decided by the courts of Rhode Island. The question relates altogether to the constitution and laws of the State; and the well-settled rule in this court is that the courts of the United States adopt and follow the decisions of the State courts in questions which concern merely the constitution and laws of a State. Upon what ground could the circuit court of the United States, which tried this case, have departed from this rule and disregarded and overruled the decision of the courts of Rhode Island? Undoubtedly the courts of the United States have certain powers under the Constitution and laws of the United States which do not belong to the State courts. But the power of determining that a State government has been lawfully established, which the courts of the State disown and repudiate, is not one of them. Upon such a question the courts of the United States are bound to follow the decisions of the State tribunals."

But the reason for the rule in Luther vs. Borden is much stronger in this case than in that. In that case there was an attempt to set up a new constitution over the old charter under which it was claimed that a new government had been organized throughout, involving a new supreme court, as well as legislature and State officers. But in Louisiana there is but one constitution, and but one supreme court, which is recognized by all parties, and no attempt made to set up another in its stead, and the only question is as to who were elected State officers and members of the legislature under the recognized constitution and laws of the State, of which the supreme court must necessarily be the final arbiter.

There is no impeachment of the supreme court of Louisiana presented to the committee or to the country. All its members but one were placed upon the bench in 1868, before the present troubles arose, and hold their office for four years longer; and although imputations have been cast upon its action, I know of no foundation for them, and it is not legitimate for Congress to make an inquiry into its motives. The power and duty conferred upon the United States by the fourth article to guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government is political in its character, and not subject to revision by the judiciary; but when, upon inquiry, it is ascertained that a State has an existing government in active operation, which is not obstructed by violence, in which each department is mutually recognized by the other, and which is republican in its form, there is no foundation for the interference of Congress, and no condition to which its power can attach; and although its officers may have been elected by fraud or installed without election, yet all questions in relation to them must necessarily arise under the constitution and laws of the State, and, under the decision in Luther vs. Borden, be referred for determination to the tribunal of the State.

This whole affair, on both sides, is unfortunate and painful, and if Congress could, without exercising a dangerous power and establishing a perilous precedent, set aside the election and provide for a new one, with security that it should be fair, it would be far more satisfactory to the people of the whole nation. Murder is the highest crime; but it is not every court that has jurisdiction to punish it; and one court cannot assume such jurisdiction upon the ground that another, to which it has been granted, will not properly exercise it; and Congress has not the jurisdiction to examine and redress every great wrong that may take place in a State. Where, by the constitution and laws of a State, legal remedies are provided for the redress of all wrongs that may take place in regard to elections, it would be inconsistent with the independence and integrity of the State governments for the United States to interfere and assume jurisdiction upon the ground that the State tribunals have acted wrongfully and fraudulently, or will so act. The Government of the United States is not a Don Quixote, going forth to hunt up and redress all the wrongs that may be inflicted upon the people in any part of the country; but is a Government limited and restrained in its jurisdiction by the charter of its creation, and that charter distinctly recognizes the existence of State governments to be constituted legally by the States themselves, subject only to the provision of the higher law that they shall be republican in form. This doctrine in no wise recognizes the blood-stained theory of State sovereignty, which has been the evil spirit in our political system, and to which the present troubles in Louisiana may be traced back, but springs from the great fact that the States have a vast body of rights distinctly guaranteed and recognized by the Constitution of the United States, and that among these is the right to constitute their own legislatures, and determine by their own tribunals the legality of their organization.

This great power to guarantee to each State a republican form of government is intended only for the highest and most solemn occasions. If it is invoked for every disorder in a State, it must result in the absorption of the State governments and subvert the whole theory and plan of our political institutions. While we are a nation, in which alone the sovereignty resides, yet local self-governments which preceded the Constitution, and are recognized and continued by it as a part of the great plan of political salvation, are indispensable to our liberty, progress, and happiness, and must be preserved. It should be exercised only upon well-defined principles, in cases coming clearly within their limits, and with all the more caution because it is political in its character, and the use or abuse of it cannot be reviewed by the courts. While it would be imprudent to attempt to define the cases that come within its scope, it may be safely said that it does not comprehend a disorder in a State arising under its own constitution and laws, for which those laws provide remedies, a State in which there is profound peace, and in which the State government is republican in its form, and discharging its functions in every department without interruption. Even in cases that come within its scope it should not be exercised except in the last resort, and the States should be left to work out their own relief and reformation as long as there is any hope.

There is a government in Louisiana. In all outward aspects it is legal and normal. Profound peace prevails throughout the State. The government, through the courts and through its legislature and administrative officers, is operating without interruption or hindrance. Should Congress determine to undertake the work of reconstruction, it must first overturn an actually existing government which is republican in its form.

The conduct of Judge Durell, sitting in the circuit court of the United States, cannot be justified or defended. He grossly exceeded his jurisdiction, and assumed the exercise of powers to which he could lay no claim. The only authority he had in the matter grew out of the act of Congress of 1870 to enforce the fifteenth amendment, and the act amendatory of that, passed in 1871, which gave to the courts of the United States jurisdiction in all cases in law and equity arising under the former act. Under the first act two classes of cases might arise: First, actions to enforce the rights of those who had been illegally denied the right to vote upon the ground of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and second, actions to enforce the rights of those who had been deprived of office by reason of the denial to persons of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and suits in equity ancillary or in aid of these rights of action would come within the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States, among which would be a suit to perpetuate testimony. But the pretense that in a suit to perpetuate testimony the court could go beyond the natural and reasonable jurisdiction to decide who constituted the legal returning board under the laws of Louisiana, and to enforce the rights of such as it might determine to be members of that board, and to enjoin others who were not, is without any foundation in law or logic.

In the Antoine case Judge Durell not only assumed to determine who constituted the legal returning board, but to prescribe who should be permitted to take part in the organization of the legislature and to enjoin all persons from taking part in such organization who were not returned by the Lynch board as elected; and this assumption of jurisdiction was made in the face of the express provision in the act of 1870 that its benefits should not extend to candidates for electors, for Congress, or for the State legislature. His order issued in the Kellogg case to the United States marshal to take possession of the State-house for the purpose of preventing unlawful assemblages, under which the marshal called to his aid a portion of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus, can only be characterized as a gross usurpation.

It was not for the United States marshal or for the President to review the decisions and order of Judge Durell, and determine whether he had exceeded his jurisdiction. By the tenth section of the act of 1870, under which Judge Durell had assumed jurisdiction in the case, it is declared to "be the duty of all marshals and deputy marshals to aid and execute all warrants and precepts issued under the provisions of this act when to them directed;" and that they "shall have authority to summon and call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of the proper county, or such portion of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as may be necessary to the performance of the duty with which they are charged."

Under this authority the United States marshal called upon the general in command of the United States troops at New Orleans for a detachment to aid him in the enforcement of the orders and decree of the court, which demand was complied with.

The Constitution enjoins the President to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and this involves the enforcement of the orders, decrees, and judgments of the courts of the United States. But by the provisions of the act of 1870 it would seem that the United States marshal has a right to summon upon the instant a portion of the land or naval forces of the United States, without previous authority from the President, to enforce the orders or precepts of the courts.

But conceding all the facts in regard to Judge Durell, the question arises how they affect the legal rights of the parties, and the actual status of the Kellogg government. The Lynch returning board has been decided by the supreme court of the State to be the legal one, and the other boards, known as the Wharton, the De Feriet, and the Forman boards, to have been without any authority whatever. Has the legal character of that board been impaired or vitiated by the illegal interference of Judge Durell? Conceding that interference to have been in every way wrongful, would it have the effect to vitiate the title of the Lynch returning board, as determined by the supreme court of the State? I think not. A title which the highest legal tribunal has declared to be good is not impaired by unlawful interference, even by violence in its support. And the case stands thus: That the circuit court of the United States has unlawfully interfered to do certain things which the highest tribunal of the State decides to be lawful and proper in themselves. The supreme court of the State having held that the legislature was the lawful one which was organized by the admission of such persons only as were returned by the Lynch board as elected members, is the legality of that organization affected by the fact that the circuit court of the United States interfered to prevent the organization of a legislature by persons who were not returned as elected by the Lynch board? If an officer in the performance of his duty were aided by a mob, the performance would not be made illegal by the presence and co-operation of an unlawful assemblage.

The Kellogg government is a fact, and its legality is sustained by the judicial tribunals of the State, and it is in active operation in all its departments without actual resistance anywhere. The McEnery government exists only on paper. McEnery and all those claiming office under it have never been returned as elected by any person having authority under the laws of Louisiana.

Every offense complained of on either side in this case was against the constitution and laws of Louisiana, and the question now presented broadly is whether the Congress of the United States shall interfere to correct violations of the laws of the State and to redress wrongs for which redress is provided by the State tribunals.

In the report of the majority of the committee it is alleged that the election on the 4th of November was so grossly fraudulent as to make it void; that if it had been fair, Kellogg and the other candidates on the Republican ticket would have been elected by a large majority. Without concurring in the opinion that the election was void, I entertain no doubt that it was an organized fraud of the largest dimensions, and that a decided majority of the people of Louisiana sympathize with the Kellogg government and earnestly desire to see it maintained.

Should Congress declare that Louisiana has no legal State government and provide by law for a new election, it would establish a precedent for overturning State governments and setting up new ones under which the government of every State would be at the mercy of Congress as controlled by the passions or exigency of parties.

Deploring this condition of things in Louisiana, and earnestly hoping that the people will take warning, and with one accord insist upon honest elections and the faithful observance of the laws, it is my deliberate judgment that it is better for them to bear the ills they have and seek reformation and relief under their own laws and tribunals than to invoke the National Government to the assertion of a power under which State governments would exist hereafter only by sufferance.

VIEWS OF MR. HILL.

Assenting as I do in the main to the correctness of the statement of facts touching the recent election in the State of Louisiana, and the history of the legal proceedings connected therewith, as set forth in the report of the committee, and commending the just though severe criticisms of a judicial tribunal for its improper intervention, I am still of opinion that the remedy for existing evils proposed by the committee is of questionable expediency and not the most effectual method of restoring order and quiet to a distracted community.

While it must be conceded that the election in certain parishes was not conducted with entire fairness, and in others frauds were committed, it is nevertheless true, according to the evidence before the committee, that on the whole the election was as fair and certainly as peaceable as the people of Louisiana are accustomed to hold. Irregularities and frauds in State elections, unfortunately, are not of rare occurrence beyond the limits of Louisiana. The intervention of a judge without jurisdiction of the cause presented to him prevented the counting of the election returns according to the forms of law. As it is, there has been no legal count of the returns.

No one doubts but that for the interposition of a judge of the United States district court the returns of the election would have been counted by a board of canvassers under the laws of the State, and that a result would have been reached, at least, with all the appearances of regularity in which a majority of the people would have acquiesced. Shall the unauthorized act of this official, condemned as it is by all legal minds, be permitted of itself to reverse the expressed will of a majority of the voters of Louisiana, or at least a majority of those that voted? Surely it cannot be a sound principle in politics or ethics that an admitted usurpation can create anything more than a government de facto. To assert that it may bring into existence by its mere recognition a government that lives, moves, and has its being solely by such adoption is to declare that the usurping tribunal is supreme and its decisions and orders are irreversible. What boots it to rebuke the illegal and tyrannical assumptions of a judge if his orders and decrees must have all the effect he designed to give them? Of what consequence is it that his violations of law should be reviewed and censured if the effect is the same as though he had not exceeded his jurisdiction and abused the authority of his office? It would seem to be an act of supererogation to pause to wonder at the fatuity that dictated his course, if its end and aim are to stand as facts accomplished. In the light of policy it would seem better in deciding that a government foully and fraudulently set up by the fiat of a judge shall stand because it is a de facto government; that no discredit should be cast upon the integrity or intelligence of the magistrate. It certainly cannot commend a State government to those who are to live under it to inform them that the National Legislature, after a thorough examination into the history of its origin, have ascertained that it was born of fraud and arrogated power, and but for these could never have had existence.

To avoid the exercise by Congress of a power so delicate as that of annulling the entire election of a State, embracing the highest officials and parish officers of every grade, and a State legislature besides, I would prefer that only such legislation be had as is necessary to preserve order and respect for law in the State. This I think may be effected by enacting a law convening by name the members-elect to the two houses of the legislature (whose election has not been disputed before the committee by the contending partisans) on a day certain, in their respective chambers in the Mechanic's Institute in the city of New Orleans, and requiring them to organize their said houses by electing the necessary officers, and having organized, to proceed to count the said election returns and to declare the result of such count; to seat only such members as may appear by said returns to have been elected to the particular house, as the case may be, and to announce the election of a governor and lieutenant-governor, who shall thereupon be inaugurated for the terms for which they have been chosen at said election, and who shall thereupon proceed to execute the duties required of them by the constitution and laws of the State.

JOSHUA HILL.

COMPENSATION OF MESSRS. RAY AND M'MILLEN.

MONDAY, March 3, 1873.

Mr. West submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to John Ray and W. L. McMillen, each, full compensation as Senator for the unexpired term for which they were elected, as shown by their respective credentials, until the 4th of March, 1873; and also mileage."

THURSDAY, March 13, 1873.

Mr. West submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[Resolution same as that submitted March 3, given above.]

[First session of the Forty-third Congress.]

Mr. West submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

MONDAY, June 22, 1874.

Mr. Carpenter, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution to pay John Ray and William L. McMillen compensation as Senators from the State of Louisiana, submitted a report (No. 476), accompanied by the following resolution; which was ordered to be printed.

[Resolution found at end of report.]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.*

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Anthony, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Hamilton of Maryland, and Saulsbury.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JUNE 22, 1874.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Carpenter submitted the following report:

The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution offered by Senator West, as follows: "Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay John Ray and William L. McMillen, each, full compensation as Senator for the unexpired term for which they were elected, as shown by their respective credentials, until the 4th of March, 1873," submit the following report:

Owing to the fact that in the State of Louisiana, in 1872 and 1873, there were two bodies claiming to be the legislature of that State, one known as the McEnery and the other as the Kellogg legislature, John Ray and William L. McMillen each claimed the seat made vacant in the Senate by the resignation of Hon. William P. Kellogg, and appeared and presented their credentials to the Senate, and attended before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, charged with the investigation of their claims. The committee reported against seating either of them, but both had incurred expenses in the prosecution of their claims.

By analogy to the precedents of the Senate, your committee are of opinion that both Ray and McMillen would be entitled to the salary of a Senator from the time of their election until the disposition of their claims respectively by the Senate; but regarding this precedent as vicious, your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the actual expenses necessarily incurred by John Ray and William L. McMillen, claimants to a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana in the Forty-second Congress, in presenting their respective claims to a seat in the Senate, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, which expenses shall be presented itemized and verified by the oath of the said Ray and McMillen respectively, and the amounts shall be audited by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

[First session of the Forty-fourth Congress.]

Mr. West submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Contingent Expenses be instructed to report what amounts of compensation, if any, are, in their opinion, due to the respective contestants, William L. McMillen and John Ray, claimants to a seat in the Senate for the unexpired term of William P. Kellogg; and to William L. McMillen as claimant heretofore to a seat in the Senate for the term commencing March 4, 1873."

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1876.

Mr. West submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the claims of William L. McMillen and John Ray, contestants for the seat vacated by the resignation of William P. Kellogg, a Senator from Louisiana, for pay and mileage as Senators for the unexpired term named, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

[Second session of the Forty-fourth Congress.]

Mr. West submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That John Ray, claimant for the seat in the Senate vacated by the resignation of William P. Kellogg, late Senator of Louisiana, be paid the sum of $1,329.14 out of the contingent fund of the Senate."

TUESDAY, January 15, 1878.

Mr. Kellogg submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate full compensation and mileage as Senators to John Ray and William L. McMillen for the unexpired term of William P. Kellogg in the Forty-second Congress."

*Taken from Senate Reports, 1st sess. 43d Cong., No. 476.

FRIDAY, March 22, 1878.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Kellogg January 15, 1878, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay to John Ray and William L. McMillen the compensation and mileage of Senators for the unexpired term of William P. Kellogg in the Forty-second Congress, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 182) thereon.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.*

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Wadleigh (chairman), Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Ingalls, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hill.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 22, 1878.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred Senate resolution to pay John Ray and William McMillen compensation and mileage, report as follows:

The full term of William P. Kellogg, Senator from Louisiana, expired March 3, 1873. He resigned January 13, 1873.

At the last-named date there were two bodies in Louisiana claiming to be the legal legislatures of that State. One of these bodies elected John Ray to fill the unexpired term; the other elected William L. McMillen. Their respective credentials in due form were presented to the Senate on the 22d day of January, 1873. Those of John Ray were certified to by William P. Kellogg, governor; those of William L. McMillen were certified to by John McEnery. Both sets of credentials were, on the day of their presentation to the Senate, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On the 20th of February, 1873, the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported—

1. That there is no State government at present existing in the State of Louisiana.

2. That neither John Ray nor W. L. McMillen is entitled to a seat in the Senate, neither having been elected by the legislature of the State of Louisiana.

The first proposition was submitted by the committee to the Senate by virtue of a resolution passed January 16, 1873, in the following terms:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether there is a legal State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it was constituted."

As part of the committee's report of February 20, 1873, a bill was submitted ordering an election in Louisiana. This measure was considered at great length by the Senate, and was rejected February 27, 1873. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table March 1, 1873.

No decision was ever made by the Senate of the question whether there was or was not, at the time specified, a legal State government in Louisiana, but the Senate rejected the bill ordering a new election to be held in Louisiana.

The second proposition submitted by the committee, that neither Ray nor McMillen were entitled to a seat in the Senate, was never acted upon by the Senate, as the term for which they claimed to be elected expired without the question having been considered.

Throughout the investigation made by the Committee of Privileges and Elections, by order of the Senate, of the affairs of the State of Louisiana, both Ray and McMillen were in constant attendance, aiding the committee by their knowledge of the case and by their testimony in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it.

In the Forty-third Congress a resolution that Ray and McMillen be paid as Senators for the unexpired term to which they were elected was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Mr. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, who made the report on the Louisiana case from the Committee of Privileges and Elections, was chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. He submitted the following report upon the resolution giving compensation:

"Owing to the fact that in the State of Louisiana, in 1872 and 1873, there were two bodies claiming to be the legislature of that State, one known as the McEnery and the other as the Kellogg legislature, John Ray and William L. McMillen each claimed the seat made vacant in the Senate by the resignation of Hon. William P. Kellogg, and appeared and presented their credentials to the Senate, and attended before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, charged with the investigation of their claims. The committee reported against seating either of them, but both had incurred expenses in the prosecution of their claims.

"By analogy to the precedents of the Senate, your committee are of opinion that both Ray and McMillen would be entitled to the salary of a Senator from the time of their election until the disposition of their claims respectively by the Senate; but regarding this precedent as vicious, your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the actual expenses necessarily incurred by John Ray and William L. McMillen, claimants to a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana in the Forty-second Congress, in presenting their respective claims to a seat in the Senate, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; which expenses shall be presented itemized and verified by the oath of the said Ray and McMillen respectively, and the amounts shall be audited by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.'"

No action was ever had by the Senate upon this recommendation; it was not made until eighteen months after the respective credentials were presented. The claimants to the seat could not have been expected to preserve an account of items of their expenditure, nor could they have anticipated that a proposition would be submitted so entirely at variance with the idea of compensation attending Senatorial service, and so contrary to the uniform practice of the Senate.

The chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Forty-third Congress was entirely familiar with the claims of Ray and McMillen. He made the report from that committee that they were entitled to compensation, but he proposed an innovation upon the precedents of the Senate in the manner of that compensation. The proposition to change the usages of the Senate did not meet with favor, and by the action had upon the cases of Mr. Pinchback, of Louisiana, and of Mr. Sykes, of Alabama, occurring and passed upon subsequently, the Senate confirmed its uninterrupted usage. In acting upon the two last-cited cases the Senate stipulated "that in no case shall any pay be allowed to a Senator to begin earlier than the date of his election or appointment."

Upon the foregoing facts we are of opinion that each of the contestants was justified in making the contest for the seat. If the usage of the Senate in such cases be followed each should be allowed the sum of $1,334.67, being the amount of compensation and mileage from the date of his alleged election to the end of the term. But we do not recommend such an allowance, but prefer to allow to each claimant only his actual and reasonable expenses incurred in making the contest.

Under the circumstances, however, it would be clearly unjust to require of the claimants an itemized account of such expenses. They allege that they kept no such account, relying on the unbroken usage of the Senate to allow salary and not compensation, and that they cannot now furnish either items or vouchers. It appears, however, that each of these gentlemen traveled from New Orleans to Washington, remained here more than a month, laying aside all other business, and wholly devoting himself to this contest. The question required an elaborate and thorough examination of the history of the Louisiana election and the claims of the rival State governments. In this examination the contestants acted as counsel, and rendered a service in which, if they had employed other suitable counsel, they might properly pay a large fee, which should be reimbursed by the Senate.

On the whole, we recommend the payment to each of the sum of $1,000, which is considerably less than the salary and mileage, and is a moderate estimate of the actual cost and expense incurred by each.

We therefore recommend that the resolution be amended by substituting therefor the following, and that, so amended, the same be adopted: Strike out all after the words "contingent fund of the Senate" and insert "the sum of $1,000 each to John Ray and William L. McMillen, as full compensation for their expenses as contestants for a seat in the Senate for the unexpired term of William P. Kellogg in 1873."

WEDNESDAY, March 27, 1878.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. Kellogg January 15, 1878, to pay John Ray and William L. McMillen compensation and mileage as Senators from Louisiana; and the amendment reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections having been agreed to,

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $1,000 each to John Ray and William L. McMillen, as full compensation for their expenses as contestants for a seat in the Senate for the unexpired term of William P. Kellogg in 1873,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 7.

On motion by Mr. Cockrell, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Armstrong, Bailey, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Butler, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Conkling, Conover, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Dorsey, Eustis, Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Hamlin, Hereford, Hill, Hoar, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Kirkwood, Lamar, McCreery, McMillan, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morgan, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Rollins, Saulsbury, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Thurman, Windom, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Cockrell, Coke, Eaton, McDonald, Sargent, Wallace, and Whyte.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. West presented a memorial of P. B. S. Pinchback, praying speedy and definite action upon his credentials as Senator-elect from the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, February 8, 1875.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback, by unanimous consent submitted a report (No. 626), accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873."

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Anthony, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Hamilton of Maryland, and Saulsbury.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 8, 1875.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which were referred the credentials of

* A copy of the credentials is found on page 647 of the Congressional Record, vol. iii, part 1.

P. B. S. Pinchback for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

That the certificate of William Pitt Kellogg, then and now the governor of the State of Louisiana, which certificate is verified by the great seal of the State, shows that on the 17th day of January, 1873, the Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback was elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th March, 1873, by the legislature of Louisiana, in manner and form as prescribed by the act of Congress regulating the elections of Senators of the United States. Upon this certificate the committee are of opinion that Mr. Pinchback has a prima facie title to admission as a member of the Senate, and that whatever objections may exist, if any, as to the manner of his election or as to the legal character of the body by which he was elected, should be inquired into afterward.

The committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 11, 1875.—Ordered to be printed to accompany Report No. 626.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections beg leave to submit their views in relation to the admission of P. B. S. Pinchback as a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

The importance that the subject has attained by reason of the complications which now surround it impress it with a gravity not hitherto surpassed by any since the organization of the Government. We feel it to be a proper occasion to give our reasons for the course which our convictions of what is due alike to this body, to the people of Louisiana, and to the whole country impel us to pursue.

The resolution to be reported by the committee to the Senate for its consideration is as follows:

"Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873."

The certificate upon which this resolution is based is as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 15, 1873.

I, William Pitt Kellogg, governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that on the fifteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, Pinckney B. S. Pinchback was duly elected by the general assembly of this State to represent this State in the Senate of the United States for the full term of six years from the fourth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three.

Given under my hand and the seal of this State this fifteenth day of January, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

WM. P. KELLOGG.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

P. G. DESLONDE,
Secretary of State.

The power of the Senate under section 5, article 1 of the Constitution, to "judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members" is absolute and unlimited.

The object in this case is to seat P. B. S. Pinchback upon this certificate alone, irrespective of his election, and which in effect for the present excludes any consideration of the election itself.

It may be admitted that the general practice has been to admit the person chosen as a Senator to his seat upon credentials sufficiently authenticated either by the legislature or the governor of the State, subject of course to any contest that might be thereafter prosecuted in respect to his right to the seat. The credentials in themselves, it will be conceded, have no substantial value. It is the election, and the election alone, that gives to the person chosen the right to be a Senator.

The certificate of the governor of a State directed to be given by the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, upon the election of a Senator, is but the certificate of a fact upon which the official existence of the person chosen depends. It gives to it no force whatever, and without it the election is just as good. It is merely one of the evidences of the election in a solemn form, and to which due respect should always be paid. In the act referred to there is nothing said as to what effect should be given to such a certificate. It has, however, been generally regarded as sufficient in itself to presume a lawful election of the person represented by it to be chosen. It is most certainly appropriate that this act did not define the force of such a certificate. It prescribes a duty that the governor might or might not observe. The Constitution of the United States provides for the election of Senators by the legislatures of the States. This is their absolute right. Congress may regulate the time and manner of choosing Senators, and the power of Congress over the subject is limited to this only. The right of choosing Senators belongs to the legislatures alone, and such election is alone in all cases of inquiry to be determined by its records. The governor is not known in the election; no duty is imposed upon him by the Constitution in respect to it, or in respect to its authentication. The legislature, to which is alone confided the high trust of choosing Senators, can speak through its own organization, its own officers, and its own acts, as its official record will show.

The right of election is sacred; the right of having this election determined by its own record is equally sacred; for it might be that if other independent departments of the Government, as the executive, for example, possessed the right or power of authentication in the election of a Senator, you might impinge upon the full enjoyment of the power of the legislature in the due choosing of Senators. This absolute right to choose we hold should not and does not depend for its efficiency upon the action of the executive or any other officer of the State or Federal Government.

It will be observed that the certificate, such as we now have under consideration, necessarily involves these elements of belief before it can have the force which is now attempted to be given to it by the report of the committee in this case: first, that the facts stated in regard to the election are true; and second, that the person certifying as governor is in fact what he represents himself to be. The efficacy sought to be impressed upon this certificate, in at once admitting the person represented to be chosen to a seat, alone depends upon the latter fact. With this in dispute the efficient power is gone. Investigation is at once inaugurated to settle the disputed point. Inquiry leads to inquiry, and the real life of the certificate is lost in the strife, for it can be readily seen that in a contest as to whether the certificate has any validity, either by reason of the allegation that the person certifying was not in fact the governor, or from any other reason, the State might be left without a Senator, when by reference to the acts of the legislature the records would show a lawful election by a lawful body, and who could deny that a person so chosen and with such a record could not be admitted without regarding at all the contest about the certificate of the governor, or whether he was in fact governor?

We advert to this to show that a contest upon the subject of certificates at all for any legitimate cause destroys their force. It was intended that by their force alone there should be immediate unobstructed admission to a seat. It must be conceded, in order to give this effect to the certificate before us, that William Pitt Kellogg was at the time the governor of Louisiana. If he were not the governor, then it is no more than waste paper. All will admit, we presume, that this has been a subject of dispute at least since the State election which took place on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1872. A constant, earnest, and at times an aggressive protest has been made against Kellogg, as not only not entitled to be the constitutional and rightful governor of Louisiana, but as a notorious usurper, held in the position he has seized without color of right by means of the armed forces of the United States. Events occurring at the time, and continually since, and some of the most painful character, prove that he does not hold this place practically by any other tenure or power. Whatever else may be said of this notable prominent fact, all are well advised that the right of Kellogg to be governor of Louisiana is in good faith denied and resisted in every way possible to a peaceful resistance.

This at once, most naturally, opens up the inquiry as to the certificate itself, and no efficacy is to be ascribed to it until this is satisfactorily settled, for without this it is worthless for any purpose. We apprehend there is no diversity in the committee on this point. The report of the committee insists that Kellogg is the governor of Louisiana, and would proceed to show it by a course of argument and a system of evidence satisfactory to gentlemen uniting in that report. On the contrary, another course of argument, and other evidence equally satisfactory, have brought the undersigned to a very different conclusion. The broad field of inquiry and investigation is therefore opened up, for it must be manifest to an unprejudiced mind that an examination into the fact whether Kellogg was the rightful governor of Louisiana at the time he signed this certificate must bring us to his pretended election, and, with it, to the election of the body which chose Pinchback. The whole subject relating to the affairs of this State, in connection with the election held on the 4th of November, 1872, for the election of governor and other State officers, and members of the legislature, becomes involved in the very first branch of the inquiry which it is conceded by all must be made and settled before any force can be imparted to the certificate.

Before entering upon this inquiry we submit most respectfully, putting it in the mildest form, whether this is not an exceptional case from the ordinary one, where it is conceded that there was a rightful governor to sign certificates and where there was a legislature to elect. It must be admitted that no such case was ever before presented to the consideration of the Senate. Notwithstanding it has been the usual practice to admit, in the first instance, persons to a seat upon such certificates, leaving the contest, if any, to be proceeded with thereafter in the usual way, yet the very first question as to the official character of the person pretending to be governor impairs, as we have before said, the wonted efficacy of such certificate; so that when in the examination of this primary question is involved the body that chose Pinchback, and in fact the whole State government of Louisiana, would it be fair, rational, and just to stop short of the substantial merits of the case when all can be settled at once?

It will be admitted, we think, that in such a controversy, opening up both the official character of the governor and the legal validity of the legislature choosing the Senator, we could determine against the validity of the certificate, and at the same time determine the validity of the election upon the record of the legislature and upon its official power of election. Suppose that such certificates should be attacked for fraud, as they could be, could any one say that such attack would involve alone the fraudulent character of the certificate, and not the rightful issue—the election itself? The attack would involve both, and involving both, common reason would dictate that we should decide the substantial question. While we could, in such an inquiry, set aside the certificate, we would give to the person rightfully chosen his seat, and all done in the same proceeding. For if our inquiry should be alone confined to the certificate, for whatever cause, we would be exposed to the fallacy of setting it aside and then remitting the case to the governor for other or further certificate of a fact simply, when we could, and it would be our duty, ascertain the fact ourselves to end the matter.

Therefore we conceive that even in a technical sense, upon a question submitted as this is, an examination of the whole subject is necessary to come to right conclusions; but when we view it in its broad sense, and as we have it in the light of history and events daily transpiring, many of which we must or are presumed to know, as legislators and members of this body, we would consider it a gross dereliction of public duty did we confine ourselves to a technical consideration of matter not substantial when in it are involved questions of the greatest moment, and which in their proper solution demand our earnest efforts and soundest judgment.

The facts present the broadest grounds for interposition in the broadest sense to ascertain the real right and settle a question that has already given, and, until rightly settled, will give to the country the greatest concern. The facts cannot be denied that imperatively call for such an interposition; mere parchment titles, mere certificates, sink into insignificance before the patent and undeniable facts which environ this case. Never before has such a case been made, and it is to be hoped that no such one will ever be made again.

A brief reference to the prominent facts will show how entirely and necessarily the whole case is before us.

A general election was held in the State of Louisiana on the 4th day of November, 1872, for governor and other State officers, for one-half of the senate, and for all the members of the house. John McEnery and William Pitt Kellogg were the opposing candidates for governor, the former in politics being the Democratic and the latter being the Republican candidate. By the official returns made by the regular officers of election to Henry C. Warmoth, then the acknowledged governor of Louisiana, and canvassed and counted by a returning board claiming to be a legal tribunal for this purpose, McEnery was found to have 9,606 majority over Kellogg; and, in respect to the legislature, according to these same official returns, and with the overholding senators; the senate stood—Democrats and Conservatives, 22; Republicans, 11; and there were two vacancies. The house of representatives stood—Democrats and Conservatives, 71; Republicans, 39; and there were seven vacancies, showing a large majority of Democrats and Conservatives in both branches of the legislature.

Another board of returning officers, claiming also to be legally constituted, found that Kellogg was elected, and also found that a large majority of Republican members were elected to the legislature. It is admitted on all hands that this board had no official returns of the election before it, but that its canvass and count were made up from newspaper reports, the statements of unofficial persons, the political complexion of the parish, and also by counting as votes cast a large number of affidavits of persons who represented in such affidavits that they were from various causes prevented from voting, and the large mass of which, in the end, turned out to be forgeries.

ber, 1872, called an extra session of the legislature, to be held on the 9th day of December thence following. The regular session, as provided by the constitution, would begin on the 6th day of January, A. D. 1873. On the night of the 5th day of December, just five days before the meeting of the legislature in extra session, as called to convene by this proclamation, E. H. Durell, a judge of the district court of the United States at New Orleans, passed an order directing Packard, the United States marshal, to take possession of the State-house, and to hold it subject to his further order, and meanwhile to prevent all unlawful assemblages therein. Packard, with a detachment of United States troops, seized the State-house, held it for weeks, and refused admission to any member of the legislature not returned by the board of returning officers headed by John Lynch, and which, in the course of these views, we shall designate as the Lynch board to distinguish it from the other boards. The consequence was that on the day of meeting, the 9th of December, no member not returned by the Lynch board was permitted to enter into the State-house. The members meeting there organized. The members, or rather the Democratic and Conservative portion of them, returned by the board of returning officers, which we shall designate by calling it the De Feriet board, met at the city hall and organized. Governor Warmoth at once recognized the latter body as the lawful legislature of Louisiana, and their place of meeting as the State-house.

Upon the organization of the body at the State-house, so called—it being the Mechanics' Institute hall, it being improvised into a State-house, there being no State-house for the purpose provided by the State since the removal of the capital to New Orleans—consisting of Republicans, it at once passed articles of impeachment against Warmoth, and, by virtue thereof, P. B. S. Pinchback, then lieutenant-governor, took upon himself the office of governor, and claimed to act as such. Kellogg, who was a Senator in Congress at the time he became a candidate for governor, resigned his seat in the Senate, by reason of which a vacancy took place in this body from that State. Each of these bodies thus organized elected a Senator to fill this vacancy. One, the McEnery body, as we shall designate it, elected Mr. McMillen, and the other, the Kellogg body, elected Mr. Ray for the unexpired term. Each presented their credentials regularly signed and attested, Mr. McMillen by Governor Warmoth, and Mr. Ray by Acting Governor Pinchback, each claiming to be the lawful governor of Louisiana. The extra session closed, and on the 6th day of January, 1873, the regular session began. Both bodies met at the same places and both organized. The one, Democratic, declared John McEnery duly elected, and the other, Republican, declared William P. Kellogg duly elected. Both qualified, and both proclaimed themselves to be the governor of Louisiana.

On Tuesday, the 15th day of January, the day fixed for electing a Senator for the long term, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1873, the one body, the Democratic, elected W. L. McMillen, and the other, the Republican, P. B. S. Pinchback. Both came here with credentials, those of McMillen signed by McEnery, and those of Pinchback signed by Kellogg, each representing himself to be governor, and in all other respects are in due form, and attested by the seal, or the pretended seal, of the State. The certificates of both were presented in March, 1873, and ultimately referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

We have, therefore, presented to our consideration by the certificates before us the fact of two rival bodies and of two rival governors in the State of Louisiana—in fact, of two rival governments, each claiming to be the rightful government of Louisiana, each body claiming to be the lawful legislature of Louisiana and each sending rival Senators for a seat in this body, and each coming accredited with his certificate of election from the respective governors, each claiming to be the rightful governor of Louisiana. It is due alike to the people of Louisiana and to the dignity and constitution of this body that we use all the means in our power for a fair and just ascertainment of the rights of each to send a representative here. It must be acknowleged that as presented it is an exceedingly delicate question, and should be approached with all the spirit of fairness and candor of which the human judgment is capable. It is the first time in our history in which any such case has ever been presented to us, and it grows out of the unsettled condition of society in that State.

The question involves an inquiry into the fact as to which of two governors and of two bodies constitute the rightful governor and the rightful legislature of the State. And, indeed, further, in the progress of such an inquiry, whether there is any legislature at all qualified to elect a representative in this body to legislate not only upon matters affecting the affairs of Louisiana but of the whole country.

To our minds such a development of facts as we have, both historically and by the investigations and reports of both Houses of Congress made upon the subject-matter, that we should be confined to the inquiry only of ascertaining whether the certificate of the governor was surreptitious, or whether the person certifying was, in truth, the governor he represents himself to be, and not permitted to inquire whether the governor and the body electing (of which he is certifying) are both surreptitious, is beyond our comprehension, and where, especially as in this case, the examination of one is the examination of both, one is incidental to the other, and the facts upon which either claim their right of action are interwoven with the facts that apply to both—the one an examination of the certificate of what was done, and the other of the fact of what was done.

With these views we beg leave to examine the whole case, and to submit the conclusions to which we have arrived.

In the first place, however, we propose to confine ourselves to the consideration of the case as presented by the committee upon the certificate alone of Kellogg. It will be observed that the report of the committee puts the question in definite terms. It declares Kellogg "then and now the governor of Louisiana." It asserts what is denied, and presents as the sole question to be determined whether Kellogg was the governor of Louisiana at the time he signed this certificate; and this being so, we are then estopped from going behind it in the first instance by the usage of the Senate.

Thus confined in this stage of our inquiry to this single question, it becomes important for us to know all the facts and circumstances upon which Kellogg must rely in order to constitute him the rightful governor of Louisiana, and to this point we shall now direct our attention.

When we speak of the governor of Louisiana of course we must mean only that he is the governor according to the constitution and laws of that State. By the forty-eighth article, title 3, of the constitution of Louisiana it is provided that the supreme executive power shall be vested in a governor, who is to hold his office for four years, to be elected by the people. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared duly elected. In case of a tie between two or more candidates one of them shall be immediately chosen governor by the joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

No one, therefore, can be the constitutional governor of that State unless he be chosen in the manner prescribed.

We should, however, always be careful when the question, so grave in its nature, is raised, as in this case, to consider all the direct as well as the indirect facts and circumstances proving or tending to prove the real issue.

And here it is important to remember, in order to avoid misconception, that in determining this question in this or any similar case we are confined solely to powers conferred upon this body to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. Within this scope we possess all power, and our judgment is binding upon all, and cannot be brought into question by any person or tribunal whatever. But beyond this we cannot go; our acts can only have reference to one thing—whether the person chosen is entitled to be a member. Our decision is only binding when applied to this one particular fact. Our decision may be right or it may be wrong—that is for us to bear; but it does not bind other persons or other departments of the Federal or State governments, having other and different relations with the governor or legislature, or both, from contesting or confirming the rights of either or both to legal existence. Our decision here may be cited to show what we did, but it can be used only as an illustration of what others thought and did, and not as binding upon them except, as we have before stated, upon the fact of Senatorship, in which our jurisdiction is complete and final and binding upon all. The decision of this body upon this question, be it what it may, does not establish or disestablish the Kellogg government, so as to affect or conclude the rights of others not involved in the election of Senator itself. The people of Louisiana may consider themselves outraged by our action in receiving a Senator not elected by what they may hold to be the rightful legislature; nevertheless they are bound by it, because we have the right to judge and determine; but will any one pretend to say that the separate action of this body upon this single question, committed exclusively to its jurisdiction, should bind and conclude any other person and any other department, either State or Federal, in their own separate and distinct relations with this legislature, or as to any rights they may have as against or instead of it? Surely not! Therefore our decision does not vest a single right or confer a single power upon any other human being save the person upon which we have passed and admitted to membership upon this floor.

But to recur to the question. If, in the course of the investigation, from all the facts drawn from all the sources to which we have referred, we conclude that the pretended governor is a mere usurper, then his acts are void and avail nothing. Persons hold office or place under three different tenures—first, de jure; second, de facto; and, third, as a usurper—the only three modes, we believe, known to the law; and by one or the other of these tenures does the person exercise the office or place that he holds.

The first is clothed with all the powers that right, combined with possession, can give. The second is only clothed with the powers possession can give, that possession being obtained under a color of right; and these powers are limited to certain well-defined acts. The third refers to a person undertaking to hold office without any color of right; he is a mere usurper, whose acts are void.

The distinguishing differences between officers de jure and de facto and a mere usurper are well laid down in the books in the earlier days, and the same are observed to this day. In a leading case, decided so far back as 1738, the general principles relating to officers de jure and de facto were well defined. In this case one Goldwire, "under pretense and color of being elected mayor of Christ Church, in the county of Southampton," was presented unto William Willis, steward of the court leet, and was there sworn into the office of mayor, and, in fact, exercised the office till —— day of ——, 1736, and that being in the exercise of said office, and under "pretense of being elected, and sworn into the same, he issued a summons to the several burgesses of the corporation to meet," &c., and at such meeting he nominated the defendant Lisle as one of the burgesses, and the question was whether, when he made such nomination, he was mayor de facto, for it was found that he had never been elected, and, if mayor de facto, whether he had the power to make the appointment. It was held by the court that Goldwire was not so much as a mayor de facto; for in order to constitute a mayor de facto it is necessary that there be some form or color of an election: but without this, the taking the title and regalia of the office, and the acting and being sworn in as mayor are not sufficient. Now, here it appears that Goldwire was never elected in fact; and though it be stated that he was sworn at the leet, it does not appear (as it ought) that this was agreeable to the constitution of the borough. And it is not material that he acted as mayor, as it is found that a quo warranto was recently prosecuted against him, pending which the present election was made, and that he was thereupon adjudged to be a usurper." (Andrews's Reports, Henry vs. Lisle, 173.) The distinctions then made are continued to this day, and are as clearly defined:

"An officer de facto is one who exercises the duties of an office under color of an appointment or election to that office. He differs, on the one hand, from a mere usurper of an office, who undertakes to act as an officer without any color of right, and on the other from an officer de jure, who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office. These distinctions are very obvious, and have always been recognized."—(17 Connecticut, Plymouth vs. Painter, 588; 7 Johnson, People vs. Collins, 549; 2 Kent.)

It is claimed by some that though it be a question whether Kellogg be a governor de jure, yet he is a governor de facto, and as such his certificate of the election of Pinchback is to be recognized as equally binding upon us as if he were governor de jure.

Holding, as we do, that he is neither the governor de jure nor de facto, but a mere usurper, and a usurper not keeping himself in position by his own unaided local power, but by the aid of armed forces of a foreign power—in its true relations to this case as much a foreign power as that of Great Britain could be—we desire, briefly, to examine this phase of the subject.

Keeping in view the rulings we have cited, is Kellogg so much as a governor de facto? In disposing of this we dispose of his character as governor de jure.

As we have already noticed, the constitution of Louisiana provides that the governor shall be elected by the people. To be such de facto, he must be in by color of an election. If he has no color of an election, he is nothing but a usurper, "who is one undertaking to act without a color of right." Two propositions are to be here considered, in order to arrive at correct conclusions—

1. Was Kellogg elected by a majority of the votes of the people at the election held on the 4th day of November, 1872?

2. If he was not, then had he such a color of an election as to constitute him governor de facto?

This brings us to the wider domain of fact which at every step has marked this controversy from its inception in 1872 to the present period. In the direct examination of the matter, all the facts that may tend to a correct result should be considered. We have a great variety of facts and circumstances, some historical in their character, some which we are obliged to know or are assumed to know from our constitutional relations to the State, her people, her government, her officials, whether judicial, ministerial, executive, or political, and those which we have gathered ourselves through committees of this body in the investigation had by resolution of this body passed on 16th January, 1873, and which is as follows: "Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether there is any existing State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it is constituted;" and to which committee were also referred the certificates of John Ray and W. L. McMillen, both claiming the seat in this body supposed to have been made vacant by the resignation of William Pitt Kellogg.

This committee, composed of Messrs. Morton, Carpenter, Logan, Anthony, Trumbull, Alcorn, and Hill, made a diligent and laborious investigation of all the matters connected with both questions, and made an elaborate report to the Senate, accompanied by a large amount of testimony. It is Senate report No. 457, Forty-second Congress, third session. From all the evidence, then, and which covers and exhausts the whole subject, was Kellogg in fact elected by the people of Louisiana the governor of that State? The testimony shows that the election was held on the 4th day of November, 1872, and that it was held under the election laws of that State, approved March 16, 1870, and that official returns were made of that election to the governor of the State by the supervisors of registration as required by the fifty-third section of that act.

The fifty-fourth section of the same act provides for a returning board, before whom all returns are to be laid by the governor, the governor being one of the board by virtue of his office, and this board is to canvass and compile these returns of elections and make returns of the persons elected to the secretary of state. Henry C. Warmoth was then governor of the State of Louisiana, having been elected in 1868, and who, by article 53, title 3 of the constitution, was to hold his office till the second Monday of January thence following the election held on the 4th day of November, 1872, and until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall have been declared as duly elected, and shall have taken the oath of office as required by the constitution. It is not our purpose just now to refer to the difficulties occurring in the organization of the board of returning officers; upon another branch of the subject we shall revert to it; but it is sufficient for our present purpose to ascertain that the election was held and the official returns were made of that election, and that they were counted and the result ascertained.

The official returns were made to the governor by the supervisors, and were by him laid before a board of returning officers, claiming to be legally constituted for this election. It may be necessary here to state that by the election law of 1870 the governor, lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, one John Lynch, and T. C. Anderson, or a majority of them, were made the returning officers for all elections in the State.

The governor had in his possession the official returns of the election, but by reason of the changes in the board through disqualifications and from other causes, and through which two boards were organized, each claiming to be the legal one, and both appealing to the courts of the State to settle their respective rights, he did not lay the official returns before either board; but, in view of the condition of things, and to get rid of the difficulties of the situation, and to get rid of both boards, he approved the law passed at the preceding session of the legislature providing the mode of conducting elections, and which repealed entirely and absolutely the election law of 1870. He approved this act November 20, 1872, and it provided specially for the selection of a board of returning officers, to be made by the senate. This at once put out of official existence the contending members of the rival boards. The senate not being in session, Warmoth then, by virtue of the power claimed by him under the constitution to fill vacancies, appointed De Feriet, Wiltz, Isabelle, Austin, and Taylor, who took the oath of office, and before whom, on the 4th day of December, 1872, he laid the official returns, and they proceeded to canvass and compile them for senators and members of the house of representatives, and declared the results, and which were then officially promulgated by Governor Warmoth. This return gave the results in both branches of the legislature as we have already stated them. On the 20th day of November, 1872, the day on which he signed the act abolishing the old board, he issued his proclamation calling an extra session of the legislature, to convene on the 9th of December.

The majority of the members of both branches of the legislature declared to be elected by this returning board met on the 9th December at the city hall in New Orleans, and organized both houses. They were recognized by Governor Warmoth as the legal legislature of Louisiana. After organization, the senate proceeded to elect five persons, taken from all political parties, to constitute the board of returning officers for elections, as required by section 2 of the act of November 20, 1872, and accordingly elected Mitchel, Forman, Thomas, Hunsaker, and Todd as such returning officers. The official returns were laid before this board by the secretary of the De Feriet board, which had just before completed a canvass of them for members of the legislature, as we have stated, and they were all again canvassed by this new board, and with the following result:

Kellogg	54,479
Majority for McEnery	11,288

The witness, Mr. Forman, a member of this board, brought with him the official returns and had them before the committee of the Senate, then investigating the case, and in all his testimony gave a satisfactory account of the manner in which the canvass was made. His evidence will be found, together with the official vote for governor, in the report made by Mr. Carpenter, and accompanying testimony on pages 75 to 83, inclusive. There was no pretense that these were not the official returns; they were before the committee. There was no effort made to invalidate them in any way. Every opportunity was given. The same section of the law requiring the supervisor of registration to send the voting list and returns to the governor also required him to make triplicates and retain one. No effort was made by the production of any duplicates to impair their correctness. It must be conceded that they were the official results, and that according to them McEnery was elected. There can be no other conclusion. It must be conceded, too, that Kellogg was not elected. Whatever right to the position as governor Kellogg may have, he certainly has none by the regular official returns of the votes of the people, as cast and returned under the constitution and laws of Louisiana.

Then, having no right whatever by virtue of the election itself, has he any right by color of an election? And this brings us to the second proposition. We can well conceive that this right by color of an election is somewhat indefinite in meaning and subject to many deductions in inferences from a given statement of facts, as in this case. Some may ascribe a more rigid construction as to what may be meant by a colorable right to a place than others. But this must be determined upon all the facts and circumstances as they are presented, and we must gather from them whether there is in good faith any colorable right to hold the place; otherwise it is a fraud and a usurpation. There must be some reasonable meaning attached to the words "colorable right," or "under color of an election." Why use them in order to create an officer de facto, and to distinguish him from a usurper, unless they do mean something or have some force?

We hold that, giving the weakest possible force to these words, there is nothing in this whole case that can give a pretense to the color of an election. It has been shown that Kellogg was not elected. Then what is there to impress him with the color of an election? Nothing whatever. A more bold, shameless, reckless usurpation is not found in history.

He stands upon one thing, and upon one thing alone, and that is the declaration that if the people had voted and voted their sentiments he would have been elected If this can give a color to a right, and dignify him with official power, even for the most limited purposes, then he is endowed with it. He pretends to hold his election by virtue of a canvass under a board claiming to be returning officers—consisting of Lynch and Herron for a time, then Bovee, Longstreet, and Hawkins—in which they gave some 17,000 majority to Kellogg.

The objections to this canvass are, first, that these gentlemen had not a tittle of authority to canvass, the law under which they pretended to act being absolutely repealed, and therefore they possessed no power whatever to do so.

And next, that there was not an official return before them to canvass; but it is admitted by Lynch in his testimony taken by the committee, found on page 155, that there were no returns before them, and that they obtained their information as to the results of the election from all kinds of sources, and from one particularly, the known political divisions of the voters of a county.

Comment upon such a canvass is unnecessary. The machinery of elections by means of which public sentiment is definitely ascertained, and our governments, both Federal and State, are carried on, is an essential element in the American system. There is no substitute for it, and without it there is no order, government, or law. It must be established for the public good, and it must be supported when established for the public safety. The collected will of the people is only known through it. The voter that does not resort to it for the expression of his will from any cause cannot be heard above it or outside of it. True, an election may be set aside for fraud, intimidation, or other pregnant cause, but still the collected will of the people must be expressed through its machinery. A citizen not voting is as dead in law as if he were in fact dead so far as concerns the affirmative expression of his political will. The question is not what the voter may have done had he voted or offered to vote, but what did he do by his vote?

But to characterize properly the power of this board to make this canvass, and the supreme folly of the canvass itself, it will only be necessary to refer to the report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, signed by Messrs. Carpenter, Logan, Anthony, and Alcorn, and to which we have already referred. The following extracts are to be found on pages 26, 27, and 28:

"One of two things is certain, the governor's approval of the new election law on the 20th of November gave it effect on that day or it did not.

"Assuming that the approval on that day was regular, the new law absolutely repealed all the laws under which the Warmoth board and the Lynch board were pretending to act, and of course abolished both boards without regard to the question which was the legal one. All that had been done in the election of November, 1872, in pursuance of the old laws, that is, the registration, voting, and returns, was as valid after the act of November 20 as before. If the canvass had been made by the proper board under the old law, and in all things completed, the rights of parties based upon that canvass would not have been affected by the repeal of the laws. But the act of November 20 taking effect after the returns were made and before they were canvassed, transferred the duty of canvassing to the new board created by the act."

Again:

"On the 6th of December, 1872, the Lynch board—Bovee (who was then acting as secretary of state in place of Herron), Lynch, Longstreet, and Hawkins—pretended to have canvassed the returns of the election, and certified to the secretary of state that Kellogg had been elected governor; Antoine, lieutenant-governor; Clinton, auditor; Field, attorney-general; Brown, superintendent of education; and Deslondes, secretary of state; and also certified to a list of persons whom they had determined to be elected to the legislature.

"There is nothing in all the comedy of blunders and frauds under consideration more indefensible than the pretended canvass of this board. The following are some of the objections to the validity of their proceedings:

"1. The board had been abolished by the act of November 20.

"2. The board was under valid and existing injunctions restraining it from acting at all, and an injunction in the Armstead case restraining it from making any canvass not based upon the official returns of the election.

"3. Conceding the board was in existence, and had full authority to canvass the returns, it had no returns to canvass.

"The returns from the parishes had been made under the law of 1870 to the governor, and not one of them was before the Lynch board.

"It was testified before your committee by Mr. Bovee himself, who participated in this canvass by the Lynch board, that they were determined to have a Republican legislature, and made their canvass to that end. The testimony abundantly establishes the fraudulent character of their canvass. In some cases they had what were supposed to be copies of the original returns, in other cases they had nothing but newspaper statements, and in other cases where they had nothing whatever to act upon they made an estimate based upon their knowledge of the political complexion of the parish of what the vote ought to have been. They also counted a large number of affidavits purporting to be sworn to by voters who had been wrongfully denied registration or the right to vote, many of which affidavits they must have known to be forgeries. It was testified by one witness that he forged over a thousand affidavits and delivered them to the Lynch board while it was in session. It is quite unnecessary to waste time in considering this part of the case, for no person can examine the testimony ever so cursorily without seeing that this pretended canvass had no semblance of integrity."

It may be well enough to observe here that besides the distinguished gentlemen who united in this report, Judge Trumbull and Mr. Hill, who were members of the committee, in this respect concurred with the report, whilst differing upon some other things, and in conclusions upon the whole case. The ability of all these gentlemen in the performance of the grave duty assigned to them is unquestioned; their labor and attention about it known and appreciated; and their party affiliations must stamp their detail of facts with freedom from all political bias in favor of McEnery and his government. Can anything more be added to show that there is not a pretense by which Kellogg can manufacture a colorable title to an election in fact?

It must be remembered that we are not in this controversy obliged to show that Mr. McEnery was elected in fact. Our purposes are answered when we show that Kellogg is not elected, or that he has no colorable title to an election.

In simple justice to the gentlemen of the committee making the report to which I have referred, whilst thus admitting that Kellogg was not elected, they come to the conclusion that, from irregularities, intimidations, and frauds, and other causes, no fair election had been held, and that it should be annulled and a new one ordered by Congress, and to be conducted under the auspices of the General Government. In order that there may be no misconception, we give the following extract from their report, which will be found on pages 44 and 45:

"The testimony shows that leading and sagacious politicians of the State, who were acting with Warmoth, entertained the opinion before the election that Warmoth's control of the election machinery was equivalent to 20,000 votes; and we are satisfied by the testimony that this opinion was well founded. We believe that, had registration been accessible to all, and the polling places been properly established, the result of the election would have been entirely different. And although we cannot approve of such a canvass as that made by the Lynch board, who seem to have acted upon the principle of 'fighting the devil with fire,' and circumventing fraud by fraud, and cannot say that Kellogg's government was elected, nevertheless we believe that Kellogg's government was defeated and the popular voice reversed by the fraudulent manipulation of the election.

"If the Senate should be inclined not to go behind the official returns of the election, then the McEnery government and legislature must be recognized as the lawful government of the State; and McMillen, if regularly elected by that legislature, should be seated in the Senate in place of Kellogg. But your committee believe that this would be recognizing a government based upon fraud, in defiance of the wishes and intention of the voters of that State."

In all this it will be observed that, whilst they condemn the manner of the election of McEnery, they take care to affirm again that Kellogg was not elected.

Then, so far as Kellogg is concerned, there is nothing to show that he had the slightest right, either by an election or the color of an election, to hold this office. He must therefore be regarded as a usurper; for in no other character could he hold the place, if not in that of governor de jure or de facto.

The principles are well and plainly defined in the case of Plymouth vs. Painter, 17 Conn., already quoted, in respect to the acts of persons holding place under one or the other of these modes. The following is from page 593:

"The acts of a mere usurper of an office, without any color of title, are undoubtedly wholly void, both as to individuals and the public. But where there is a color of a lawful title, the doings of an officer, as it respects third persons and the public, must be respected until he is ousted on a quo warranto, which is the appropriate proceeding to try the validity of a title to an office, and in which it would be necessary for him to show a complete title in all respects; although in a suit against a person for acts which he would have an authority to do only as an officer, he must, in order to make out a justification, show that he is an officer de jure; because the title to the office being directly drawn in question, in a suit to which he is a party, may be regularly decided. So where he sues for fees, or sets up a title to property by virtue of his office, he must show himself to be an officer de jure."

It is here laid down—

First, that the acts of a usurper are void.

Secondly, that the acts of an officer in by a color of title—that is, an officer de facto, where the rights of third persons or the public are concerned—are to be respected.

Thirdly, that where he is directly concerned he must show himself to be an officer de jure whenever the direct issue is made, either as to title, or fees, or as a trespasser, or otherwise.

If Kellogg, then, be a usurper, the certificate relied upon in this case has no value for any purpose. But let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that Kellogg was governor de facto; that he was in by color of an election, and by color of an election only, and not by an election itself; with such knowledge upon our part, with the known fact, besides, that his right to the place is denied and contested, that there is a rival governor, in fact a rival government, we should proceed with great caution in giving such efficacy to his simple certificate. True, the third section of the act of Congress of 1866, making provision for the election of Senators, makes it the duty of the governor to certify the election to the President of the Senate; it still stops short of prescribing the force of such a certificate. No doubt Congress intended that ordinarily it should be regarded as sufficient for admission to a seat, but it must be manifest that this certificate is not the real credentials of a Senator-elect, but intended originally, we may presume, as a substitute for it. The real credentials of the election is a copy of the record of the election itself, properly certified by the officers of the body electing; for Congress has no right to impose this duty upon the governor, and that neither it nor the person elected can compel the governor to issue any such certificate.

There must be design in not presenting a certified copy of the record of election by the legislature instead of depending alone upon this certificate of the governor, when it was well known that every step in the progress of this case would be contested. The declaration in the report submitted by the committee, that Kellogg was then and now the governor of Louisiana, defines the spirit of the whole proceeding; and that is that it is more of an object to get Kellogg recognized in some way as governor by this body than the admission of Pinchback to a seat in it.

Therefore should we be more careful still how we undertake, in giving ostensible credence alone to a certificate, to pass upon a higher matter—the legal character of the person giving it. Why not, in such an acknowledged condition of things, recur to his credentials, which the record of the election or a copy of it can make? But, that produced, it is too apparent that the contest would be transferred from the governor to the legislature; the legislature is out of being, and therefore the fact of an election by it can only be inquired into; but the governor is still living in the place in which he was put, and still kept by an armed force, and to be kept there if his acts are to be respected or sanctioned by us. How shall we close our eyes to the facts staring us in the face? We again beg leave to repeat that with the assumption that Kellogg is at best but a governor de facto, with a rival governor claiming the right, and with the acknowledged power to exercise it in the absence of the troops of the United States, should we not be careful, if we can in any way abstain from determining questions of the present, which concern alone the present, and which should be determined in a different way and by all branches of the Government, if to be determined at all by it. The election of Pinchback does not concern the present; the body electing him is functus officio. He must stand or fall by the action of that body. Let us go back to that, and upon the acts and legal validity of that body determine the right to a seat. We say again that the passage of the resolution decides only one thing, the right of membership, and binds no one to anything besides; but the fact that in doing this we have acknowledged the legal validity of Kellogg's official character may influence others or justify others in doing things to the infinite injustice of the people of Louisiana, and to the persons there claiming to be officers by virtue of a rightful election.

Again, we well understand the principles which limit and qualify the powers of an officer de facto. His acts are scanned and judged; he can do only those that are to be considered as necessary to be done; indeed, so confined in this respect that it was held, in the case of King vs. Lisle, that the proper question in a case would be "whether the person be an officer de facto as to the particular purpose under consideration;" he can do nothing for himself; he cannot set up title by virtue of his office; he cannot sue for his fees or salary; he cannot justify in a trespass; he can do nothing that may bring in issue his right to hold the office without showing that de jure right for the exercise of it. As a judge de facto his judgment in a litigation between third parties would be good; a sale of property under such a judgment would be good to pass title; and for the reason that third parties are not supposed to be able to inquire into the rights of one holding and exercising the duties of the office, and must therefore act upon what appears to be the right. But a sheriff de facto seizing and selling the property under that or any other judgment in a suit against him for the seizure by the owner or possessor of the property, he must for his defense show that he held his office de jure, for this concerns himself only, and he should know whether he was in right an officer.

Shorn of the general and enlarged powers of an officer de jure by the plainest principles of law, limited and circumscribed by rules founded in reason and having the sanction of ages, shall we be disposed to give to the act of such an officer—governor de facto, if even he be such—that full and unqualified effect in this case, with the extraordinary circumstances surrounding it, as if he were an officer de jure, when that act, too, bears directly upon the constitution of this body, which we are bound to guard, and upon the right of a State to have its true representatives upon this floor? In regard to the constitution of this body the direct issue is made; this pretended governor represents himself to be the governor of Louisiana, and upon this alone does the committee rest the case. It is admitted that he must be the governor to give the certificate any power whatever. In raising the question it is shown that he is only governor de facto, if governor at all, and not de jure, that is, governor for a purpose only, and that purpose to be judged of, whether proper or not, when the exigency arises. It is upon us, and it is whether we shall constitute members of this body upon the certificates of such a governor, or shall we not rather recur, as we have before inquired, into the election itself or the record of it.

Upon this body rests the duty of preserving its own organization, and of admitting its own members. Here its power is supreme, and for its independence it must depend upon this power, and its proper and legal and rational exercise; and it is to judge of the fact whether a certificate (not of a governor, as contemplated by the law, a rightful governor in all respects—but of such a governor) shall have the efficacy now asked for it.

Indeed, in this very case, in the complications in Louisiana, the troubles and disorders there, the very soul of the objection that we now urge against the recognition of this certificate is made to appear. There is trouble about the State government in that State. There is trouble as to who is the constitutionally elected governor, both claiming it, and as to which body of the two claiming to be the legislature is the real one. In this contest, where so much right is involved, and where right should be done, might it not be that, if we should admit Pinchback upon the certificate of Kellogg, we would to that extent recognize him as the rightful governor of Louisiana, and possibly direct additional power against the other side. Would this be wise, and just, and expedient; and when we know, too, that so far as the certificate in itself is concerned it adds nothing to title, but that the election constitutes this? If it is the policy to settle these disturbances in Louisiana, to recognize either governor or none, do it in the usual manner known to the laws, and that is by legislation upon the part of Congress, when the whole subject can be considered, and the remedy, if any, be applied.

Having come to the conclusion that Kellogg was a mere usurper and the certificate not entitled to respect, or if it should be considered by some that he was the governor de facto, that even in this view no force ought to be given to his certificate, we are brought to the consideration of the main fact itself, the election of Pinchback by a legislature. While this is not technically before us, it is substantially. While the report of the committee bases its action entirely upon the force of the certificate, the resolution submits the question of admission generally. It cannot be denied that the inquiry upon one branch opens up the whole subject, and one cannot be well considered without considering both.

This brings us to the examination of the body organized under the returns made by the Lynch board, to which we have referred in the other branch of the case. In looking into the organization that elected Pinchback, the surreptitious inauguration of Kellogg into the gubernatorial office pales into insignificance before the fraudulent creation of this body into a legislature and of its shameless pretension to power.

Even admit that Kellogg was the rightful governor of Louisiana, and that his certificate should have all the force which could properly under ordinary circumstances attach to it, still all the facts are before us, and they are of the gravest character. The question is not who are members of the legislature of Louisiana—for that body is the judge of this, and of their elections and qualifications; with these we have nothing to do; but the question is as to the legislature as organized, whether there is one in being to elect, and whether such an one elected Pinchback. The existence of a legislature competent to elect a Senator is not only a historical fact to be known to us as any other patent fact, but it is one which is susceptible of proof.

It will be necessary again to give a brief résumé of the facts known to exist in Louisiana respecting the organization of the body claiming to be the legislature of that State, and which elected Pinchback.

It will be remembered that the election occurred on the 4th day of November, 1872, and it was held under the election law passed in 1870. The law provided for a board of returning officers, before whom all the returns of the State were to be laid by the governor, to be canvassed and compiled; and further provided that the governor, Warmoth; the lieutenant-governor, Pinchback; secretary of state, Herron, and John Lynch, and T. C. Anderson comprise this board. It met on the 13th and 14th November. Pinchback and Anderson, being candidates for office, were disqualified. The governor, Warmoth, removed Herron and appointed Wharton in his stead as secretary of state, by virtue of which he claimed to be a member of the board. Differences arose in supplying the vacancies occasioned by the disqualification of Pinchback and Anderson. The result was two sets of returning officers, each claiming to be the rightful, legal board; one headed by Warmoth as governor, consisting of himself as governor, Wharton as secretary of state, Hatch and Da Ponte, the latter being chosen to fill the vacancies. The other board, headed by Lynch, consisting of himself, Herron, who still claimed to be secretary of state, Longstreet, and Hawkins, the latter being chosen to fill the vacancies. Both boards applied to the courts of the State, and in the midst of the litigation as to which was the legal board, the governor, Warmoth, on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1872, approved an act which had been passed at the previous session of the legislature, repealing entirely the act passed March 16, 1870, for conducting elections, and under which this election had been conducted up to this time. This act abolished the returning board established by the act of 1870, and made provision for another one to be elected by the senate. This disposed of both boards. No election returns had been laid before either. There being no returning board in legal existence to canvass the returns, and there being no session of the senate, so that a board could be elected as provided by the law, to consist of five persons, the governor claimed his right to make the appointments under the power to fill vacancies as provided by this article of the constitution of Louisiana (article 61, title 3): "The governor shall have power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next sessien thereof unless otherwise provided for in this constitution," &c. On the 3d day of December he appointed De Feriet, Wiltz, Isabelle, Austin, and Taylor. On the day following he submitted the official returns to them, and they canvassed and compiled them, and with the results we have before given, showing a large majority of Democrats and Conservatives in both branches of the legislature. Upon the same day he made official proclamation of the results ascertained by this board, as follows:

Proclamation.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, December 4, 1872.

Whereas P. S. Wiltz, Gabriel De Feriet, Thomas Isabelle, J. A. Taylor, and J. E. Austin, returning officers appointed by the governor to fill vacancies existing, in accordance with the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana, have made declaration of the result of an election held November 4, 1872, and have declared certain persons elected to the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana, as will appear from the returns herewith attached and made a part of this proclamation; and

Whereas such returns are compiled from the official returns of commissioners of election and supervisors of registration, on file in this office, and are in fact and in form accurate and correct, and made in accordance with law:

Now, therefore, I, Henry Clay Warmoth, governor of the State of Louisiana, do issue this my proclamation, making known the result of said election aforesaid, and command all officers and persons within the State of Louisiana to take notice of and respect the same.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 4th of December, A. D. 1872, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

H. C. WARMOTH.

By the governor:

Y. A. WOODWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State.

At the same time the Lynch board, continuing its organization notwithstanding the repeal of the act under which they pretended to canvass, and from the data to which we have already referred, declared who were elected members of the legislature, a large majority of whom were Republicans.

Governor Warmoth, when he approved the bill on the 20th November repealing the election law of 1870, at the same time called an extra session of the legislature to convene on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1872, the regular session being that to begin in January, 1873.

Warmoth was the regularly constituted governor of Louisiana. The only board of returning officers in existence having the semblance of law to sustain a legal character was the De Feriet board, appointed by him. This board, and only this board, had canvassed the official, regular returns of the election, and announced the result, and gave certificates of election. It was well known that the governor, wielding the whole executive authority of Louisiana, would recognize the members as returned elected by the De Feriet board to be rightfully entitled to organize the legislature; that the members would meet on the 9th of December, as was directed by his proclamation, and organize the legislature; and that it would be recognized as the legislature of that State, as it would be in right and in fact the legislature. It was well known that that organization would run into the regular session, and that, continuing the legislature of this State, the returns as examined by the De Feriet board would be submitted to it, and that McEnery would have been declared elected, and would have peaceably entered into the exercise of the office of governor, which would, of course, have closed the career of Kellogg, Pinchback, and their associates for the present in this respect.

All this was well apprehended by Kellogg and his associates. The State courts had failed them, and the determination was to resort to another and a stronger tribunal. Kellogg, Pinchback, and Packard determined to enlist the courts of the United States in their behalf. So early as the 16th of November William Pitt Kellogg filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana against Governor Warmoth and others, ostensibly for the purpose of preserving or perpetuating the evidence of the official returns of the election, then in the hands of Warmoth, or under his control, and praying, among other things, for an injunction. On the day following, the injunction was issued as prayed by the bill.

On the 20th November the defendants answered the bill, and the case rested until the 5th of December.

On the 4th of December Governor Warmoth issued the proclamation before cited, whereupon the judge, E. H. Durell, without any application or motion whatever made in the cause, issued the following order:

"Circuit court of the United States, fifth circuit and district of Louisiana, in equity.

"WILLIAM P. KELLOGG vs. H. C. WARMOTH ET AL. } No. 6830.

"Whereas Henry C. Warmoth, one of the respondents herein, has, in violation of the restraining order herein, issued the following proclamation and returns of certain persons claiming to be a board of returning officers, all in violation and contempt of said restraining order, as follows, viz, &c., &c.:

"Now, therefore, in order to prevent the further obstruction of the proceedings in this cause, and, further, to prevent a violation of the orders of this court, to the imminent danger of disturbing the public peace, it is hereby ordered that the marshal of the United States for the district of Louisiana shall forthwith take possession of the building known as the Mechanics' Institute, and occupied as the State-house for the assembling of the legislature therein, in the city of New Orleans, and hold the same subject to the further order of this court, and meanwhile to prevent all unlawful assemblage therein under the guise or pretext of authority claimed by virtue of pretended canvass and returns made by said pretended returning officers in contempt and violation of said restraining order; but the marshal is directed to allow the ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same.

"E. H. DURELL."

This was done on the night of the 5th of December, and at 2 o'clock on the morning of the 6th of December Marshal Packard, with a detachment of United States soldiers, seized the State-house and held it for weeks.

Under that order this pretended legislature was organized, and the members only who were returned by the Lynch board were permitted to enter the hall or participate in the organization. This organization continued to be protected by the military power of the United States through the extra session into the regular, which began its session on the 6th day of January, and all the time under the protection of the military authority of the United States, and, indeed, which protection has continued to this day. It will be proper to observe that Kellogg commenced his proceedings in the United States courts on the 16th of November. A few days thereafter, on the 27th of November, Kellogg writes to Attorney-General Williams the following:

"I therefore respectfully suggest that General Emory, who I think appreciates the necessity and sympathizes with the Republican party here, be instructed to comply with any requisition that the United States courts may make upon him in support of its mandates and to preserve peace. As at present advised, I think General Emory understands that he is to use the troops in no contingency without instructions from Washington."

On December 3 the following order was received from Washington:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,
United States Marshal, New Orleans, La.:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

On the night of the 5th of December the mandate of Judge Durell was made, and on the morning of the 6th the military, in pursuance of the order of Attorney-General Williams, seized the State-house, and the plot to seize the State government of Louisiana was consummated.

The simple detail of these facts ought to be sufficient in themselves to characterize the whole transaction without any illustration upon our part. There was not a step taken in the whole proceeding that is to be justified; there is no single act to be supported by any resort to reason, law, or justice. The reckless assumption of Judge Durell to interpose in matters wholly belonging to the State authorities, and in terms prohibited from doing what he did by the very law of Congress under which he pretended to derive authority to act, is beyond all precedent, and one cannot adequately characterize it in language to be used here. The atrocity of his action in directing the marshal of the United States to seize the State-house, where the legislature of the State was to convene, and further directing him to allow certain of its members only to enter it, has but few parallels anywhere, and none before in American history. The whole proceeding from its inception down to its final consummation was a gross usurpation accompanied with every species of fraud and tyranny. The body that was organized under this mandate and its military enforcement is not entitled to any legal existence that any American should acknowledge. The whole is a product of fraud, conspiracy, and of armed force, and is entitled to no consideration.

We wish it to be remembered that we are not inquiring into the component parts of a legislative body. Each house of the legislature must do that for itself. We are inquiring into the aggregate character of the body as organized and as it represents itself to be—a legislature; how it was brought into being; how supported; and under what authority. We find no single element in it to constitute it a legislature representing the free people of Louisiana under their constitution and laws; but, on the contrary, simply a body organized under the mandate of a Federal judge supported by the armed force of the United States, based upon a pretended election found by a returning board without a single official return, and not having a tittle of authority, and acting in violation and in defiance of all law. We find that body, pretending to be the legislature of Louisiana, the mere creature of a conspiracy as bold, as reckless, and as wicked as any that has ever disgraced the annals of history. We speak thus strongly because our instincts as American citizens prompt us to the reprobation it so signally deserves. This body thus organized chose P. B. S. Pinchback a Senator in Congress for the period he claims.

The large mass of the members of it were never elected in fact; the returning board declaring them to be elected had not a single power to do so; it never had an official return before it. Judge Durell had no power to issue his mandate and the troops had no right to enforce it. In the whole tragedy of events, as each succeeded the other, there was not one single act that could for a moment give a color of right to any other. Every one was an undoubted wrong, crime, or usurpation, and yet all combined, and nothing else, organized this body and kept it in being. Can such a body, we ask, so organized, put upon the Senate and upon the people of Louisiana their creature, and he one of the main conspirators? Kellogg, Pinchback, Casey, Packard, Durell, and Williams—names indelibly written upon every page of this most unnatural history of political crime and folly! There is not a single act in the whole proceeding to mitigate the unqualified condemnation it must receive at the hands of every honest man and of every sincere lover of American liberty and of constitutional government.

We have stated that the Lynch board, pretending to canvass the returns, had no legal existence; that no official returns were before it to canvass; that the order of Judge Durell was not only void for want of jurisdiction, but that it was a gross usurpation. To sustain all this it is not necessary to depend upon our own declarations; but we recur, and with pleasure, to the able report so often referred to. In addition to what we have already quoted upon this subject, we give the following. In speaking of this order of Judge Durell, and in connection with it of the De Feriet board, the committee say on page 17:

"It is impossible to conceive of a more irregular, illegal, and in every way inexcusable act on the part of a judge. Conceding the power of the court to make such an order, the judge out of court had no more authority to make it than had the marshal. It has not even the form of judicial process. It was not sealed, nor was it signed by the clerk, and had no more legal effect than an order issued by any private citizen.

"There had been no amendment of the bill of complaint. The law of November 20 had been promulgated. The De Feriet board had been appointed in pretended pursuance thereof. Whether, under the constitution, the governor had the power, in the vacation of the legislature, to appoint that board, upon the ground that the act of November 20 created offices, and therefore vacancies in office, your committee do not inquire. But it is understood that the constitution has been so construed in that State, and that Judge Dibble was appointed by the governor under similar circumstances.

"The De Feriet board, therefore, had color of official existence. Their canvass was completed and the result promulgated under color of the State law, and it is clear that this gave the Federal court no more right to seize the State-house than to seize the Capitol."

Further, in speaking of Judge Durell, the committee say on page 27:

"Viewed in any light in which your committee can consider them, the orders and injunctions made and granted by Judge Durell in this cause are most reprehensible, erroneous in point of law, and are wholly void for want of jurisdiction; and your committee must express their sorrow and humiliation that a judge of the United States should have proceeded in such flagrant disregard of his duty, and have so far overstepped the limits of Federal jurisdiction."

Again, on page 28, the committee say:

"But for the interference of Judge Durell in the matter of this State election, a matter wholly beyond his jurisdiction, the McEnery government would to-day have been the de facto government of the State. Judge Durell interposed the Army of the United States between the people of Louisiana and the only government which has the semblance of regularity, and the result of this has been to establish the Kellogg government, so far as that State now has any government. For the United States to interfere in a State election, and by the employment of troops set up a governor and legislature without a shadow of right, and then to refuse redress of the wrong upon the ground that to grant relief would be interfering with the rights of the State, is a proposition difficult to utter with a grave countenance. Besides, it is impossible to determine to what extent the supreme court may have been influenced in rendering this decision by the fact that the Kellogg government, the creation of the Lynch board, had already been established, and the expectation that it would be sustained by Federal authority."

Again, the committee, in discussing another point of the subject, allude incidentally to the manner in which the Kellogg legislature was organized. The committee say, on page 47 of their report:

"In November, 1872, Judge Howe, of the supreme court, resigned, and Governor Warmoth commissioned J. H. Kennard to fill the vacancy. After the Kellogg legislature was organized under Judge Durell's injunction, enforced by United States troops, the house of representatives of that legislature pretended to impeach and suspend Governor Warmoth, whereupon Pinchback, who had been elected president of the senate in place of Lieutenant-Governor Dunn, deceased, which under the constitution made him lieutenant-governor, proclaimed himself acting governor in place of Warmoth, impeached and suspended. Pinchback afterward nominated Morgan, who was confirmed by the senate, to fill the same vacancy."

Also, we cannot refrain from giving the following from the chairman of the committee, Mr. Morton, who in a dissenting opinion used this language respecting Judge Durell and his official conduct:

"The conduct of Judge Durell, sitting in the circuit court of the United States, cannot be justified nor defended. He grossly exceeded his jurisdiction, and assumed the exercise of powers to which he could lay no claim. * * *

"But the pretense that in a suit to perpetuate testimony the court could go beyond the natural and reasonable jurisdiction to decide who constituted the legal returning board under the laws of Louisiana, and to enforce the rights of such as it might determine to be members of that board and to enjoin others who were not, is without any foundation in law or logic.

"In the Antoine case Judge Durell not only assumed to determine who constituted the legal returning board, but to prescribe who should be permitted to take part in the organization of the legislature and to enjoin all persons from taking part in such organization who were not returned by the Lynch board as elected; and this assumption of jurisdiction was made in the face of the express provision in the act of 1870 that its benefits should not extend to candidates for electors, for Congress, or for the State legislature. His order, issued in the Kellogg case to the United States marshal to take possession of the State-house for the purpose of preventing unlawful assemblages, under which the marshal called to his aid a portion of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus, can only be characterized as a gross usurpation."

Thus it appears that the whole committee regarded the acts of Judge Durell as a gross usurpation; yet upon that act alone rests the organization of the Kellogg legislature. A body thus organized and thus constituted, as shown by all the facts in the case, is not entitled to any respect, and particularly is not entitled to impose a Senator upon this chamber, upon the country, and especially upon the people of Louisiana, as their representative upon this floor. In contrast with this body, we know there was a rival body, a rival State government, so far as the State and local officers were concerned; a rival government, too, not depending upon armed forces for organization and existence. A government, though not in active power, was still in being. That rival government, the facts most conclusively show, depended for its legal existence—

First. Upon the official returns of the votes cast at the regular election, and canvassed and counted by a board of returning officers known as the De Feriet board, appointed by the governor, as he claimed he had the right to do under the act of November 20, 1872, and the board, in the opinion of the undersigned, that possessed the power to canvass the returns.

Second. Upon the official returns as canvassed and counted by the board elected by the senate of the McEnery legislature, as provided under the same act, and known as the Forman board.

Third. Upon the undoubted fact that the official returns were true and gave the results as ascertained by both boards.

Fourth. Upon the undoubted fact that the people of Louisiana are satisfied that their real will was expressed in these official returns, and that this—the McEnery—is their chosen government.

Fifth. Upon the undoubted fact that nothing could have prevented its going into peaceful operation and being the government to-day, except for the interposition of Judge Durell and his associates in that crime, supported by the armed forces of the United States.

Upon the other hand, the Kellogg government depends—

First. Upon the canvass of a returning board having no authority and having no official returns to canvass.

Second. Upon the illegal order of Judge Durell, and the enforcement of it by United States troops.

Third. Upon the military protection of the United States, and upon that protection alone, as it is an undoubted fact that the withdrawal of this protection would result in an instant dissolution and dispersion of his government.

Can the Senate hesitate to determine between such governments? The interposition of mere force without cause and without right, by which one for the present may be put up and the other down, should not deter us in determining which is the rightful one. The soldiers of the United States should not be allowed to step in between our judgment and our duty. The day is not yet upon us, we trust, when the sword is to settle questions alone for us to determine. Taking all the facts as they appear in the case before us, from the inception of each rival body to the final consummation in their respective organizations, we can determine between them. It is our duty to do so; and we have facts sufficiently numerous and authentic to determine fairly and intelligently between them. Each has chosen Senators, and both are here with certificates.

There can be no doubt that where there are rival bodies, each claiming to be the rightful legislature of a State, and each presenting a Senator for admission upon this floor, we must judge between them, for the reason that we are to judge of the elections, the qualifications, and returns of our own members; and in this we are to know whether the body choosing a Senator is the legislature having the constitutional right to do so, and that such an one did choose a Senator.

This was clearly submitted in the case of Robbins and Potter, contesting Senators from Rhode Island. Mr. Poindexter, who submitted the majority report in that case, says:

"There was but one governor and but one senate in the State claiming to be a part of the general assembly. If there had existed another body of men, however chosen, contending for the offices of the governor and senators in the State, it will not be denied that their respective rights might be the subject of inquiry in deciding a contested election in the Senate of the United States."

The right of the Senate is undoubted to judge in this respect. Its power is not limited, for the sound reason that its independence can only be absolutely preserved in possessing such a right. In exercising it here, we should not be capricious, but governed in our conduct by rules that good sense, honest intention, and a desire for truth and justice should naturally inspire. No other department of the Government ought to control it; no other department of the Government should be allowed, under any pretext or in the exercise of any power, to trench upon it. It is a primary right, for in its free and absolute exercise the very life, existence, and organization of free legislative bodies depend.

Coming to the main point again, should the Senate hesitate between the rival governments? How can the Senate recognize the Kellogg government, stamped, as it is, all over with fraud, conspiracy, and force? There is not an element of free constitutional government in it. Mere intruders and usurpers in all departments of it, how shall the Senate, in respect for constitutional government, admit that such a body as that organized under the order of Durell shall impose upon us a Senator? We might receive with just as much plausibility and complacency a Senator from the soldiery who guarded that body when it went through the forms of choosing one. The bayonet organized it, kept it in being, protected it by day and by night, and without it no one would be here pressing a claim to a seat by virtue of any authority from it.

Speaking for ourselves, we cannot in any manner acknowledge any such election. We cannot give any respect or efficacy to the certificate under consideration as that of a rightful governor, and must, therefore, declare that in our opinion P. B. S. Pinchback is not entitled to a seat as a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

It is said that the Senate is bound, or ought to be bound, by decisions of the judicial tribunals of the State when inquiring into the existence of a government or of its officers; also by the action of other departments of the State government; also by the late act of the President and by reason of the possession of the office for a length of time. We shall only briefly remark that this body is bound by nothing in the exercise of its undoubted power. But admitting that any or all of these combined should have more or less influence upon the judgment of the Senate in coming to conclusions, we may be permitted to say that, in regard to the judicial action of the courts of Louisiana in relation to this subject, the question in issue never was fairly presented, and with the further remark that it is painfully evident that a majority of the court deciding cases having relevancy at all to the subject was in complicity with the Kellogg government to maintain its power; and so with the other departments of the State government, for all depended for their very existence upon the official being of Kellogg. As to the action of the President having any binding force upon the Senate, we say that his power to act relates alone to one thing, and that is the suppression of violence when legally called upon for aid in suppressing such violence. His action cannot bind beyond the simple fact and its real dependents; it decides no right for us or for Congress. One word as to the continuous possession of Kellogg, and which it is claimed gives him some standing to be considered in this body. His possession is that of fraud and force, and this possession is to-day only held by this force. It is the possession of might against right, and the weakness of the title will at once be witnessed upon the withdrawal of the force which keeps him in place. In our opinion, there is nothing in the matters that would be set up to secure a recognition of the Kellogg government. The whole is a crime against our civilization and a blot upon our free institutions.

WILLIAM T. HAMILTON.
ELI SAULSBURY.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1875.

Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback; which were ordered to be printed, to accompany the report.

CREDENTIALS OF MR. MARR.

MONDAY, December 20, 1875.

Mr. Bayard presented a paper signed by John McEnery as governor of Louisiana and purporting to be the credentials of Robert H. Marr, appointed a Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of William L. McMillen.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

CREDENTIALS OF MR. EUSTIS.

TUESDAY, January 18, 1876.

Mr. Thurman presented papers purporting to be the credentials of J. B. Eustis as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term ending March 3, 1879.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

[The debate and a copy of the credentials are found on pages 451–455 of the Congressional Record, vol. iv, part 1.]

MONDAY, January 24, 1876.

On motion by Mr. Morton,

Ordered, That the papers purporting to be the credentials of J. B. Eustis as a Senator from the State of Louisiana be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, January 26, 1876.

Mr. West presented a memorial* of certain State senators of Louisiana in relation to the election of Hon. James B. Eustis as United States Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

FRIDAY, January 28, 1876.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred papers purporting to be credentials of J. B. Eustis, claiming a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, submitted the following report:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Logan, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Cooper.]

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the papers relating to the election of J. B. Eustis to a seat in this body by the legislature of the State of Louisiana, beg leave to report:

That in their opinion there is no vacancy in the office of Senator from the State of Louisiana, P. B. S. Pinchback having been elected in January, 1873, to the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1873. They therefore recommend that the papers relating to Mr. Eustis be laid upon the table.

THURSDAY, February 3, 1876.

On motion by Mr. Morton, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him March 5, 1875, for the admission of P. B. S. Pinchback to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1876.

The Senate resumed, &c.

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Edmunds, viz, before the word "admitted," in the said resolution, insert the word "not,"

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1876.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution to admit P. B. S. Pinchback to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Edmunds, viz, before the word "admitted" in the said resolution insert the word "not,"

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 32, nays 29.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bayard, Caperton, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, English, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, West, and Windom.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 32, nays 29.

On motion by Mr. Morton, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bayard, Caperton, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, English, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. So it was Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be not admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

THURSDAY, March 8, 1877.

Mr. Thurman submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the credentials of J. B. Eustis, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when that committee shall be appointed."

FRIDAY, March 9, 1877.

On motion by Mr. Thurman, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by him for the reference of the credentials of J. B. Eustis to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the credentials of J B. Eustis, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

[First session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

THURSDAY, October 18, 1877.

Mr. Thurman submitted a motion that Mr. J. B. Eustis be now sworn as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term expiring March 3, 1879.

Mr. Conkling objected to the consideration of the motion, and raised the question of order, viz, that the credentials of Mr. Eustis having been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the last special session of the Senate and not having been reported upon, were not before the Senate, but still in possession of the committee under the fifty-ninth rule, which prescribes that all subjects referred to committees and not reported upon at the close of a session of Congress shall be returned to the office of the Secretary, to be by him retained until the next session, when they shall be returned to the several committees.

The Vice-President submitted the question of order to the Senate in the following words:

"Shall all subjects referred to committees and not reported upon at the close of the last preceding session of this body, in March last, and returned to the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be referred to the several committees to which they had previously been referred?"

And it was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Thurman that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of J. B. Eustis,

Mr. Edmunds objected to the consideration of the motion this day.

When,

On motion by Mr. Thurman (at 3 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned.

[The debate is found on pages 107, 108 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, October 19, 1877.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion yesterday submitted by Mr. Thurman to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of J. B. Eustis; and,

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Thurman,

Ordered, That the motion lie on the table.

SATURDAY, December 1, 1877.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred papers purporting to be credentials of James B. Eustis, claiming a seat as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, reported the following resolution:

"Resolved, That James B. Eustis is lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana, from the 12th day of January, 1876, for the term ending March 3, 1879; and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath."

Mr. Ingalls asked and obtained leave of the Senate to submit the views* of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the papers purporting to be credentials of James B. Eustis, claiming a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

* Never submitted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Wadleigh (chairman), Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Ingalls, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hill.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

DECEMBER 1, 1877.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of James B. Eustis for a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1873, ask leave to submit the following report:

Mr. Eustis claims to have been elected on the 12th of January, 1876. The body which elected him was that formed by what is known as the Wheeler compromise; and there is no doubt that it was the lawful legislature of Louisiana.

Two questions arise in this case: First, whether Mr. Eustis was lawfully elected; second, whether at the time of his election a vacancy existed which the legislature of Louisiana had the right to fill.

The legislature of Louisiana on the 12th day of January, 1876, consisted of a house containing one hundred and eleven members and a senate with thirty-six senators. On the 11th day of January, 1876, the house voted to go into an election for United States Senator, and the senate on the same day refused to do so. On the 12th day of January, it appearing that there had been no election on the day before, sixty-four members of the house and twelve members of the senate, being a majority of all entitled to seats in both houses, met in joint convention and elected Mr. Eustis.

Your committee find that although the senate refused to take part as such in said election, and although a minority of the senate only did take part in it, yet there was a substantial compliance with the act of Congress of 1866. Upon the constitutionality of that act your committee express no opinion. The Senate has repeatedly, however, by its action affirmed its constitutionality; and your committee feel bound by the precedents which the Senate has established.

The second question, whether or not a vacancy existed at the time of Mr. Eustis's election which the legislature of Louisiana had the right to fill, is one of some difficulty. At the time of said election Mr. P. B. S. Pinchback was the claimant for the same seat under two elections—one in 1873, the other in 1875. His credentials and claims under said elections had been presented to the Senate and by it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Said committee, on the 5th day of March, 1875, reported a resolution to the Senate that Mr. Pinchback be admitted thereto. On the 8th day of March, 1876, that resolution was amended so as to change it to a resolution that he be not admitted. The resolution was passed as thus amended on the same day.

Your committee feel bound to regard that vote of the Senate as a final adjudication of the claims of Mr. Pinchback and a decision that he had no right to a seat. Mr. Eustis's election took place while Mr. Pinchback's case was pending in the Senate, and it may be contended with much force that until the final adjudication by the Senate of Mr Pinchback's claims there was no vacancy which the legislature was authorized to fill.

This question arose at the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, in the case of Potter vs. Robbins, where a majority of the special committee of the Senate held that the legislature of Rhode Island had no authority to proceed to the election of another Senator until the seat of the Senator-elect had been vacated by a solemn decision of the Senate of the United States. Silas Wright, of New York, made a report in behalf of the minority of said committee, in which it was contended that if the election of Mr. Robbins was not made by the lawful legislature of the State it was absolutely void, and that therefore Mr. Potter's election while Mr. Robbins's claim to a seat in the Senate was still pending was valid.

Your committee do not question the soundness of the rule laid down in that case, but are not disposed to apply it to this case, where the circumstances are very different. In the case of Potter vs. Robbins, Mr. Robbins had been admitted to the Senate, the committee had before it both his credentials and those of Mr. Potter; but here there is no contest. The Senate never admitted Mr. Pinchback to his seat, but decided that he had no right thereto.

This seat has long been vacant. Mr. Eustis is the only person who appears to claim it. The lawful character of the legislature which elected him is admitted. His election was substantially in compliance with the law of Congress. No one appears to contest his right to a seat. Under these circumstances your committee believe that Mr. Eustis should be admitted to the Senate, and report a resolution to that effect and recommend its passage.

MONDAY, December 10, 1877.

On motion by Mr. Wadleigh, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections declaring James B. Eustis entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

After debate,

On the question to agree to the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That James B. Eustis is lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana, from the 12th day of January, 1876, for the term ending March 3, 1879, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 49, nays 8.

On motion by Mr. Ingalls, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Kirkwood, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morgan, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Teller, Thurman, Voorhees, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Cameron of Wisconsin, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, McMillan, Morrill, and Saunders.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Eustis then appeared, and the oaths prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF MR. PINCHBACK.

MONDAY, April 17, 1876.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report (No. 274), accompanied by the following resolution. [Resolution found at end of report.]

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

APRIL 17, 1876.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, having under consideration the question of the allowance proper to be made to P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, submit the following report:

The great length of time that elapsed between the beginning of the term for which Mr. Pinchback was a contestant and the date of the final determination of that contest by the Senate, as also the remarkably close vote by which such contest was decided, have impressed your committee with the belief that the full measure of compensation which the uniform action of the Senate heretofore has given to contestants should be allowed in this case.

Your committee are advised by the journals of the Senate that the rule established by this body in similar cases is the payment to the contestant of the amount he would have been entitled to receive in case he had been admitted and served the time the contest was pending; in other words, an amount equal to the compensation and mileage of a Senator for the time covered by the contest.

A few citations will suffice to show the uniformity of this rule.

O. B. Hart, contesting the seat of A. Gilbert, of Florida, was paid from the contingent fund from the 1st to 28th of April, 1870, under the following resolution, passed May 11, 1870 (Senate Journal, second session Forty-first Congress, pages 585 and 634):

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to O. B. Hart, claimant of a seat in the Senate from the State of Florida, the usual mileage of a Senator, and monthly pay from the date of presenting his credentials until the passage of the resolution declaring him not entitled to a seat."

H. P. Farrow and R. H. Whitely, contesting respectively with J. Hill and H. V. M. Miller, from Georgia, were paid from the 16th of February, 1870, to the 30th of January, 1871, under the following resolution, passed February 25, 1871 (Senate Journal, third session Forty-first Congress, page 369):

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay to H. P. Farrow and R. H. Whitely, contestants from the State of Georgia, compensation from the 16th day of February, 1870, the date of their election by the reorganized legislature of Georgia, to the 30th day of January, 1871, when the Senate decided they were not entitled to seats."

Foster Blodgett, claiming a seat from the State of Georgia, was paid from March 4, 1871, to December 19, 1871, in pursuance of the following resolution, passed January 9, 1872 (Senate Journal, second session Forty-second Congress, page 94):

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay, out of the pay and mileage account, to Foster Blodgett, claiming a seat as Senator-elect from the State of Georgia, the pay and mileage of a Senator from March 4, 1871, to December 19, 1871, when the question of his right to his seat was determined by the Senate."

Again, J. C. Abbott, of North Carolina, contesting the seat of Senator Ransom, was paid from March 4, 1871, to the 23d of April, 1872, under the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Joseph C. Abbott, late contestant for a seat in this body from the State of North Carolina, be allowed his salary from 4th of March, 1871, to the 23d of April, 1872, and one mileage each way."

This resolution was passed April 24, 1872. (See Senate Journal, second session Forty-second Congress, page 595.)

Numerous other citations might be adduced; these will suffice, however, to establish the uniform rule of the Senate.

This committee, on the 8th of March, 1876, in reporting back Senate resolution No. 10, to pay Francis W. Sykes, of Georgia, contesting with Senator Spencer, the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, when said contest was decided, submitted (by Mr. Cooper) the following report:

"The rule established by the Senate in cases similar to the present one has been uniform. A person applying for a seat in this body by reason of an election by the legislature of a State, although his application has been refused and another adjudged entitled to the seat, has been paid the amount he would have been entitled to receive if he had been admitted and served the time the contest was pending. The action of the Senate upon such cases has been with such great unanimity as to call for little or no debate. The reasons therefor upon which the rule is based can only be surmised. It may be said the person claims his seat in pursuance of an implied duty imposed upon him to thus assert the right of his State to be represented in this body, which duty he owes to the public, and the expenses incurred in the performance of a public duty should be paid out of the common treasury.

"A proper respect for the action of a State in the choice of a Senator may also justify the rule.

"The committee see nothing in the present case to take it out of the general rule; and therefore recommend the passage of the resolution."

The case of Pinchback is (considering the final action of the Senate in the contests of the two cases) parallel with that of Sykes in this, that each claimed under an election by a body adjudged by the Senate afterward not to have been the legislature of the State. The case of Pinchback, however, is much the stronger from the fact that the alleged legislature from which Mr. Sykes claimed his election was never recognized as the legislature of the State of Alabama by any of the departments of Government, while the Kellogg legislature of Louisiana, by which Mr. Pinchback was elected, was recognized as the legisiature of that State not only by the State courts but by the Executive of the nation, and also by the national House of Representatives, by admitting to its membership persons claiming seats under certificates from Governor Kellogg; and inferentially by the Senate, in the adoption of a resolution recognizing Kellogg as the governor of the State. In view of these judicial, executive, and legislative recognitions of the Kellogg legislature, and of the fact that the Senate, after three years of discussion and consideration, was so evenly divided on the ultimate question as to Mr. Pinchback's right to a seat, it would seem difficult to imagine a stronger case of reasonable cause than that moving Mr Pinchback to make claim to a seat, and to persevere as he did in that claim for over three years.

Your committee, therefore, in view of the precedents and the facts of this case, report the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback, late contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, be allowed an amount equal to the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the beginning of the term for which he was a contestant up to the period of the determination of the contest by the Senate.

SATURDAY, July 1, 1876.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution to pay P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana; and,

On motion by Mr. Sargent, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

MONDAY, July 3, 1876.

The Senate resumed, &c.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1876.

On motion by Mr. Morton, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution to pay P. B. S. Pinchback, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana; and,

On motion by Mr. Merrimon to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

"That the sum of $5,000 be allowed to P. B. S. Pinchback to pay the reasonable expenses incurred by him as contestant for a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana,"

After debate,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 10, nays 31.

On motion by Mr. Merrimon, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Cockrell, Davis, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds to amend the resolution by inserting at the end thereof the words:

"Resolved, That in cases of disputed claims to seats in the Senate hereafter arising, no other or greater allowance shall be made to a defeated claimant than in such case shall seem to the Senate just;

"Resolved, That in no case shall any pay be allowed to a Senator to begin earlier than the date of his election or appointment,"

It was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Spencer to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Louisiana," as reported by the committee, and inserting: "and Francis W. Sykes, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama, be each allowed an amount equal to the pay and mileage of a Senator from the beginning of the term for which they were respectively contestants up to the period of the determination of the respective contests by the Senate," it was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell to amend the resolution by inserting at the end of the first clause, "and the amount required by this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate," it was determined in the affirmative.

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, as follows:

"Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback, late contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, and Francis W. Sykes, late a contestant for a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama, be each allowed an amount equal to the pay and mileage of a Senator from the beginning of the term for which they were respectively contestants up to the period of the determination of the respective contests by the Senate; and the amount required by this resolution to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate;

"Resolved, That in cases of disputed claims to seats in the Senate hereafter arising no other or greater allowance shall be made to a defeated claimant than in such case shall seem to the Senate just;

"Resolved, That in no case shall any pay be allowed to a Senator to begin earlier than the date of his election or appointment,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 27, nays 11.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Cockrell, Davis, Gordon, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Saulsbury, and Withers.

So the resolution was agreed to.

[The debate is found on pages 4382–4400 of the Congressional Record, vol. iv, part 5.]

SPOFFORD vs. KELLOGG (MANNING).

Contest for seat for term beginning March 4, 1877.

SATURDAY, January 20, 1877.

Mr. Morton presented the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg, elected a Senator by the general assembly of the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877.

The credentials were read.

MONDAY, March 5, 1877.

Mr. William Pitt Kellogg, whose credentials were heretofore presented as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, having appeared to take the oaths of office,

Mr. Bogy objected to the oaths of office being administered to Mr. Kellogg;

Whereupon

Mr. Anthony submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the credentials of Senators-elect in all disputed or contested cases lie upon the table until to-morrow."

[The debate is found on pages 1, 2 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

TUESDAY, March 6, 1877.

Mr. Blaine submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the oaths prescribed by law be now administered by the Vice President to William Pitt Kellogg, whose credentials as a Senator from the State of Louisiana were presented on the 20th of January, 1877."

On motion by Mr. Bayard to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof inserting "the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, do now lie upon the table until the appointment of a Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom they can be referred,"

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Thurman (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned.

[The debate is found on pages 15, 16 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution of Mr. Blaine; and

Mr. Bayard having modified his said amendment, on the question to agree thereto, as follows, viz: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof insert "the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, do now lie upon the table until the appointment of a Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom they shall be referred,"

After debate,

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 35, nays 29.

On motion by Mr. Sargent, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Christiancy, Coke, Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Maxey, Morrill, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Kirkwood, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock. Patterson, Plumb, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, and Windom.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, as follows:

"Resolved, That the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, do now lie upon the table until the appointment of a Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom they shall be referred,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 42, nays 21.

On motion by Mr. Blaine, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Anthony, Bailey, Bayard, Barnum, Beck, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Hoar, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Maxey, Morrill, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Blaine, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Hamlin, Ingalls, Kirkwood, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Plumb, Rollins, Saunders, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, and Windom.

So the resolution was agreed to.

[The debate is found on pages 17–23 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

[First session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

WEDNESDAY, October 17, 1877.

Mr. Thurman presented the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877.

The credentials were read.

Mr. Thurman then submitted the following resolution, and asked for its present consideration:

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford, whose credentials as a Senator from the State of Louisiana have been this day read, be now sworn and admitted as such Senator."

Mr. Edmunds objected to the consideration of the said resolution this day, and raised the point of order that under the thirty-third rule of the Senate, which requires that all resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, the resolution could not now be considered.

The Vice-President overruled the point of order raised by Mr. Edmunds. and decided that under the seventh rule of the Senate the presentation of the credentials of a Senator being a question of privilege, all questions and motions arising thereon were in order at this time, and that the consideration of the resolution could now be proceeded with.

On motion of Mr. Mitchell to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections,"

After debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed to to-morrow.

Mr. Edmunds submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, now under its consideration."

On motion by Mr. Thurman, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THURSDAY, October 18, 1877.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Thurman, to admit Henry M. Spofford to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Mitchell, viz: Strike out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections,"

After debate,

On the question to agree thereto, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 33.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and days being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Armstrong, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Maxey, Merrimon, Morgan, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Whyte further to amend the resolution by adding thereto the words "and that said committee report thereon on or before the 1st day of November, 1877,"

After debate,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 31, nays 35.

On motion by Mr. Whyte, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Maxey, Merrimon, Morgan, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Conkling to further amend the resolution by adding thereto the following: "and the said committee shall also consider and report upon the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg," it was determined in the affirmative; and

The resolution as amended was then agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and the said committee shall also consider and report upon the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg."

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Edmunds to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg; and

Mr. Edmunds withdrew the said resolution.

THURSDAY, October 25, 1877.

Mr. Mitchell submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested cases of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate."

MONDAY, November 26, 1877.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, submitted a report (No. 16) thereon, accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath.

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States."

Mr. Merrimon asked and obtained leave of the Senate to submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and the credentials of Henry M. Spofford; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report of the committee.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.*

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Wadleigh (chairman), Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Ingalls, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hill.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

NOVEMBER 26, 1877.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, for the same seat in the Senate of the United States, ask leave to submit the following report:

Mr. Kellogg claims to have been elected on the 10th day of January, 1877. Mr. Spofford claims to have been elected on the 24th of April, 1877. In an inquiry into these cases upon their merits, the first question which arises is, whether the body which elected Mr. Kellogg was the lawful legislature of Louisiana at the time of such election.

There was in said State on the 6th of November, 1876, an election for governor, lieutenant-governor, and members of the general assembly. The statements of the votes cast at such election were required by law to be sent to a board of returning officers for all elections in the State. Said returning officers were by law authorized and required to ascertain, return, and certify the election of members of the general assembly. No other tribunal was clothed with that power or duty. They were required to report their decisions to the secretary of state, and it was by law provided that the secretary of state should transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and secretary of the senate of the last general assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the decisions of the returning officers, were elected to either branch of the general assembly.

It was the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of such persons so furnished upon the roll of the house and senate, respectively, and those representatives and senators whose names were so placed by the clerk and secretary, and none others, were competent to organize the house of representatives or senate.

The secretary of state, in obedience to the statute, transmitted to the clerk of the former house and secretary of the senate a list of the names of persons by the said returning officers decided to have been elected to either branch of the general assembly, and from the list thus furnished the clerk and secretary organized each house of the State legislature on the 1st day of January, 1877.

By the constitution of Louisiana the house of representatives is composed of one hundred and twenty members and the senate of thirty-six members. There is no doubt that sixty-one members of the house constitute a quorum of that body, and that nineteen members constitute a quorum of the senate. There were present at the organization, and took part in the proceedings, eight senators holding over, and eleven newly elected—nineteen in all—having the certificates of said returning officers, which was a quorum, and sixty-eight representatives, thus declared to have been elected, being seven over a quorum. After such organization the members of the two houses assembled in joint convention on the 10th day of January, 1877, to elect a Senator of the United States.

Upon reading the journal of each house it was found that no election of Senator had been made the day before. The roll of each house was called, and it was found there were present in the joint convention seventeen senators and sixty-six representatives, they composing a majority of all the members of the general assembly of the State. Nominations were then made for Senator, and a viva voce vote was had, and William Pitt Kellogg received the votes of seventeen senators and sixty-six representatives, and was declared by the president of the senate (the presiding officer of the joint convention) to have received a majority of all the votes of the general assembly, and to have been duly elected a Senator of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877.

Your committee find that said election was held strictly in accordance with the act of Congress of 1866 to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senator. The credentials of Mr. Kellogg are signed by Stephen B. Packard as governor of the State of Louisiana, and bear date the 11th day of January, 1877.

It appears to your committee that Mr. Packard was on that day the lawful governor of the State of Louisiana. By the constitution of Louisiana the returning officers are required to seal up and transmit the returns of the election of governor and lieutenant-governor to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden.

On the second day of the session the legislature proceeded to count the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor, there being then present twenty-one senators and sixty-eight representatives, two over a quorum of the senate and seven over a quorum of the house. The committee appointed by the two houses to make and canvass the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor reported that Stephen B. Packard was elected governor and C. C. Antoine lieutenant-governor of said State, and that by the following vote:

For governor:
Stephen B. Packard	74,624
Francis T. Nicholls	71,198
For lieutenant-governor:
C. C. Antoine	74,669
L. A. Wiltz	71,093

Upon the facts hereinbefore stated your committee are of the opinion—

First, that the returning officers of Louisiana were a lawful tribunal, solely authorized and required to ascertain, return, and certify to the election of members of the general assembly.

Second, that those, and only those, who held certificates of election from said returning officers were entitled to seats in the general assembly at the organization thereof.

Third, that the body which first organized with a quorum of the members in each branch thereof, having such certificates, and which was duly recognized by the lawful governor of said State, was the lawful legislature.

The proof before your committee seems conclusive that at the time the legislature which elected Kellogg was organized there were present a quorum of each house thereof then lawfully entitled to seats therein; that at the time of his election there were present a quorum of the general assembly then lawfully entitled to seats therein; all of whom voted for said Kellogg, and that said legislature was recognized by the lawful governor of said State. It was, however, contended by Mr. Spofford that it was the duty of your committee to go behind the certificates of the returning officers and investigate the elections of individual members of the general assembly. At his request your committee did investigate such elections and find the following facts:

Of the lawful election of fifty-seven members of the house of representatives which aided in electing Mr. Kellogg there is no dispute whatever, and they now sit in the Nicholls house, which took part in the election of Mr. Spofford. Three more of the members of the Packard house, from the parish of Orleans, were until recently admitted on all hands to have had a majority of the votes cast, and your committee find that they were lawfully elected. Besides these sixty members of the house, there were eleven more whose election is disputed by Mr. Spofford upon the ground that they did not receive a majority of the votes cast. Of the twenty-one members of the senate which participated in the election of Mr. Kellogg, there were sixteen whose right to hold their seats is admitted.

The election of three more from the twelfth, eighteenth, and twenty-second senatorial districts is disputed upon the ground that they did not receive a majority of the votes cast. Two more, Baker and Kelso, were not declared elected by the returning board, but were seated by a vote of the senate acting under its constitutional right to judge of the election of its own members.

Complaint is made by Mr. Spofford that one Steven, a lawful senator, was taken against his will into the senate and detained there against his will for the purpose of making a quorum. Your committee believe there is no good reason for such complaint. If the senate had organized with a quorum of members lawfully entitled to seats therein, as was the case, it had the undoubted right to compel the attendance of absent members.

The senators and members whose title to seats is disputed on the ground that they did not receive a majority of the votes cast were those declared elected by the returning board on account of the rejection of the votes cast at certain polls in the parishes of East Baton Rouge, De Soto, West Feliciana, La Fayette, Morehouse, Ouachita, and Webster, in the twelfth senatorial district, composed of the parishes of East Feliciana, West Feliciana, and Point Coupée; the eighteenth senatorial district, composed of the parishes of Ouachita and Caldwell; and the twenty-second senatorial district, composed of the parishes of Natchitoches, De Soto, Red River, and Sabine.

There were no votes rejected in the parishes of Sabine, Point Coupée, and Red River. A comparatively small number of the votes were rejected on account of the obvious illegalities, informalities, and misconduct of the election officers, and there is little complaint on account of the rejection of such votes. The rest were rejected on account of violence and intimidation which prevented a fair election. The evidence of such intimidation is overwhelming and irrefutable. Many of the Republican leaders were killed, others were tortured, others driven into exile. Companies of armed men paraded the parishes by night, carrying terror wherever they went.

Your committee has no space to recount or refer to a tithe of the horrible outrages perpetrated to prevent the Republicans from exercising the free right of suffrage. They were evidently perpetrated in localities where the result of the election would thereby be most strongly affected, and they had their intended effect. But for these numerous and horrible crimes, your committee believe that the candidates upon the State and National Republican tickets would have been elected beyond dispute, and that the general assembly would have been overwhelmingly Republican.

In forty parishes, where it is admitted on all hands the election was fair and peaceable, the colored registration in 1876 numbered 87,999, the white registration 72,034, showing a colored majority of 15,965. Those forty parishes returned 65,747 Republican votes and 59,392 Democratic votes, a Republican majority of 6,353 votes. In the seventeen terrorized parishes the colored registration was 27,269, the white registration was 20,320, a colored majority of 6,949, almost half as large as the registered colored majority in all the rest of the State. But the vote in those seventeen parishes as cast showed but 10,970 Republicans and 21,123 Democrats. Thus those seventeen parishes, with a colored majority of nearly 7,000 registered, cast a Democratic majority of 10,153. In the ten parishes of East Baton Rouge, Caldwell, De Soto, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, La Fayette, Morehouse, Natchitoches, Ouachita, and Webster, in which (on account of the rejection of polls by the returning board) the eleven disputed members of the house and three disputed members of the senate were declared elected by the returning officers, there were in 1876 19,174 colored voters and 11,212 white voters registered, being a colored majority of 7,962.

In the same parishes there were cast 14,510 Democratic and 8,489 Republican votes, being a Democratic majority of 6,021. In the strong Republican parish of East Feliciana, where leading Republicans had been terrorized into procuring the appointment as sheriff of a Democratic leader, whose career had been that of a brigand, upon his promise of peace and conciliation, only three Republicans dared to vote. There is no evidence to show and it is not pretended that the same arguments and methods of persuasion were not employed by the Democrats in the forty parishes above referred to as were used in the seventeen terrorized parishes; but in the seventeen parishes numerous and frightful crimes were deliberately perpetrated to carry the election; in the others not. The difference in the vote shows too strongly to be affected by argument or clouds of perjured witnesses the perpetration of such outrages and their effect.

It was contended by Mr. Spofford before your committee that the returning officers were guilty of fraud in rejecting the polls hereinbefore referred to, and that in so doing they exceeded the authority conferred upon them by law. Your committee find, however, that the returning board in so doing acted not fraudulently but in good faith; and that in their construction of the law under which they acted they were sustained by precedents and by able legal opinions.

They were charged by Mr. Spofford with having committed forgery in altering the statement of votes from the parish of Vernon. Testimony in reference to that matter was taken at great length by the Field and Morrison committees of the House and the Howe committee of the Senate. It clearly and conclusively shows, in the opinion of your committee, that the returning officers had no motive to commit such crime; that they before had published the true statement of the vote, and must therefore have known that if such a crime was committed it would be immediately detected; and that the real, the only criminal, was the witness by whose hand the alterations were made, who confessed that he did not know the true vote had been published, who had the strongest personal motives to commit the crime, and who testified with the understanding that he should have a good office if Mr. Tilden was elected.

But the law is clear that, even had the returning officers been guilty of fraud, or had mistakenly exceeded their authority, it was the right and the duty of the persons returned by them as elected to take their seats in the general assembly. The law on this point is thus laid down by Cushing in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 52, section 141:

"It remains to be observed, in conclusion, that the proceedings of these [returning] officers, from the necessity of the case, are, in the first instance, uncontrollable by any other authority whatever; so that if, on the one hand, notwithstanding an election has been effected, the returning officers refuse or neglect to make the proper return, the party thereby injured is without remedy or redress until the assembly to which he is chosen has examined his case and adjudged him to be duly elected; and, on the other hand, if the returning officers make a return when no election has in fact taken place, or of one who is not eligible, the person returned will not only be entitled, but it is his duty, to assume and discharge the functions of a member until his return and election are adjudged void."

A strong case in point occurred in the State of New Hampshire in 1875. The governor and council of that State, whose duty it was to count the votes for and issue certificates of election to State senators, rejected and threw out 3,771 votes, being all those cast and returned for Natt Head, a candidate for senator, upon the ground that the name by which he had been universally known, by which he had been commissioned adjutant-general of the State, and which he had regarded and used as his real name during many years of business and political life, was not his full Christian name. They also threw out and rejected 46 votes cast for Author Dearing, also a candidate for senator, on the ground that he was not a resident of the State. By such action the governor and council were enabled to give certificates of election to James Priest and John Proctor, thus giving the Democrats the control of the senate. Application was made to the supreme court of the State, as provided for by the constitution, for the opinion of said court upon the effect of such action. In their opinion, which may be found in the fifty-sixth volume of New Hampshire Reports, the court say:

"By this action of the governor and council, whether it be regarded as within or exceeding their constitutional powers, Messrs. Priest and Proctor received the usual credentials, which authorized them to assemble with the other ten senators and take the oath of office; and they thereupon became senators, subject to the constitutional authority of the senate as final judges of the qualifications and elections of its members."

When your committee decided to go behind the certificates of the returning officers, and to seek the real merits of the case in the thousands of pages of printed testimony taken for the use of the Senate and House, Mr. Spofford contended that your committee should simply ascertain the number of votes deposited in the ballot-boxes at the election. Your committee believe, however, that if their inquiry is to extend beyond the question as to who were the lawful governor of Louisiana and the lawful members of the general assembly, it should go far enough to ascertain how far the freedom of election was impaired by intimidation, violence, and crime. The law on this subject is thus stated by Cushing in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, pages 67, 68, section 181:

"The great principle, which lies at the foundation of all elective governments, and is essential indeed to the very idea of election, is that the electors shall be free in the giving of their suffrages. This principle was declared by the English Parliament, with regard to elections in general, in a statute of Edward I, and with regard to elections of members of Parliament, in the Declaration of Rights. The same principle is asserted or implied in the constitutions of all the States of the Union. Freedom of election is violated by external violence, by which the electors are constrained, or by bribery, by which their will is corrupted; and in all cases where the electors are prevented, in either of these ways, from the free exercise of their right, the election will be void without reference to the number of votes thereby affected."

The evidence clearly proves, and your committee believe, that by intimidation, violence, and crime freedom of election was utterly destroyed at those polls in the ten parishes heretofore referred to, whose votes were rejected by the returning officers; that in throwing out such polls and declaring the Republican candidates elected, the returning officers did that which they believed to be legal, and which was really equitable and just, and what the two houses of the general assembly would have been bound in law to do with the facts before them. They believe, therefore, that the members by whose votes the general assembly was organized, and a sufficient number of the members by whose votes Mr. Kellogg was elected, were not only lawfully but equitably entitled to their seats.

It is contended by Mr. Spofford that the legislature which elected Mr. Kellogg and the governor who signed his credentials have vanished from political existence, and ceased to have any authority in the State of Louisiana, and that, therefore, if for no other reason, his own election is valid. Your committee find that at and after the organization of the legislature which elected Mr. Kellogg an overwhelming array of armed and organized military force was used to destroy and crush out the lawful State government of Louisiana. By it the courts were overthrown and annihilated, and under its constantly impending menace the lawful legislature gradually melted away, and its terrorized members sought safety in the so-called Nicholls legislature or abdicated their rights.

By such, and perhaps other equally illegal means, the so-called Nicholls legislature at length came to contain an undisputed majority of the members lawfully elected to the general assembly; and on the 24th day of April that legislature chose Mr. Spofford, the contestant, a Senator of the United States. Your committee are of the opinion that his claim is not well founded. Until and after the election of Mr. Kellogg, Governor Packard, and what is known as his legislature, were de facto and de jure the government of Louisiana. Upon that legislature devolved the duty of electing a Senator of the United States. That duty was performed by them in the election of Mr. Kellogg. No subsequent events, especially successful revolution, through treasonable force, could undo what had been lawfully done. The doctrine contended for by Mr. Spofford, if established, would render insecure all political vested rights. It would offer a premium to overthrow by force the result of every sharply contested election, and at no distant day reduce this country to the unhappy condition of those wretched communities which are continually a prey to disorder and civil war.

Your committee therefore report the following resolutions, and recommend their passage:

Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath.

Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

On the 18th day of October last the Senate referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections a resolution, of which the following is a copy:

"Resolved, That the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Louisiana, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and the said committee shall also consider and report upon the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg."

That committee having had the subject embraced by that resolution under consideration, a majority of the committee have agreed to a report in favor of seating Mr. Kellogg as Senator. The undersigned, members of the committee, do not concur in that report and beg leave to submit to the Senate some of the reasons which impel them to dissent.

An election was held in the State of Louisiana on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, for a governor and members of the legislature. Francis T. Nicholls and Stephen B. Packard each claimed that he was elected governor at that election, and on and after the 8th day of January last each claimed to be the governor of that State. Two rival bodies of men composed of persons claiming to have been elected at that election were organized on the 1st day of January last in the city of New Orleans, and each claimed to be the lawful legislature of the State, one of these bodies commonly called "the Nicholls legislature" and the other "the Packard legislature." This conflict of claim, aggravated by the recollections of like repeated contests in the past, produced general angry commotions among the contestants and the people which seriously threatened the peace of society and a state of anarchy. Detachments of the Army of the United States were employed for many weeks to preserve the peace and prevent bloodshed. It will not be denied that the people of that State of all classes and conditions were profoundly and fearfully agitated.

At length this conflict and contest of claim was peacefully settled, and Mr. Nicholls was and ever since that time has acted and been recognized as governor by all the coordinate branches of the State government and the people generally, and also by the President and other authorities of the United States having occasion to recognize and communicate with the governor of that State. And what has been designated as "the Nicholls legislature" has likewise been so recognized as the lawful and only legislature, and its acts purporting to be statutes, passed since its first organization, have been regularly published and recognized as laws of that State by all departments of the State government and the people. Throughout the State the so-called "Packard legislature" has entirely disappeared, and most of its members—all those lawfully elected—have taken seats in the lawful legislature. This settlement has happily brought peace, order, and wholesome government out of fearful strife and disorder. It seems to be gratefully accepted by the great mass of the people of that State of both colors, and the few malcontents, if any, are moved by considerations of personal interest.

After the settlement referred to, "the Nicholls legislature" elected Henry M. Spofford to be a Senator in the United States Senate, "the Packard legislature" having a few days after its pretended organization, on the —— day of January last, pending the contest, and in the midst of disorder, purported to elect Mr. Kellogg Senator. Indeed, the facts and circumstances point strongly to the conclusion that the main if not the only purpose of "the Packard legislature" organization was to elect Mr. Kellogg Senator. But be this as it may, the body that undertook to elect him had no legal existence, as will hereafter appear. He purported to be elected pending a heated contest as to its legality, and since that time it has abandoned its organization and claim, and most of its members went into and became part of "the Nicholls legislature." and voted for Mr. Spofford.

Looking to the permanent peace and well-being of the people of Louisiana, after many years of discord and strife which have agitated the people of the whole Union, as well as the strict right, the undersigned deemed it important in the highest degree that the Senate should accept that settlement, made by the authorities and accepted by the people, as a finality; and, looking to that end, Mr. Hill in committee offered a resolution in these words:

"The controversies heretofore existing in the State of Louisiana as to which of two rival bodies was the legislature of that State and as to which of two rival claimants was the governor of said State having been settled by the State itself since the last adjournment of the Senate,

"Resolved, That the Senate do recognize and accept said settlement as final."

This resolution was rejected by the unanimous vote of the Republicans of the committee, while it received only the votes of the undersigned. We solemnly protest against reopening political controversies in Louisiana, and sincerely deplore the occasion for doing so. Let the grave responsibility rest with those who have insisted upon doing so.

The majority of the committee having thus determined to ignore the settlement referred to, it was then deemed necessary to examine fully and fairly the real merits of the claims respectively of Messrs. Spofford and Kellogg; and with that view Mr. Merrimon in committee offered a resolution in these words:

"Resolved, That the committee proceed to examine and ascertain the substantial merits of the respective claims of Hon. W. P. Kellogg and Hon. H. M. Spofford to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, and to this end to inquire particularly which, or whether either, of the two rival bodies claiming to be the legislature of said State, in January and April last, was the true and lawful legislature of said State."

This resolution was unanimously adopted after hearing the contestants at length, Mr. Kellogg being heard by his counsel, Mr. Shellabarger. The contestants were each requested to indicate what testimony he desired to produce, and after debate they were requested to confer and see what state of facts they could agree upon touching controverted material points at issue. Statements were submitted to Mr. Kellogg touching the result of the election in parishes indicated, and Mr. Kellogg made a statement in that respect in reply. These statements were received as evidence, and it was further agreed to receive the testimony, or so much thereof as may be pertinent, taken by Congressional committees commonly known as the "Howe committee," the "Morrison committee," the "Sherman committee," and the "Field committee," touching Louisiana affairs. Mr. Spofford did not object to the reception of this testimony, but he strenuously insisted on being allowed to take testimony in support of the several allegations specified by him, as follows: He offered testimony to prove—

"1. That the facts relative to the election of Tremoulet, Cressy, and Rolle, from the seventh representative district of New Orleans, were sustantially as set forth in the statement read by H. M. Spofford in his argument before this committee on the 24th October, 1877.

"2. That the composition, votes for Senator, and political proclivities of the legislature on the 24th April, 1877, when H. M. Spofford was elected Senator, were substantially as set forth in the aforesaid argument.

"3. That by the actual returns or statements as made in duplicate by the supervisors of registration (and assistant supervisors), with their appointees, the commissioners of election, and sent, one set to the clerk of the district court of each parish in the county and to the secretary of state in the city, and the other set to the returning board (so called), showed a majority of votes actually cast throughout the State of about 8,000 votes for Nicholls and Wiltz over Packard and Antoine for the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor in the election that took place in Louisiana November 7, 1876.

"4. Besides these specific violations of the constitution and of the law under which they pretended to act, I charge that the conduct of the returning officers in suppressing polls and changing the result of the constitutional returns was clandestine, collusive, tyrannical, and unjust; that the real work of conducting an election under pretext of compiling votes was proceeded with in a secret chamber by a corps of partisan clerks, while the occasional open sessions of the board were side-shows, devised to screen what was going on within; that arbitrary rules of evidence were established for pretended contests, and changed so often and abruptly that no fair trial could be had or was had before the board; that illegal complaints were constantly received and illegal evidence admitted for the purpose of setting aside polls that were in the way of such candidates as the board desired to elect; and that Mr. Kellogg himself, then governor, joined in making illegal complaints and inducing the board to consider them.

"5. I am informed and so charge that the returns from Vernon Parish, after they came into possession of the returning officers, and while they were under their control, were fraudulently altered by a change of figures, tantamount to a forgery of a public record; that the board knew what the figures upon those returns were before their alteration, and yet after the alteration promulgated the results of said forgery as the true returns; that by such fraudulent alteration E. E. Smart, candidate for representative in the State assembly, who had in fact and according to the returns as they first came to the board defeated his competitor, Brown, was left behind, and Brown, the defeated candidate, falsely declared elected; and that said Brown took his seat in the Packard house, and figures on the journal as present on the 2d of January, 1877, when there was a pretended count of votes for governor and lieutenant-governor in joint assembly, and perhaps on one or two other occasions, but that he afterward abandoned that body and went home, acknowledging that he never had been elected."

We are of opinion that the testimony so proposed by Mr. Spofford is material, and ought, in justice to him and the Senate, to have been received. Besides, it cannot be truly said that the respective claims of the contestants have been decided upon their "substantial merits" when one of them is not allowed to produce material testimony which he offers and is anxious to produce. And it may be that a decision made by the Senate now, without fair opportunity to produce such testimony, may be reviewed and reversed at some future time. It is well to put an end to controversy now by allowing both the contestants the fullest and fairest opportunity to produce all material testimony. We think, therefore, that the whole matter ought to be recommitted to the committee, to the end the proposed testimony may be taken.

The following provisions of the constitution of Louisiana are material to a proper understanding of the points raised in the contest now under consideration:

"ART. 15. The legislative power of the State shall be vested in two distinct branches, the one to be styled the house of represenatives, the other the senate, and both the general assembly of the State of Louisiana.

"ART. 16. The members of the house of representatives shall continue in office for two years from the day of the closing of the general elections.

"ART. 17. Representatives shall be chosen on the first Monday in November every two years, and the election shall be completed in one day. The general assembly shall meet annually on the first Monday in January, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their sessions shall be held at the seat of government.

"ART. 19. Elections for members of the general assembly shall be held at the several election precincts established by law.

"ART. 27. The members of the Senate shall be elected for the term of four years; and when assembled the senate shall have power to choose its own officers except as hereinafter provided.

"ART. 31. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution goes into effect the senators shall be divided equally by lot into two classes; the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of the term of the first house of representatives; those of the second class at the expiration of the term of the second house of representatives, so that one-half shall be chosen every two years successively. When a district shall have elected two senators their respective terms of office shall be determined by lot between themselves.

"ART. 33. Not less than a majority of the members of each house of the general assembly shall form a quorum to transact business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall have full power to compel the attendance of absent members.

"ART. 34. Each house of the general assembly shall judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its members; but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

"ART. 46. Returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state.

"ART. 48. The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the State of Louisiana. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the lieutenant-governor, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows: The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant-governor at the time and place for voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden. The members of the general assembly shall meet in the house of representatives to examine and count the votes. The person having the greatest number of votes for governor shall be declared duly elected; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates one of them shall immediately be chosen governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly. The person having the greatest number of votes polled for lieutenant-governor shall be lieutenant-governor; but in case of a tie vote between two or more candidates, one of them shall be immediately chosen lieutenant-governor by joint vote of the members of the general assembly.

"ART. 51. The governor shall enter on the discharge of his duties on the second Monday in January next ensuing his election, and shall continue in office until the Monday next succeeding the day that his successor shall be declared duly elected, and shall have taken the oath or affirmation required by the constitution.

"ART. 73. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace.

"ART. 94. No judicial powers, except as committing-magistrates in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title, except such as may be necessary in towns and cities; and the judicial powers of such officers shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the State. In any case where such officers shall assume jurisdiction over other matters than those which may arise under police regulations, or under their jurisdiction, as committing-magistrates, they shall be liable to an action of damages in favor of the party injured, or his heirs; and a verdict in favor of the party injured shall ipso facto operate a vacation of the office of said officer.

"ART. 103. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections and prohibiting under adequate penalties all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practice.

"ART. 107. In all elections by the people the vote shall be taken by ballot; and in all elections by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the vote shall be given viva vôce.

"ART. 133. No judicial powers shall be exercised by clerks of courts."

And the following sections from the statute of that State approved November 20, 1872, commonly called the election law:

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana in general assembly convened, That all elections for State, parish, and judicial officers, members of the general assembly, and for members of Congress shall be held on the 1st Monday in November, and said election shall be styled the general election. They shall be held in the manner and form and subject to the regulations hereinafter prescribed, and in no other.

"SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum and have power to make the returns of all elections. In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise, by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers. The returning officers shall after each election, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe to the following oath before a judge of the supreme or any district court:

"'I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully and diligently perform the duties of a returning officer as prescribed by law; that I will carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election: So help me God.'

"Within ten days after the closing of the election said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statement of votes made by the commissioners of election, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been compiled. The presiding officer shall, at such meeting, open, in the presence of the said returning officers, the statements of the commissioners of election, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate; one copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation, by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. The return of the election thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers, until set aside after contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected. The governor shall, within thirty days thereafter, issue commissions to all officers thus declared elected, who are required by law to be commissioned.

"SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That in such canvass and compilation the returning officers shall observe the following order: They shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable registration and election. Whenever from any poll or voting place there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, in form as required by section 26 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statement of votes from such poll or voting places until the statements from all other polls or voting places shall have been canvassed and compiled. The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any such poll or voting place; and if from the evidence of such statement they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did not prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting place with those previously canvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers. If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting place, but shall exclude it from their returns: Provided, That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election.

"SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That the election at each poll or voting place shall be presided over by three commissioners of election, residents of the parish for at least twelve months next preceding the day of election, who shall be selected from different political parties, and be of good standing in the party to which they belong, and who shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, take and subscribe the oath prescribed for State officers. Should only one of the commissioners appointed be present at the hour for opening the poll, he shall appoint another, and both together shall appoint a third; and the commissioners so appointed shall take the oath and perform all the duties of commissioners of election in the same manner as if they had been appointed as provided for regular appointment of commissioners by this act. Any one of the commissioners shall be authorized to administer the oath to the other commissioners. The commissioners of election for the several wards in the city of New Orleans shall be appointed by the mayor and administrators of the city of New Orleans.

"SEC. 13. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the commissioners of election, at each poll or voting place, to keep a list of the names of the persons voting at such poll or voting place, which list shall be numbered from one to the end; and said list of voters, with their names and numbers as aforesaid, shall be signed and sworn to as correct by the commissioners, immediately on closing of the polls, and before leaving the place, and before opening the box. If no judge or justice of the peace, or other person authorized to administer such oath be present to do so, it may be administered by any voter. The votes shall be counted by the commissioners at each voting place, immediately after closing the election and without moving the boxes from the place where the votes were received, and the counting must be done in the presence of any bystander or citizen who may be present. Tally-lists shall be kept of the count, and after the count the ballots counted shall be put back into the box and preserved until after the next term of the criminal or district court, as the case may be; and in the parishes, except Orleans, the commissioners of election, or any one of them selected for that purpose, shall carry the box and deliver it to the clerk of the district court, who shall preserve the same as above required; and in the parish of Orleans the box shall be delivered to the clerk of the first district court for the parish of Orleans, and be kept by him as above directed.

"SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That in any parish, precinct, ward, city, or town in which during the time of registration, or revision of registration, or on any day of election, there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, at any place within said parish, or at or near any poll or voting place, or place of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences shall prevent, or tend to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of election, if such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences occur on the day of election, or of the supervision of registration of the parish, if they occur during the time of registration, or revision of registration, to make in duplicate and under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto and of the effect produced by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbances, bribery, or currupt influences in preventing a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration or election, and of the number of qualified voters deterred by such riots, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences from registering or voting, which statement shall also be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish. When such statement is made by a commissioner of election or a supervisor of registration, he shall forward it in duplicate to the supervisor of registration of the parish, if in the city of New Orleans to the secretary of state, one copy of which, if made to the supervisor of registration, shall be forwarded by him to the returning officers provided for in section 2 of this act, when he makes the returns of election in his parish. His copy of said statement shall be so annexed to his returns of elections, by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance, that the same can be kept together, and the other copy the supervisor of registration shall deliver to the clerk of the court of his parish for the use of the district attorney.

"SEC. 43. Be it further enacted, &c., That immediately upon the close of the polls on the day of election, the commissioners of the election at each poll or voting place shall proceed to count the votes, as provided in section 13 of this act, and after they shall have so counted the votes and made a list of the names of all the persons voted for, and the offices for which they were voted for, and the number of votes received by each, the number of ballots contained in the box, and the number rejected, and the reasons therefor, duplicates of such lists shall be made out, signed and sworn to by the commissioners of election of each poll, and such duplicate lists shall be delivered, one to the supervisor of registration of the parish, and one to the clerk of the district court of the parish, and in the parish of Orleans to the secretary of state, by one or all such commissioners in person, within twenty-four hours after the closing of the polls. It shall be the duty of the supervisors of registration, within twenty-four hours after the receipt of all the returns for the different polling places, to consolidate such returns, to be certified as correct by the clerk of the district court, and forward the consolidated returns, with the originals received by him, to the returning officers provided for in section 2 of this act, the said report and returns to be inclosed in an envelope of strong paper or cloth, securely sealed, and forwarded by mail. He shall forward a copy of any statement as to violence or disturbance, bribery or corruption, or other offenses specified in section 26 of this act, if any there be, together with all memoranda and tally-lists used in making the count, and statement of the votes.

"SEC. 44. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives and the secretary of the senate of the last general assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the general assembly; and it shall be the duty of the said clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively; and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate. Nothing in this act shall be construed to conflict with article 34 of the constitution of the State."

The senate branch of the legislature of Louisiana is composed of thirty-six senators, nineteen being a quorum; the house branch is composed of one hundred and twenty members, sixty-one being a quorum. The election for governor and members of the legislature, styled the "general election," is held biennially, on the first Monday in November.

It will be observed that section 2, set forth above, of the statute regulating the manner of holding elections, provides for five "returning officers" for all elections in the State, commonly called "the returning board." In view of the constitutional provisions above cited, this statutory provision is strange and anomalous. It suggests and imports a dishonest purpose; it savors of fraud; in the natural order of things, leaving out of view for the moment that it contravenes the constitution, it is unnecessary, illogical, and absurd, and it is not surprising that the returning board has been one of the chief instrumentalities in the hands of desperate adventurers in producing the disorders and stormy conflicts that have disgraced and cursed the State and people of Louisiana ever since it came into existence. What necessary, reasonable, or honest purpose it can serve we cannot see, and its whole history shows that it has accomplished much and lasting evil.

The statutory clause providing for "the returning board," so far as it affects elections for governor and members of the legislature, manifestly comes in direct conflict with the constitution of Louisiana in two respects:

1. The forty-sixth article provides that "returns of all elections for members of the general assembly shall be made to the secretary of state;" and it is provided in article 48: * * * "The qualified electors for representatives shall vote for governor and lieutenant-governor at the time and place for voting for representatives; the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officer to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the session of the general assembly then to be holden."

The term "returns" so used in the constitution plainly means the returns as made up by the election officers in the several parishes. If the counting, tabulating, and certifying the votes by such officers is not making up the "returns," and if such officers are not returning officers, then what is the statement of the votes, and what are such officers properly termed? What office do they perform? This is made the more manifest by the almost universal use of the term "returns" in connection with elections in the State of Louisiana before the existence of the returning board, and in most if not all the States in the Union. The constitution of Louisiana contains many provisions in reference to elections, and if it had been intended to attach such unusual meaning to the term "returns," such purpose would have been indicated by apt words. As there is no such unusual meaning indicated, the term must be taken in its ordinary acceptation when used in connection with elections. The clause of the statute providing for the returning board requires that the "returns" shall be sent by the proper returning officers to "the returning board," instead of to the secretary of state, as the constitution provides, and being so in conflict with the constitution it is null and void.

2. Article 73 of the constitution provides: "The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, in district courts, in parish courts, and in justices of the peace;" and article 94 provides: "No judicial powers, except as committing magistrates in criminal cases, shall be conferred on any officers other than those mentioned in this title, except such as may be necessary in towns and cities, and the judicial powers of such officers shall not extend further than the cognizance of cases arising under the police regulations of towns and cities in the State."

The title from which these extracts are taken is styled in the constitution "Judiciary department;" it provides for courts and the distribution of judicial power, but returning officers, or any like officers, are not mentioned in it, except by general terms to exclude them, and no judicial power is conferred upon them by it.

The act creating "the returning board" undertakes to confer upon it very high and important judicial powers. In section 3, above set forth, it undertakes to empower and confer jurisdiction upon "the returning board" to investigate touching riots, disturbances, &c., and to decide to what extent the same affected the election at any polling place, and how, to adjudicate that the vote of the poll or voting place shall be counted, or cast out wholly and rejected; to examine further testimony, to send for persons and papers, and to allow persons interested in such elections to come before them and assert and defend their rights. And by necessary implication, it is intended to confer all judicial power essential to determine all such questions as may come under their jurisdiction. But the constitution, as we have seen, expressly forbids that any judicial power shall be conferred upon such officers, and the statutory provision in question is therefore null and void.

It may be said that if the returning board and its acts are nullities then the election must fail absolutely. This does not follow; but if it should, this is no excuse or justification, and cannot put life into the statute when there is a plain and palpable violation of the constitution. But such consequences cannot follow. The returning officers designated by the constitution must send the returns to the secretary of state, and the legislature may be duly organized according to the ordinary rules of general parliamentary law. These are well understood, and in some States they alone prevail, and in the House of Representatives they prevailed for a long while.

But granting, for the argument, that the returning board had a constitutional existence, it plainly exceeded its powers in two material respects: 1. The statute regulating the manner of holding elections provides (see section 2, above set out), in reference to the returning board, as follows: "The presiding officer shall at such meeting open, in the presence of the said returning officers, the statements of the commissioners of election, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate; one copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation, by printing in the official journal and such other newspaper as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly elected. The returns of the election thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers until set aside after contest according to law of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected. The governor shall, within thirty days thereafter, issue commissions to all officers thus declared elected who are required by law to be commissioned."

Now, this provision is very material; it is not merely directory, it is mandatory and essential. "The statements of the commissioners of election" are made by the officers at the polls, who held the election and knew exactly what votes were polled and under what circumstances; and, besides, these statements are sworn by the commissioners.

The fact is, that in ascertaining the result of the election the returning board did not, from the statements of the commissioners of election, "canvass and compile the returns of the election;" but, on the contrary, they canvassed and compiled the returns from the consolidated returns made up by the supervisors, as provided in section 43 of the statute set out above. This conduct on the part of the returning board was not only unlawful, but the testimony goes to show that it was done willfully; that in repeated instances the commissioners' returns did not correspond with the supervisors' consolidated returns; that the latter had been so made up falsely, and always in favor of the Republican candidates, to the extent of some 3,500 votes.

2. Section 26, set out above, of the statute referred to, provides that in case of riot, and other offenses specified, it shall be the duty of the commissioner or supervisor, as specified, to make under oath a clear and full statement of all the facts connected with such unlawful acts, and the effect of the same upon the election, and such statement must be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish; such statements must be sent to the returning board, attached by wax or some adhesive substance to the returns of election. Section 3, set out above, of said act, prescribes the duties of the returning board in cases where such affidavits shall accompany returns sent to them.

It will be seen that in one contingency they must not disturb the return, but count it; in another contingency they must reject it, and refuse to count it. Now, in plain violation of this statute in the respect last mentioned, the returning board in repeated instances, and after they had examined the returns and saw how results could be affected to suit their wishes and interests, received affidavits alleging such offenses in various parishes and voting places, which affidavits were not made by supervisors or commissioners of election, but by other persons, and such affidavits did not accompany returns as required by law; and, pretending to act upon such affidavits, the returns were suppressed—not rejected, as allowed by law in the contingency named, but suppressed in such way as to give Republican candidates majorities where they did not receive majorities in the parishes and at the voting places named.

Mr. Kellogg admits in his statement (see it) that in the twelfth, eighteenth, and twenty-second senatorial districts the Democratic candidates had the majority of the votes cast at the polls, and, as the commissioners' returns sent to the returning board showed, that in the election of ten members of the house of representatives designated the returns of commissioners showed that Democratic candidates were elected, and the returning board so changed or suppressed the returns as to show that the Republican candidates were elected. Without reference to the fraudulent purpose of the returning board in the respects just mentioned, it had no power thus to interfere with returns and alter or suppress them. If, under the constitution, it can exist at all for any purpose, it must pursue strictly the powers conferred upon it; it has not general jurisdiction, and cannot exercise powers like a court having general jurisdiction. It exceeded its powers, transcended its jurisdiction in the respects just mentioned, and such acts, apart from fraud, were null and void.

It cannot be truly said that the returning board exceeded its jurisdiction and exercised important powers which the statute creating it did not purport to confer by inadvertence. On the contrary, the evidence shows conclusively that it assumed such powers in aid of the most flagrant frauds perpetrated by it. Indeed, its whole course of conduct, in pretending to ascertain the result of the election, manifests most strikingly the real purpose had in view in creating this strange and unnatural tribunal. It ascertained results of the election, and seeing them, with deliberation and advisedly, changed them at will; made new ones, and always in favor of the Republican candidates. The returns from the parishes showed that Nicholls, the Democratic candidate for governor, had a majority over Packard, the Republican candidate for the same office, of 8,010 votes. By the exercise of the unlawful powers already pointed out, this majority was changed to a majority in favor of Packard of 3,426 votes.

The evidence shows, and it is admitted by Mr. Kellogg, that Perkins, Democrat, had a majority for senator in the twelfth senatorial district; he beat Weber, Republican, largely, but the returning board gave the latter a certificate of election. Meredith, Democrat, had a majority over Hamlet, Republican, for the senate, for the eighteenth senatorial district; the returning board gave Hamlet the certificate. Sandiford, Democrat, beat Blunt, Republican, for the senate, in the twenty-second senatorial district; the returning board gave Blunt the certificate.

In Ouachita Parish, Breard and Taylor, Democrats, beat Barrington and Brewster, Republicans for the house of representatives, as the parish returns show; but the returning board gave the Republicans certificates of election. In East Baton Rouge Parish, Dupré, Williams, and Young, Democrats, beat Bird, Holt, and Lane, Republicans, for the house of representatives; the returning board gave the certificates of election to the Republicans. In La Fayette Parish, Marshall T. Martin, Democrat, beat Fernest Martin, Republican (these were brothers), for the house of representatives; the Republican received the certificate of election.

In West Feliciana Parish, McGee and Ryland, Democrats, beat Swazie and Early, Republicans, for the house of representatives. The Republicans, however, received certificates of election. In Morehouse Parish, Washburn and Hammond, Democrats, beat Shelton and Blair, Republicans, for the house of representatives, but the certificates of election were given to the Republicans. In De Soto Parish, Pitts and Means, Democrats, beat Long and Johnson, Republicans; the latter received certificates of election. The returning board refused to count any returns from the parishes of Grant and East Feliciana; the returns were thrown out absolutely. The parish returns show that Lyons and Porter, Democrats, were elected from East Feliciana, and Randolph, Democrat, was elected from Grant Parish.

The parish returns show that the Democrats were elected in each instance above mentioned, and Mr. Kellogg admits that they received majorities. (See his statement made to the committee on 13th of November instant.) These changes were wrought by the returning board, not in the exercise of the powers sought to be conferred upon them by statute and in the way prescribed, but by the exercise of arbitrary power, for which there was no color of legal sanction. The statute creating the board required that it should be composed of five persons to be elected from all political parties. In fact there were but four members composing it, and all of them Republicans. The statute commanded that the vacancy should be filled by those members in office; they peremptorily refused to fill the vacancy.

In changing the results of the election as above stated, the sittings of the board were irregular; their movements were clandestine and collusive; they received illegal evidence to the end they might make pretext for suppressing polls; they received suggestions from persons not allowed by law to make them; and after they and their political associates saw that it was necessary to change results in their own interests, Mr. Spofford proposed to prove that Mr. Kellogg, then governor and a candidate for the United States Senatorship which he now claims, "joined in making illegal complaints and inducing the board to consider them."

In view of the facts and circumstances developed by the testimony received by the committee we do not hesitate—we feel constrained to declare—that the returning board in Louisiana in pretending to ascertain and determine the result of the election in that State in November last not only proceeded in many material respects without the sanction or even color of law, but perpetrated the most flagrant and shameless frauds, surpassing, if possible, any ever perpetrated by that tribunal before, and by such means undertook to change the actual result of that election so as to elect the Republican candidate for governor and give the Republicans a majority in the legislature. Their action was unlawful, willful, corrupt, concerted; and we cannot escape the conviction that it was, to say the least and best, connived at and encouraged by persons occupying important stations in and out of the State of Louisiana.

On the 1st day of January, A. D. 1877, as the constitution of Louisiana directs, the legislature designated as "the Nicholls legislature" assembled in Saint Patrick's Hall in the city of New Orleans. The following extracts from the journal of the senate, found on pages 1 and 2, show the circumstances under which it met:

"The members of this senate, duly elected, proceeded at 12 m. on the 1st of January, 1877—being the first Monday of said month—to the State capitol of the State of Louisiana, to which they were refused admittance, and which they found in the possession of a large body of metropolitan police and armed men.

"They were reliably informed of the presence of five companies of United States troops in an adjoining building, and that an entrance into the State capitol, by which the troops could be readily introduced into the senate chamber, had been especially made for that purpose. As the representatives of the people, this body considered it contrary to law and the spirit of free institutions to organize a general assembly of the State of Louisiana under a military guard calculated to overawe and intimidate the members.

"For which reasons they repaired to Saint Patrick's Hall, in the city of New Orleans, where a permanent organization has been effected."—(Senate journal, 1877, page 2.)

Then follows on the next page, 3, signed by twenty senators, making a quorum:

"The undersigned holding-over senators, and senators-elect, do hereby solemnly protest against the occupation of the capitol of the State by an armed body of metropolitan police and other armed retainers, supported by a large body of Federal troops in an adjacent building immediately accessible to the State-house by a passage purposely prepared with that object in view, which illegal, arbitrary, and revolutionary proceedings have been consummated by the order and under the sanction of the governor of the State, and the lieutenant-governor as presiding officer of the senate, for the purpose of overawing and controlling the deliberations of the general assembly, and preventing the access of the members duly elected, as well as the citizens of the State, to the meetings of their servants, save upon the written permission of the governor," &c.

There were in the senate at the organization on the day it assembled twenty senators. Of these, nine were "holding-over senators," and their right is not questioned; eight new senators held certificates from the returning board, and it is admitted that S. G. Perkins, senator from the twelfth district, received a majority, he beating Weber, the Republican candidate. It is likewise admitted that T. E. Meredith received a majority of the votes cast in the eighteenth senatorial district over Hamlet, the Republican candidate. And it is also admitted that J. W. Sandiford received a majority of the votes cast in the twenty-second senatorial district over Blunt, the Republican candidate. The parish returns show these facts, and they are admitted. (See Mr. Kellogg's statement, made to the committee on the 13th of November, 1877.)

It required nineteen senators to make a quorum; twenty senators were present at, and participated in, the organization.

The following extracts from the journal of the house of representatives show the circumstances attending the organization of that body (page 1):

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"New Orleans, January 1, 1877.

"At 12 o'clock m. the clerk of the house of representatives, in accordance with the law, took his place on the stand of the speaker of the house and stated that he had found the State-house barricaded and in the possession of the police and military of the State, placed there by order of the governor, and a militia officer in charge of the hall of the house of representatives; that he had demanded that such officers should withdraw, and the obstructions to the free ingress and egress to the State-house and hall of the house of representatives be removed; that he had been refused such demand, and would not organize the house of representatives under such circumstances, but would go elsewhere and organize that body. He then repaired to Saint Patrick's Hall, where the house was called to order."

Mr. Trezevant was the clerk who organized the house; he was clerk of the "old house" and the person authorized by law to organize the new one.

There were present and participating in the organization of the house sixty-two members, sixty-one being a quorum; of these —— held certificates from the returning board. Of those present, the parish returns show, and it is admitted (see Mr. Kellogg's statement above cited), that D. A. Breard, jr., and J. G. Taylor, of Ouachita Parish, received majorities over Barrington and Brewster, Republicans; that J. Pitts and Joe T. Means, of De Soto Parish, received majorities over Long and Johnston, Republicans; that Robert H. Ryland and J. B. McGehee, of West Feliciana, received majorities over Swazie and Early, Republicans; that W. W. Washburn and J. D. Hammond, of Morehouse Parish, received majorities over Shelton and Blair, Republicans; that James T. Williams, H. C. Young, and J. W. Dupré, of East Baton Rouge Parish, received majorities over Bird, Holt, and Lane, Republicans; that Marshall T. Martin, of La Fayette Parish, received a majority over Fernest Martin, Republican; that W. W. Carlos, of Webster Parish, received a majority over Heath, Republican; that W. B. Porter and T. B. Lyons, of East Feliciana, received all the votes cast; had no opponent; this vote the returning board threw out; that E. G. Randolph, of Grant Parish, received a majority of all the votes cast; the vote of this parish the returning board threw out.

It thus appears that "the Nicholls legislature," on the first day it assembled, had a quorum, and more than a quorum, of members who had been elected at the polls, and in fact had the right to sit. But for the unlawful and fraudulent action of the returning board, there could be no pretense for suggestion that the organization thus made was not strictly legal in all respects. Indeed, the organization was made in pursuance of the actual result of the election.

It is said, however, that whatever may have been the result of the election at the polling places throughout the State in the parishes, the legislature must be organized by those persons, and only those, who hold certificates of election from the returning board, and that without reference to the conduct of that board, whether dishonest, fraudulent, or otherwise. In reply to this view we have endeavored to show, first, that the returning board had no constitutional sanction as returning officers of the election for governor and members of the legislature, and its acts are therefore void; second, that granting for argument's sake that it had a legal existence, it transcended its powers and jurisdiction, first, in failing to "canvass and compile" the returns of the commissioners of election, instead of the consolidated returns sent to it by the supervisors of election; and second, in that it received suggestions after seeing the returns and knowing the result as to violence, disorders, &c., otherwise than as the law allowed. And the testimony makes the dishonest purpose and fraudulent conduct of the returning board in changing results manifest.

There is, however, another answer. The Senate, in Spencer's case, after much debate, decided that when there are two rival bodies of men in a State, each claiming to be the lawful legislature, it is competent to look behind the certificate of election and see who was in fact elected at the polls. This is a recent decision, and it was sanctioned by the vote of every Republican Senator who voted on the question. We do not stop here to question the soundness of this decision; it was made by a Republican Senate and in favor of a Republican Senator. We cite the following extract from the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this case. The committee say:

"When we consider that all the forms prescribed by law for canvassing and certifying an election, and for the organization of the two houses, are designed to secure to the persons actually elected the right to act in the offices to which in fact they have been elected, it would be sacrificing the end to the means were the Senate to adhere to the mere form, and thus defeat the end which the forms were intended to secure.

"The persons in the two bodies claiming to be the senate and house of representatives who voted for Spencer constituted a quorum of both houses of the members actually elected; the persons in the State-house legislature who voted for Sykes did not constitute a quorum of the two houses duly elected, but a quorum of persons certified to have been elected to the two houses."

The legislature, so organized, on the 2d day of January, 1876, canvassed the returns for governor, and declared Francis T. Nicholls elected, and on the 8th day of the same month he took the oath of office prescribed by law, and has ever since that time exercised the office of governor.

On the 24th day of April, 1877, the legislature elected the contestant, Mr. Spofford, to be a Senator in the United States Senate for six years from the 4th of March, 1877, having voted in joint assembly at least once each legislative day since the 10th of January, 1877. Each house took a vote on the 9th. The whole number of votes cast in that election was 153. Mr. Spofford received 140 votes. There were but three members of the legislature absent at the time. Of the members thus voting, 51 had been in "the Packard legislature" at the time Mr. Kellogg claims to have been elected, and voted for him. At the time Mr. Spofford was elected there was only "the Nicholls legislature" in the State, and there was no opposing or rival body.

All the acts passed by this legislature are duly published and recognized as the statutes of Louisiana. They are recognized by all the co-ordinate branches of the State government and by the whole people, and by the courts of the United States sitting in that State. The first act passed by this legislature was approved by Governor Nicholls on the 8th of January, 1877, the day he went into office.

The body of men which claimed to be the legislature of Louisiana, and commonly called "the Packard legislature," assembled in the State-house, in New Orleans, on the 1st day of January, 1877. The house was barricaded and surrounded by bodies of metropolitan police, and several companies of United States troops were kept in readiness for action in the neighborhood of the State-house. There were in the senate branch of this legislature eight "holding-over" senators and eleven persons claiming to be senators holding certificates of election from the returning board. These persons were Messrs. Blunt, Bryant, Case, Demas, Hamlet, Hooper, Sutton, Stamps, Wakefield, Wheeler, and Weber—eleven in all. These altogether make nineteen, a quorum, if they had all been elected, but Blunt, Hamlet, and Weber were defeated candidates; this the parish returns show and the fact is admitted. So that, in fact, there were in this senate but sixteen senators entitled to sit in a lawful legislature. One of these (Hamlet) having departed, left them without even a nominal quorum. Then Mr. Steven, a "holding over" senator, sitting in "the Nicholls legislature," happened to be in the State-house on business, and the sergeant-at-arms of the Packard legislature seized and took him into the senate chamber to try and restore their nominal quorum. He was taken by force, and against his will and protest, and he did not participate in anything done. The seizure of Mr. Steven was a disgraceful proceeding, and the object had in view was to make a nominal quorum in order to admit as senators, upon a feigned contest, Baker and Kelso, two candidates who were defeated at the polls, and who did not even hold certificates of election from the returning board. Steven did not vote, refused to participate, and without him there was no quorum present when Kelso and Baker were admitted.

Mr. Steven gives the following account of his seizure. He says:

"On January 1, 1877, I was one of the holding-over senators who formed the senate of the State of Louisiana convened on that day in Saint Patrick's Hall, in the city of New Orleans.

"I was one of the committee of three appointed by the chair to inform Governor Kellogg that the senate was duly organized, and ready to receive any communication he might have to make, &c., &c. The other members of the committee were Mr. Garland, of Saint Landry, and Mr. Boatner, of Catahoula, both of whom were elected in 1876. The committee proceeded to the Saint Louis Hotel, were admitted to Governor Kellogg's office, and delivered to him in person the message with which they were charged. Upon leaving Governor Kellogg's office, I was stopped by two or three persons, who stated that they were sergeants-at-arms of the senate, and that I must accompany them to the senate chamber. I stated that the senate of the State had met in Saint Patrick's Hall on that day and had adjourned until the following day; therefore I refused to accompany them, and refused to submit to arrest.

"I was thereupon seized by two or more of these parties and pushed and dragged in the direction of the senate chamber, I resisting at every step. In this manner we reached the outside bar of the senate, where, by getting my feet against the railing, I was enabled for a few moments to make a more effectual resistance. I was finally forced to the bar of the senate. I addressed myself to the president (Lieutenant-Governor Antoine), who was in the chair, stating the circumstances which led to my arrest, protesting against the arrest, and demanding that I be permitted to withdraw. The president stated that I could only be permitted to withdraw by unanimous consent of the senate, which was refused. At this juncture Governor Kellogg came in through a door immediately in the rear of the president's desk. I appealed to him as commander-in-chief of the forces occupying the building to release me, as I considered my arrest as equivalent to a violation of a flag of truce.

"He stated he was very sorry, &c., but as the senate had me in custody he could not interfere. I then made an attempt to go out, but was seized by several persons and forced back. I took a chair and sat down with my back to the president, at the end of the center aisle. The roll was called, my name repeated probably a dozen or more times; I made no response nor gave recognition in any way, shape, or manner whatever. When the roll was called on the seating of Baker and Kelso I made no answer, nor gave sign or motion of any kind whatever.

"WILL STEVEN."

There was not at any time a lawful senate.

In the Packard house of representatives there were at no time more than sixty-eight persons present claiming to be members. Eleven of these, including Brown, of Vernon Parish, as has already appeared, were defeated at the polls, so the parish returns show, and Mr. Kellogg admits that their Democratic opponents had majorities of the votes cast. This leaves the house without a quorum of members actually elected. Mr. Kellogg, therefore, did not receive a majority of the members elected to the legislature.

The evidence shows that but for the presence of the United States troops the so-called "Packard legislature" would never have assembled, and never would have set up any claim to be a legislature; but for the presence of troops it would not have continued to exist for one hour; it never for one moment existed as a free legislative body; it was the creature of fraud and force, and as soon as the latter disappeared it fled from the face of men; it felt and realized that it had no rightful existence, and hence its friends and foes alike repudiated it. From the beginning it was a sham, a pretense, and a fraud; it passed no act, it did nothing that is recognized as law by any of the authorities in Louisiana; it did no act for which any authority claims validity, except the pretended election of the contestant, Mr. Kellogg. This is the only act it did that claims recognition, and it remains to be seen if the Senate of the United States alone will recognize and accept this single fraudulent act of a pretended legislature which the State and people of Louisiana utterly repudiate.

Treachery and fraud mark every lineament of the so-called "Packard legislature" from its incipiency, and the Senate cannot escape seeing this. But apart from fraud, where there are two rival bodies of men in a State, each claiming in good faith to be the lawful legislature, and each contests the right of the other from the beginning of their existence, and such contest is continued without intermission until one prevails and absorbs the other, so that the latter completely disappears, and all the co-ordinate branches, and all the authorities, and the great mass of the people of the State, and the President and courts of the United States, recognize the prevailing body as the lawful legislature, and all its acts passed from its beginning as laws of the State, and recognize no single act of the body so absorbed and totally disappearing, can the Senate of the United States, many months after it has so completely disappeared, recognize the body thus disappearing as the legislature of the State by admitting to the Senate as a Senator a person who claims to have been elected by such a body of men?

The statement of the proposition irresistibly suggests the answer—it cannot. The Senate may have the physical power to do so—it has not the right to do so—it can only do so by the arbitrary exercise of lawless, despotic power. Such an act on the part of the Senate could only be regarded as a defiance of the authority, right, and will of the State and an insult to its dignity; it would shock the moral sense of the American people, and afford cause for profound distrust and alarm for the safety of our system of government.

The misrule and public disorders which have afflicted the State and people of Louisiana seem to have passed away. The settlement of differences and a new administration of government resulting upon the election in November last restored peace, good order, and a wholesome government.

That State and that people have settled their political contests and strifes which have annoyed and distressed the whole country. The Senate ought not, we trust it will not, disturb that settlement and revive bitter controversies. On the contrary, we trust it will, as in law and right it must do, accept and ratify that settlement by admitting the contestant, Mr. Spofford. His credentials, in all respects, comply with requirements of law, and he is well entitled to sit as Senator.

WEDNESDAY, November 28, 1877.

Mr. Wadleigh rose to a question of privilege and moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution yesterday reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to admit William P. Kellogg to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

* * * * * * *

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the said resolution.

On motion by Mr. Thurman to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That M. C. Butler be now sworn as a Senator from the State of South Carolina,"

After debate,

On the question to agree thereto, the yeas were 30 and the nays were 30.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

The vote of the Senate being equally divided,

The Vice-President voted in the negative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Upon the announcement of the result of the vote on the amendment,

Mr. Thurman rose to a question of order, and submitted that the provision of the Constitution that the Vice-President shall have no vote unless where the Senate is equally divided does not apply to the case of seating a member; but that questions of seating a member should be left to the Senators themselves, under the provision that each House shall be the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members; and,

After debate,

Mr. Thurman withdrew the question of order.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution,

Pending debate, a message was received from the House of Representatives.

* * * * * * *

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution to admit William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. Patterson (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) that the Senate adjourn, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 27.

THURSDAY, November 29, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to admit William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Conover (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

[The debate is found on pages 749–764 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, November 30, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to admit William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Saulsbury to amend the resolution so as to read as follows, viz:

"Whereas it appears by the report of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that Henry M. Spofford, one of the contestants to a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, did ask and demand the authority of the committee to produce testimony on the five following points at issue between the contestants, to wit:

"1. That the facts relative to the election of Tremoulet, Cressy, and Rolle, from the seventh representative district of New Orleans, were substantially as set forth in the statement read by H. M. Spofford in his argument before this committee on the 24th October, 1877.

"2. That the composition, votes for Senator, and political proclivities of the legislature on the 24th April, 1877, when H. M. Spofford was elected Senator, were substantially as set forth in the aforesaid argument.

"3. That by the actual returns or statements as made in duplicate by the supervisors of registration (and assistant supervisors), with their appointees, the commissioners of election, and sent one set to the clerk of the district court of each parish in the county and to the secretary of state in the city, and the other set to the returning board (so called), showed a majority of votes actually cast throughout the State of about 8,000 votes for Nicholls and Wiltz over Packard and Antoine for the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor in the election that took place in Louisiana November 7, 1876.

"4. Besides these specific violations of the constitution and of the law under which they pretended to act, I charge that the conduct of the returning officers in suppressing polls and changing the result of the constitutional returns was clandestine, collusive, tyrannical, and unjust; that the real work of conducting an election under pretext of compiling votes was proceeded with in a secret chamber by a corps of partisan clerks, while the occasional open sessions of the board were side-shows devised to screen what was going on within; that arbitrary rules of evidence were established for pretended contests and changed so often and abruptly that no fair trial could be had or was had before the board; that illegal complaints were constantly received and illegal evidence admitted for the purpose of setting aside polls that were in the way of such candidates as the board desired to elect; and that Mr. Kellogg himself, then governor, joined in making illegal complaints and inducing the board to consider them.

"5. I am informed, and so charged, that the returns from Vernon Parish, after they came into possession of the returning officers, and while they were under their control, were fraudulently altered by a change of figures, tantamount to a forgery of a public record; that the board knew what the figures upon those returns were before their alteration, and yet after the alteration promulgated the results of said forgery as the true returns; that by such fraudulent alteration E. E. Smart, candidate for representative in the State assembly, who had in fact and according to the returns as they first came to the board defeated his competitor, Brown, was left behind and Brown, the defeated candidate, falsely declared elected; and that said Brown took his seat in the Packard house and figures on the journal as present on the 2d of January, 1877, when there was a pretended count of votes for governor and lieutenant-governor in joint assembly, and perhaps on one or two other occasions, but that he afterward abandoned that body and went home, acknowledging that he never had been elected.

"And which request was refused by a majority of said committee: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and of Henry M. Spofford, the contestants for the seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with all the papers relating to said contest, with instructions to said committee to take testimony on the issues above mentioned."

The question being first put by the Chair on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. Sauls-bury to the resolution reported by the committee, viz: Strike out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof insert:

"That the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and of Henry M. Spofford, the contestants for the seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with all the papers relating to said contest, with instructions to said committee to take testimony on the issues above mentioned,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 29, nays 29.

On motion by Mr. Bayard, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution,

On motion by Mr. Thurman that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, it was determined in the negative—yeas 21, nay 31.

* * * * * * *

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to admit William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana; and,

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Hill to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That Henry M. Spofford be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana on a prima facie title, and subject to the right of William Pitt Kellogg to contest his seat,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 27, nays 29.

On motion by Mr. Allison, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Bayard, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Rollins, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution in the following words:

"Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath;

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 30, nays 28.

The yeas and nays having been heretofore ordered,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Rollins, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, and Withers.

So the resolution was agreed to.

* * * * * * *

Mr. William Pitt Kellogg then appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[The debate is found on pages 767–797 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, March 21, 1879.

Mr. Jonas presented a memorial of Henry M. Spofford, of Louisiana, praying an investigation into his claim to a seat in the Senate as Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, April 16, 1879.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to have printed for its use the arguments before it in the case of Spofford against Kellogg relative to a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, with such evidence, papers, and documents relative to the case as it may deem proper."

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution; and having been amended on the motion of Mr. Hoar, the resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to have printed for its use the arguments before it in the case of Spofford against Kellogg relative to a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, with such other proceedings in relation to the case as it may deem proper."

THURSDAY, May 1, 1879.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was ordered to be printed:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, praying permission to produce evidence relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to the seat in the Senate held by him from the State of Louisiana, and in support of the claim of said petitioner thereto, be, and said committee is hereby, instructed to inquire into the matters alleged in said petition, and for that purpose said committee is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and do all such other acts as are necessary and proper for a full and fair investigation in the premises. Said committee may, in its discretion, appoint a subcommittee of its own members to make such investigation in whole or in part; which subcommittee shall have authority to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers, and may make such investigation either in Washington or in the State of Louisiana; and said committee or its subcommittee may sit in vacation."

FRIDAY, May 2, 1879.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday reported by Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, instructing said committee to inquire into the matters alleged in the petition of Henry M. Spofford, relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate; and

On motion by Mr. Hoar to amend the resolution by striking out all of said resolution and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Whereas on the 25th day of October, 1877, the Senate unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested cases of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate;'

"And whereas on the 26th day of November, 1877, said committee reported the following resolutions:

"'Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath;

"'Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States;'

"And on the 30th day of November, 1877, the Senate adopted said resolution, and thereafter on the same day said Kellogg was duly admitted to take the oath and took his seat as a Senator from said State for said term:

"Resolved, That said proceedings are final and conclusive upon the right of said Kellogg and the claim of said Spofford to said seat for said term."

Pending debate,

The President pro tempore announced that the morning hour had expired, and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its adjournment yesterday.

TUESDAY, May 6, 1879.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. Saulsbury from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, May 1, 1879, instructing said committee to inquire into the matters alleged in the petition of Henry M. Spofford, relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate; and,

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Hoar,

Pending debate,

The Presiding Officer announced that the morning hour had expired.

WEDNESDAY, May 7, 1879.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. Saulsbury from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, May 1, 1879, instructing said committee to inquire into the matters alleged in the petition of Henry M. Spofford, relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate; and,

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Hoar,

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Edmunds to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "petition," in line 6, the following: "So far only as relates to any charge in said petition of personal misconduct on the part of said Kellogg which may render him liable to expulsion or censure," it was determined in the negative—yeas 20, nays 27.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McDonald, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Conkling to amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That the inquiry hereby authorized shall be confined to the matters alleged in the memorial of Mr. Spofford to be new and different from those covered by the previous inquiry,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 20, nays 27.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McDonald, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The resolution having been amended on the motion of Mr. Hoar,

On motion by Mr. Edmunds to further amend the resolution by inserting after the word "that," in line 1, the following: "recognizing the validity and finality of the previous action of the Senate in the premises," it was determined in the negative—yeas 20, nays 27.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McDonald, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Conkling to further amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That such questions in said case as were fully considered and adjudged in the former investigation shall not be opened under this resolution,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 20, nays 27.

On motion by Mr. Conkling, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McDonald, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Logan to further amend the resolution by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That said committee be further empowered and directed to make inquiry and take testimony upon the matter as to whether any unlawful or corrupt means were employed to disorganize the body by which William Pitt Kellogg claims to have been elected to the Senate, or to organize that by which the memorialist claims to have been elected or to secure the alleged election of the memorialist,"

During the debate,

Mr. Morgan, while addressing the Senate on the proposed amendment, having used the following language:

"Has the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Kellogg) any objection to the Committee on Privileges and Elections investigating the question whether or not he bribed the members of the legislature that elected him?"

Mr. Edmunds raised a question of order, that it was not in order, where another Senator is personally concerned and a resolution is offered affecting his character, to propound such a question.

The President pro tempore decided that, in the opinion of the Chair, the language used by the Senator from Alabama contained no imputation upon the Senator from Louisiana, and was in order.

After further debate,

On the question to agree to the amendment proposed by Mr. Logan, it was determined in the negative—yeas 19, nays 28.

On motion by Mr. Logan, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Beck, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Groome, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, Williams, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the amendment proposed by Mr. Hoar, viz: Strike out all of said resolution, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Whereas on the 25th day of October, 1877, the Senate unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested cases of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits, of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate;'

"And whereas on the 26th day of November, 1877, said committee reported the following resolutions:

"'Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath;

"'Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States;'

"And on the 30th day of November, 1877, the Senate adopted said resolutions; and thereafter, on the same day, said Kellogg was duly admitted to take the oath, and took his seat as a Senator from said State for said term: Therefore,

"Resolved, That said proceedings are final and conclusive upon the right of said Kellogg and the claim of said Spofford to such seat for said term,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 17, nays 26.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Groome, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Williams.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 17.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Call, Coke, Davis of West Virginia, Garland, Groome, Hampton, Harris, Hill of Georgia, Houston, Jonas, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Slater, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, and Williams.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Bell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, and Windom.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to, and is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, praying permission to produce evidence relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to the seat in the Senate held by him from the State of Louisiana, and in support of the claim of said petitioner thereto, be, and said committee is hereby, instructed to inquire into the matters alleged in said petition; and for that purpose said committee is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and do all such other acts as are necessary and proper for a full and fair investigation in the premises. Said committee may, in its discretion, appoint a subcommittee of its own members to make such investigation in whole or in part; which subcommittee shall have authority to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers, and may make such investigation either in Washington or in the State of Louisiana, and said committee or its subcommittee may sit in vacation; and said committee are further instructed to inquire and report whether bribery or other corrupt or unlawful means were resorted to to secure the alleged election of the memorialist."

SATURDAY, June 21, 1879.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or a subcommittee of the same, be, and are hereby, authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate for the purpose of continuing the investigation in the Spofford-Kellogg contest."

MONDAY, February 9, 1880.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a resolution* of the legislature of Louisiana relative to the election of William Pitt Kellogg to the Senate of the United States from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

* Found in Senate Miscellaneous, 46th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 1, No. 37.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1880.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the memorial of Republican members of the legislature of Louisiana, relative to the election of William Pitt Kellogg to the Senate of the United States from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1880.

Mr. Jonas presented a memorial of the Union Soldiers' Association of New Orleans, La., relative to the election of William Pitt Kellogg to the Senate of the United States, praying that his right to a seat therein be declared null and void; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, March 22, 1880.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, submitted a report (No. 338) thereon, accompanied by the following resolutions for consideration; which were ordered to be printed:

"1. Resolved, That, according to the evidence now known to the Senate, William P. Kellogg was not chosen by the legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and is not entitled to sit in the same.

"2. Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford was chosen by the legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted to the same on taking the oath prescribed by law."

Mr. Hoar asked and obtained leave to submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing subject; which were ordered to be printed, to accompany the report No. 388.

On motion by Mr. Hill, of Georgia, that the testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the investigation of the claim of Henry M. Spofford to a seat in the Senate be printed,

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.*

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Saulsbury (chairman), Hill of Georgia, Kernan Bailey, Pryor, Vance, Cameron of Wisconsin, Hoar, and Logan.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 22, 1880.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be entitled to the seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana now occupied by William P. Kellogg, ask leave to submit the following report:

On the 7th day of November, 1876, an election was held in the State of Louisiana for a governor and members of the legislature. In March, 1877, William P. Kellogg presented credentials signed by Stephen B. Packard, claiming to be governor, and certifying that said Kellogg had been duly elected to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1877, by the legislature chosen at said election. In October, 1877, Henry M. Spofford presented credentials, signed by Francis T. Nicholls, claiming to be governor, and certifying that said Spofford had been duly elected to the same seat by the legislature chosen at said election. These several credentials were referred by the Senate to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On the 26th of November, 1877, a majority of the committee reported that the committee had investigated the issue, and that Kellogg, on the merits, was entitled to the seat. A minority of the committee reported that the committee had not fully investigated the issue, but had refused to do so, and asked that the credentials of both contestants be recommitted, with instructions to complete the investigation. The Senate refused to recommit, adopted the majority report, and Kellogg was admitted to the seat on the 28th of November, 1877.

* Taken from Senate Reports 46th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 4, No. 388. The accompanying testimony is here omitted.

On the 21st day of March, 1879, Henry M. Spofford presented his memorial to the Senate, complaining that he was denied the privilege of producing important testimony on the former hearing, alleging that much evidence of bribery and corruption by said Kellogg in procuring his pretended election had been since discovered, and asking that the case "be re-examined, to the end that justice may be done."

This memorial was referred to this committee, and the Senate, subsequently to that reference, ordered and authorized the committee to take testimony by the whole committee or by subcommittee, with full power to send for persons and papers, and to do all things necessary and usual in such cases.

The committee have faithfully executed this order of the Senate.

The memorialist and the sitting member appeared before the committee in person and by counsel. On the 5th of June, 1879, the full committee commenced the examination of witnesses in this city. The examination was continued in November and December by a subcommittee in the city of New Orleans, and was again resumed by the full committee in this city, and was continued until both parties announced they had no further testimony to offer. Nearly one hundred and fifty witnesses have been examined, and over 1,200 printed pages of testimony have been taken and are herewith reported to the Senate, with the conclusions of law and fact at which the committee have arrived.

In the opinion of your committee, the evidence, now for the first time fully taken, clearly and abundantly establishes the following facts:

I. That said William Pitt Kellogg, then holding the office of governor of the State of Louisiana, and pending the canvass in said election of 1876, did conspire with divers persons, and in aid of such conspiracy did fraudulently use the influence and power of his office of governor, to prevent a fair, free, and legal election in said State, to the end that he might procure from the commissioners of election the return of a legislature a majority of whose members should be of the Republican party and presumed to be favorable to his election to the Senate.

II. That, having failed in this, the said William Pitt Kellogg, still holding the office of governor, did conspire with divers persons, and in aid of such conspiracy did fraudulently use the influence and power of his office of governor, to change the result as returned by the commissioners of election, to the end that he might procure, through false certificates of election, the organization of a pretended legislature a majority of whose members should be of the Republican party, and supposed to be favorable to his election to the Senate.

III. That said William Pitt Kellogg did conspire with divers others to prevent, and by force, through the metropolitan police, aided by the Army of the United States, did prevent the lawfully elected members of the legislature, and especially those of the Democratic party, from assembling in the halls of the senate and house of representatives in the State-house of the said State of Louisiana; and did, by threats, by the use of money, by the promise of offices, and by other corrupt practices, compel and induce to assemble in said halls, respectively, a mob of his co-conspirators, against the will of the people of Louisiana, many of whom had not been elected, and some of whom had been neither elected nor certified, to the end that he might procure a pretended legislature for the inauguration of Stephen B. Packard as governor, who, he well knew, had not been elected, and from which mob he might procure the form of his own election to the Senate, and which pretended election he knew such pretended governor would certify.

IV. That said William Pitt Kellogg having thus corruptly procured the assembling of a body of persons pretending to be a legislature, in which were included persons not elected, and from which had been forcibly excluded persons who had been elected and certified as members, did, by bribery, by the use of money and the promise of offices, and by other corrupt practices, induce said body of persons to go through the form of choosing him to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

V. That said William Pitt Kellogg, well knowing that the facts now proven to exist did exist, did falsely represent that no such facts existed or could be proven, seeking thereby to induce a majority of the committee, without taking the evidence which has now been taken, to make a report declaring his title to the seat, and with intent to induce a majority of the Senate to admit him to the seat so fraudulently claimed.

VI. That, to prevent the discovery of the briberies, frauds, and corruptions now proven to exist, the said William Pitt Kellogg did procure a large number of the persons composing said pretended legislature to be appointed to public offices of profit in the custom-house at New Orleans and elsewhere, as inducement not to disclose the truth. That, after other persons, officers and members of said pretended legislature had freely and voluntarily admitted, under oath, their knowledge of said briberies and corruptions, and had been summoned to appear as witnesses before your committee, and were under the protection of the Senate, said William Pitt Kellogg did, by bribery and corrupt practices, induce such witnesses to testify falsely that they had not made such admissions, or that, if they had made them, they were not true.

The committee realize the severity of these conclusions, but they are more than justified by the evidence. In view of their severe character, however, the committee are unwilling to confine this report to a simple announcement of their findings, but will incorporate in the report itself a portion of the abundant evidence which establishes their correctness.

As illustrative of the evidence in support of the first conclusion before stated, your committee will here refer to the following facts:

1. In 1876 F. J. Stokes was parish judge of Grant Parish, appointed by Kellogg. One Ward was the supervisor of registration for said parish, also appointed by Kellogg. Before the registration was completed Ward hid his books, and came to New Orleans and represented to Kellogg that he "was bulldozed and driven from the parish." Kellogg asked Stokes how the parish was. Stokes replied that "whenever the people of the parish was voting the Democrats carried the parish." Kellogg said, "If the people there don't want an election, we will throw the parish out."

Stokes testified most positively that the bulldozing pretext was false, and that the whole thing was fixed up to throw the parish out because it was Democratic. He says "there was no bulldozing there at all."

In answer to the direct question, "Was there any real danger to him (Ward) in staying there (in the parish)?" Stokes said, "Not a solitary particle. There was no danger to any man in the parish if he staid there and behaved himself. They treated him (Ward) very quietly and nicely as long as he staid in the hill country, and they paid his bills up there in the hill country." The hill country was the strong Democratic portion of the parish.

Evidently to make a case of apparent fairness for the sitting member, Jewett testified that "Kellogg handed him a letter directing Ward to return to the parish." This letter he gave to Ward "about the 1st of November." In reply to this Judge Stokes testified that "he (Ward) never started back. It was no calculation to have him start. In the first place, to have started on the 1st of November, he could not have gotten there. He told Kellogg at the time that the only way to the mouth of Red River was to take a stage." "He (Ward) actually did not go back." One fact puts the truth of this evidence of Stokes beyond possible doubt. Ward was allowed to remain in New Orleans until after the time for completing the registration under the law had expired, and then the pretended order to return was given him.

Thus defrauded, the people of the parish held an election without registration, and the Democrats carried the parish, but it "was thrown out."

2. By the election laws of Louisiana the registration of voters was required to be completed nine days before the election. The law also required that when the registration was closed the books of registration from the several parishes should be sent to the chief registrar's office in New Orleans.

In this election of 1876, the books of registration, at least of the several wards in the city of New Orleans, were sent to the custom-house instead of to the office of the chief registrar. Peter Williams was the chief clerk and acting registrar of voters in 1876. Without his knowledge or consent, an order by telegraph was sent out to the supervisors of registration in his name, ordering the books to be sent to the custom-house. To this order the name of Williams was forged by Blanchard, Kellogg's clerk. Williams adds:

"In the morning, when I came to the office I expected to find the books there, but I did not, and I went down then to the custom-house and found the books there, and found them erasing names from them.

"Question. Who were erasing the names?—Answer. The supervisors and their clerks.

"Q. That was at the custom-house?—A. At the custom-house, sir."

There is no denial by any one of this bold and shameless fraud and forgery. It is shown by various witnesses that the "supervisors and their clerks" were erasing names from these registration books during the night, and that a large number was erased, chiefly of Democrats. One of the Republican candidates for the legislature from the seventh ward of New Orleans (Moore) himself struck off "a large number of registered Democratic voters."

As illustrative of the evidence which shows the correctness of the second conclusion announced above, the following facts are cited:

1. Henry Houser was a member of the metropolitan police force, and was stationed as the night watch at Governor Kellogg's house A few days after the election he saw Blanchard, Jewett, Anderson, and Packard frequently at Kellogg's house at night. They often entered from the rear way. Witness frequently saw Blanchard and Jewett writing in one of the rooms upstairs. They would come about 7 or 8 o'clock, and remain from 11 to 12. They had papers which looked like election papers. He heard Kellogg concede that the election for the house of representatives had gone Democratic, and Blanchard told witness they were working on the election returns, and his understanding from them was that they were seeking, by throwing out parishes and working on the returns to change the result, and make it Republican. They were thus engaged until after Packard's inauguration. This witness is strongly corroborated in several particulars, not only by conceded facts, but also by the witnesses called to rebut his testimony.

2. There can now be no reasonable doubt that the scheme to reverse the verdict of the ballot-box was hatched at these clandestine night meetings at Kellogg's own house, and the plan for carrying out the scheme under the false pretexts of violence and intimidation was here begun by those conspirators, of whom Kellogg was the chief. The frauds resorted to to change the result of the election in the seventh ward of New Orleans are now for the first time fully disclosed. This result, changing 3 votes from the Democrats to the Republicans in the house, must be added to the many heretofore known and admitted.

"The returns from the parishes showed that Nicholls, the Democratic candidate for governor, had a majority over Packard, the Republican candidate for the same office, of 8,010 votes. By the exercise of the unlawful powers already pointed out, and by the frauds now proven, this majority was changed to a majority in favor of Packard of 3,426 votes.

"The evidence shows, and it is admitted by Mr. Kellogg, that Perkins, Democrat, had a majority for senator in the twelfth senatorial district; he beat Weber, Republican, largely, but the returning board gave the latter a certificate of election. Meredith, Democrat, had a majority over Hamlet, Republican, for the senate for the eighteenth senatorial district; the returning board gave Hamlet the certificate. Sandiford, Democrat, beat Blunt, Republican, for the senate in the twenty-second senatorial district; the returning board gave Blunt the certificate.

"In Ouachita Parish Breard and Taylor, Democrats, beat Barrington and Brewster, Republicans, for the house of representatives, as the parish returns show; but the returning board gave the Republicans certificates of election. In East Baton Rouge Parish Dupré, Williams, and Young, Democrats, beat Bird, Holt, and Lane, Republicans, for the house of representatives; the returning board gave the certificates of election to the Republicans. In La Fayette Parish Marshall T. Martin, Democrat, beat Fernest Martin, Republican (these were brothers), for the house of representatives; the Republican received the certificate of election.

"In West Feliciana Parish McGee and Ryland, Democrats, beat Swazie and Early, Republicans, for the house of representatives. The Republicans, however, received certificates of election. In Morehouse Parish Washburn and Hammond, Democrats, beat Shelton and Blair, Republicans, for the house of representatives, but the certificates of election were given to the Republicans. In De Soto Parish Pitts and Means, Democrats, beat Long and Johnson, Republicans; the latter received certificates of election. The returning board refused to count any returns from the parishes of Grant and East Feliciana; the returns were thrown out absolutely. The parish returns show that Lyons and Porter, Democrats, were elected from East Feliciana, and Randolph, Democrat, was elected from Grant Parish.

"The parish returns show that the Democrats were elected in each instance above mentioned, and Mr. Kellogg admits that they received majorities." (See his statement made to the committee on 13th of November, 1877.)

Of the eighty-three persons who were said to be in the joint convention which elected Kellogg, nineteen are positively shown not to have been elected, but were fraudulently given certificates. Seventy-nine were necessary to make a quorum. The "work on the election returns" at Kellogg's house was evidently effective, and bore fruit through the returning board, one and sometimes two of whose members attended these clandestine night meetings.

Mr. Steven, a member of the Nicholls senate, was seized and held by force, and was counted as present against his protest, to enable this Packard senate to go through the farce of a contest, and to seat two outsiders named Baker and Kelso, who were not elected by the people.

The evidence in support of the third conclusion is furnished by the witnesses of both contestants. It is easy to understand that such a body of men so fraudulently assembled could not be kept together by a sense of duty or other legitimate means. Accordingly the State-house, which they seized, and in which they were gathered, was barricaded and surrounded with troops, and the members were kept in their halls day and night. Orders were given by the pretended officers of the legislature, and especially on the day of election, to keep members present by force. Some who were absent in spite of these precautions were fraudulently personated as present, and others were allowed to record their votes the next day. But many of the members were impecunious. "They needed money to meet their necessities, they had to live, and wanted to be helped from time to time as their money gave out." Louis J. Souer, who figures prominently in all these frauds in behalf of Kellogg, and who was a member of the lower house, advanced "out of his own money" about $3,000, much of which he admits was never returned. John A. Walsh and other accommodating witnesses and friends of Kellogg also advanced money. These advances were called loans, made on warrants or vouchers. It is impossible to mistake the meaning of such testimony. What Souer calls loans are spoken of by other witnesses very differently, who say these advances were bribes, but they were to be called loans if any question should arise about their character. The testimony given by the witnesses introduced by Kellogg himself is overwhelmingly convincing that force, fraud, and bribery were all needed to keep this motley crowd of conspirators against the people of Louisiana in their barricaded den of iniquity.

In support of the fourth conclusion the evidence is equally convincing, for after all these frauds to cheat the voters, to change the returns, and to force an assemblage, Kellogg was in danger of losing the prize. Warmoth testifies: "There was a bitter fight for the Senatorship, not so much on my part, although I was spoken of, but between Kellogg and Pinchback." The witness himself "was a dark horse," thinking, may be, neither could be elected, and the honors would fall on him. "My eyes," he adds, "were not altogether blind to that contingency." Even after Kellogg was nominated he thought it was absolutely necessary for him to get all the votes in order to be admitted to the seat.

Thus, both to secure the nomination and the election, the field for bribery and other corrupt practices was enlarged. Kellogg now added threats also. He declared if he was not elected he would disband the concern and turn them all over to the Nicholls government.

Quite a number of witnesses have testified directly and positively that they saw Kellogg pay money to different members to vote for him for Senator.

A large number are shown to have admitted that they received money for voting for Kellogg, and many of these admissions were made under oaths and taken voluntarily and without inducement.

The evidence establishing direct bribery with money of a large number of the members is simply crushing. If a tithe of this evidence is credible there can be no escape from the conclusion that Kellogg secured his election by direct and unblushing bribery. Offices under the Federal administration were also promised to secure the same result, and how faithfully these promises were fulfilled is unmistakably disclosed in the evidence.

The evidence referred to in support of the four first conclusions before announced can leave no doubt in any rational mind of the correctness of the fifth conclusion as to the reasons which urged the sitting member so earnestly to oppose a full investigation on the former hearing of this case. If such investigation had been made, as it was once ordered by the Senate and resolved by the committee, and the evidence now before us had been taken, it would be doing violence to all possible respect for the United States Senate to suppose the sitting member could have been declared entitled "on the merits" to take a seat in this body. It was indispensably necessary to conceal the facts to discover any merit in his title.

In support of the sixth conclusion the evidence is, if possible, still more convincing.

On the 5th day of May last the Senate directed this committee to investigate the charges made by the memorialist. It is significant that this order was adopted by the Senate only after the most earnest and persistent opposition from the sitting member himself.

The passage of this order by the Senate to take testimony dates the beginning of efforts by the sitting member and his assistants to suppress evidence, which your committee believe were never exceeded in energy and varied devices.

The following special dispatches from Washington City appeared in the Times newspaper of New Orleans on the 13th and 16th days of May, respectively:

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1879.

In view of the interest the leading Republicans and the Administration take in the result of the contest for Kellogg's seat, it is certain that any Republican who can be shown to have worked against him at home will stand a slim chance of any recognition from Hayes or the next administration if it be Republican. Kellogg is playing his hand for all it is worth, and don't intend to have any fire in the rear if he can help it.

W. H. R.

WASHINGTON, May 15, 1879.

Everything is not lovely in Republican circles in Louisiana; in fact, quite the reverse. There are said to be some people in the party who are not helping the Hon. William Pitt Kellogg as they ought, and one of them holds a high position in the custom-house.

The party and the President are both rallying to the assistance of the Hon. W. P. Kellogg with some solidity, and the Republican in Louisiana who refuses to actively aid in this contest may make up his mind to go to the rear if Kellogg wins or the next administration is Republican.

The Hon. John Sherman and Attorney-General Devens have signified their willingness to aid Kellogg in this contest all they can, and some of the custom-house rolls are very likely to be revised pretty soon.

W. H. R.

There can be no doubt as to the intent of this notice, and the evidence discloses with striking clearness the effect. It should be remembered in this connection that the frauds which were to be investigated could only, in their nature, be proven by those who were either members or officers of the pretended Packard legislature, and by those who were permitted to have free access to it, and by others who were in Kellogg's confidence at the time the frauds were committed. All others were excluded by bayonets from this barricaded mock legislature, thus conspiring to defraud the people its members pretended to represent. They were plainly notified of the consequences which they must expect, both from this Administration and the next, who would dare reveal what they knew of these frauds, or who failed actively to prevent such revelation.

The rewards were as unstinted as the threats were positive. The examination by this committee began the 5th of June. During this month of June there were thirty-nine of the members of this Packard mob of Kellogg conspirators holding Federal offices, nearly all in the custom-house at New Orleans, which constituted about one-half the number claimed to be present at the time of Kellogg's election. Thirty-nine so employed appear by the testimony before your committee. Other statements have been made to the public increasing the number of said Packard legislators so employed to fifty-six. The object of these appointments is not left by the evidence to conjecture. The evidence is direct, positive, unimpeached, and undisputed that the object was to prevent revelations against Kellogg.

H. T. Brown testified that Morris Marks (revenue collector, and who was one of Kellogg's most active supporters) said to witness in June or July, "I cannot take care of any of my friends now while this fight is going on about Kellogg. I have to appoint a set of G—d d—d curs and hounds to keep them from squealing on Kellogg." Morris Marks was present during the investigation by the subcommittee in New Orleans; was actively at work for Kellogg; was himself a witness in behalf of Kellogg; and did not deny this statement of Mr. Brown.

Similar statements and allusions frequently occur in the evidence, and they are overwhelmingly corroborated by many facts. Witnesses were appointed to offices immediately before they were to testify, and were also appointed promptly after they had testified satisfactorily to Kellogg. Witnesses who were clearly convicted of perjury and false swearing before this committee were appointed to places, plainly as rewards for such perjury and false swearing. Witnesses who were proven to have made admissions that they knew Kellogg was not elected, or that his election was corrupt, and threatened to reveal what they knew if they were not given offices, promptly received the offices and as promptly testified that Kellogg was elected, and by the fairest means possible!

The instances of this use of the public offices to hush witnesses, to procure witnesses, and to reward witnesses are as numerous as they are disgraceful. Your committee do not believe such shameful civil service degradation can be found in the annals of any civilized people. It is pregnant evidence of all the charges of fraud and corruption against the sitting member. It cannot be supposed that such means were employed to maintain a title which was good "on the merits." It cannot be doubted that such means were employed only to maintain a title which was secured by fraud, and which could only be retained by perjury. Your committee are not authorized to say and will not say that the President and certain of his Cabinet were willing parties to this corrupt use of the public offices; but they feel constrained to say that if they had been willing parties they could not have been more accommodating and compliant to the sitting member.

The evidence clearly reveals another very striking and unusual method of using the public offices. Those who held the offices were not only themselves faithful to their chief and his title "on the merits" in their own testimony, but they were active and vigilant to make others so. They ceased not to travel and labor in behalf of the sitting member to the utter neglect of their public duties, and without any cessation of their pay from the public treasury.

Several members and officers of the body which pretended to elect Kellogg admitted, as the evidence shows, voluntarily, that there was no quorum present, that absent members were falsely personated, that the roll as made up was false, and that Kellogg had used bribery and corrupt means to secure his election. The memorialist, knowing the character of all these people who were parties to this enormous fraud, resorted to the natural precaution to have their statements reduced to writing and sworn to before venturing to summon them as witnesses. That such affidavits had been made, and that a number of those who made them had been or would be summoned to Washington as witnesses in behalf of the memorialist, became known to the sitting member's vigilant sentinels in the custom-house. One employé of the custom-house came on to Washington in advance of the witnesses, among other things "to arrange with Kellogg" for certain of the witnesses. A notorious detective also came on in advance and registered in this city under an assumed name. This detective testified that he was sent by an officer in the custom-house to watch the counsel of the memorialist and to aid Kellogg. Your committee do not rely on the character of this witness to establish his credit. His very service for Kellogg was discrediting. Like most of the witnesses in this case, he is only entitled to credit as his statements are corroborated, and many of his statements are most strikingly corroborated, and much that he said is shown by others to be true. The officer in the custom-house who is charged to have employed this detective was known to be very influential with the witnesses. He took the same train with the witnesses on their departure from New Orleans for this city. He traveled with them the entire distance; he exhorted the witnesses on the way to stand by their party; he telegraphed notice to Kellogg of the time they would arrive in Washington, and he remained with them, ate with them, and slept with them until the examination here closed. It is shown, too, that from the time this investigation was ordered by the Senate until its close in this city an active telegraphic correspondence was going on between the sitting member and his assistants here and the collector of customs himself in New Orleans. The telegrams are in cipher, and are herewith reported to the Senate. They most clearly relate to the witnesses, and are pregnant with all the indicia of fraud, collusion, and corruption.

The witnesses arrived in Washington about 10 o'clock p. m. on the 4th of June, and their examination by this committee was to commence the next morning. Whatever arrangements, therefore, were necessary to be made with or ratified by the sitting member to induce them to deny the affidavits they had made in New Orleans had to be completed during that night and before the meeting of this committee the ensuing morning. Accordingly the employés of the custom-house and the detective who came in advance from New Orleans and several others already in Washington in the Government's employ and Kellogg's service met the witnesses at the depot on their arrival. The detective swears that five of the witnesses were conducted by him, under previous arrangement, to Kellogg's office after midnight. He says the witnesses were afraid of prosecution if they denied their sworn statements made in New Orleans, and that to relieve this fear some law was read to them to the effect that they could not be indicted for such denial. Being satisfied on this point, the witnesses were willing to contract, and the detective says did receive and accept from Kellogg money and promises of offices during his Senatorial term, and in consideration thereof did pledge themselves to disappoint the memorialist, who had called them as witnesses on the faith of their sworn statements, and to testify in all respects in favor of the sitting member. Thomas Murray did not attend this night conclave. He only of the witnesses was faithful to his statement made in New Orleans. He refused to accept the bribes offered him to do so. He and the detective both testified that such bribes were repeatedly urged upon him in increasing amounts. Refusing persistently to accept all offers to testify falsely, he was then offered money not to testify at all. He was urged to disobey the summons of this committee and escape into Canada, where he was to be well maintained until the investigation was closed, and he should receive a telegram in the words, "The Union forever," by which he was to understand he could safely return. All these offers he refused, and did appear and testify, under the frowns of his comrades, to the truth of his previous statements.

Another witness, Milton Jones, accepted the bribe but hesitated to commit the perjury. In his stress he begged the counsel of the memorialist not to require him to testify, because he would be compelled to swear falsely under the influence of "big money." Because of this earnest appeal he was not sworn by the memorialist. This witness was asked by Kellogg, through his faithful detective, to return the money, the price of the perjury he had thus avoided committing, but he refused to return it. Subsequently he was called by the sitting member before the subcommittee in New Orleans and made to execute his criminal bargain. Other devices were employed by the sitting member to suppress truth and establish falsehood. Those who refused to swear falsely were assailed as untrue to their party and social ostracism itself was visited upon them. Schemes were contrived to entrap them into inconsistent admissions. Witnesses who admitted they thought it legitimate to make and to swear to false statements were called to impeach the credibility of those who refused to imitate their example. Detectives were actively engaged under friendly professions in efforts to involve the memorialist in like briberies and frauds with those so abundantly proven upon the sitting member, all of which your committee cheerfully report not only failed but recoiled heavily on the sitting member. Witnesses were diligently trained to believe that the ejection of Kellogg from the Senate would be the defeat of the Republican party in the nation and in Louisiana; that such defeat would render it impossible for any Republican to live in the State, and that perjury was a virtue when committed for the success of the Republican party. All these facts and very many more of like kind will be found in the testimony herewith reported to the Senate.

That such is the testimony was not denied before your committee either by the sitting member or his able counsel. Indeed, it could not be denied without denying the plain language of very many witnesses. But it was earnestly insisted before your committee by both the sitting member and his counsel that this testimony would not justify the conclusion that the sitting member was not entitled to the seat in the Senate for two reasons, and first because they alleged the witnesses ought not to be believed.

Two grounds are urged for disbelieving the witnesses: (1) because they were contradicted, and (2) because they were impeached as not entitled to credit on account of bad character.

The contradictions were almost exclusively by witnesses who were parties to the crimes proven. To illustrate: If a witness testified positively that he saw money paid to a member for his vote, the implicated member was called to contradict this by testifying he did not receive money for his vote. Under this rule few criminals would be found guilty. It frequently happened, too, that the implicated member had previously and frequently admitted, and often under oath, that he did receive money for his vote. So he contradicted himself as well as the witnesses. It will be seen from the evidence, too, that these contradicting witnesses had often been provided with offices or other consideration after they made the admissions they were called to contradict, and others were promptly appointed to offices in the ever-accommodating custom-house after they had faithfully made the contradictions.

Your committee attach little if any weight to such contradictions. In our view they are often strongly confirmatory of the witnesses-in-chief.

Besides many of the material frauds proven are not disputed at all, and some are even admitted, because they were of a character which did not admit of contradiction. This is especially true of the frauds resorted to to prevent a fair election by the people; to change the result as returned by the commissioners of election, and the force and frauds employed to assemble and keep together the pretended Packard legislature.

Let us then proceed to consider the allegation that the testimony should not be believed because the witnesses were impeached on account of general bad character.

Some few of the witnesses were not so impeached at all, and why they were not impeached your committee do not understand, since the impeaching resources of the sitting member seemed to be exhaustless. As it is, however, the testimony which is unimpeached and uncontradicted is ample not only to justify but to require the adoption of the resolution herewith submitted. But your committee do not find it necessary to rest their conclusions solely on this unimpeached and uncontradicted evidence.

We admit that a great number of the witnesses called on both sides were of very bad character, not only for truth, but for every other virtue, and if their credibility depended solely upon character they ought not to be believed. But the rules of law furnish safe guides in weighing this evidence.

The accomplice of a criminal is necessarily of bad character, for he is a criminal himself. If he is not to be believed because he is an accomplice, and therefore of bad character, then an accomplice in no case ought to be allowed to testify. But in spite of bad character they are often the only accessible witnesses, and their evidence is often most satisfactory. Were it otherwise, those criminals would often be safest whose crimes were greatest.

In the case before us nearly all the witnesses examined were the accomplices of Kellogg in the crimes and frauds which resulted in his pretended election to the Senate. They were all conspirators against the people of Louisiana. The very fact that they were associates and accomplices in this conspiracy furnished the most conclusive proof of bad character. No other proof was needed to establish such bad character. The conspirators were surrounded with troops by order of their chief, Kellogg himself, by his power as governor, and the Army was employed to protect them day and night from intrusion by people worthy of credit by reason of good character. Being faithless in their very assembling to all good people, the chief chance of redress for good people was in the natural hope they would become faithless to each other, and reveal the frauds, briberies, and corruptions which cemented them for evil. Their revelations appear in the evidence, and your committee do not doubt would far more abundantly appear if the Federal Administration would withdraw the patronage which has purchased the silence and perjury of so many of the gang.

All the facts and circumstances of corroboration required by the rules of evidence to accompany the testimony of accomplices abundantly and most remarkably sustain the witnesses who testified to the frauds, briberies, and corrupt practices upon which we have based our conclusions, and the impeaching witnesses are themselves most strikingly discredited by such facts and circumstances. Indeed, your committee do not hesitate to affirm that much of the evidence must be believed, because the corroborations which accompany and surround it make it impossible that it can be false.

The sitting member insisted upon conducting much of the examination in his own behalf, and this privilege was accorded him. In the style of his questions and the conduct of his cause he often exhibited most striking corroboration of the witnesses who were testifying of his guilt. The corroborations brought out by himself not only occurred in his cross-examinations of the witnesses called by the memorialist, but also in his examinations of witnesses called by himself to impeach or contradict the witnesses of the memorialist.

Your committee are unable to see how an impartial legal mind can read the evidence taken and doubt the guilt of the sitting member upon every charge which has been made against him, notwithstanding so many of the witnesses must be admitted to be disreputable.

But the sitting member, through his very able counsel, also insisted, with great earnestness and skill before your committee, that the Senate at a former session having, "after and upon evidence going to the merits of the case," declared that Kellogg was "upon the merits of the case entitled to the seat," this decision is final and conclusive, and cannot now be re-examined and reversed. This was the first and chief position on which the title of the sitting member was made to rest. Your committee have fully considered the question thus presented, and cannot doubt the correctness of the conclusions at which they have arrived.

Stated in the light of the facts now known and herewith reported to the Senate, this position would read thus: That though the sitting member was not, in fact, chosen by the legislature of Louisiana; and though the body of men alleged to have elected him was assembled through fraud, was held together by force, and was controlled by bribery and corruption, and all this was accomplished by a conspiracy to defraud the State and people of Louisiana, of which conspiracy the sitting member was himself the chief, yet, the Senate having decided in ignorance and by the suppression of these facts that the sitting member was entitled on the merits to the seat, the Senate is compelled to allow him to retain the seat after full knowledge that every fact which was assumed to exist when he was admitted is and was false and untrue. The reply to such a position is sufficiently furnished in the statement of the position itself. But your committee will not rest the argument here, and will consider it in the light of precedent and law. Counsel for the sitting member says:

"If, therefore, this committee and the Senate shall set aside this judgment on the merits, it will present to the country and the world a spectacle not seen before in the century of our national existence just closed."

We might justly reply to this that this case, in the facts now proven, already presents to the country and the world a spectacle not before seen in this century or any previous century of this or any other nation. We trust such a spectacle will never again be presented, and that it may not be it ought to be now condemned by all men and especially by this Senate. If it shall be understood that seats once procured in this body by any means however false and fraudulent which bad men may employ cannot be taken away, this Senate may soon be largely composed of members not chosen by the legislatures of the States. Successful frauds will displace the positive requisition of the Constitution in the elections of Senators. A case without precedent cannot be decided by precedent. Fraud has certainly become a powerful agent in our politics, but we are not willing to admit it has yet become the supreme law above review and beyond remedy.

But while no case like this was ever before presented for decision, yet principles have been announced in other cases which will furnish some guide to a proper determination of this question.

In the case of Bright and Fitch, in the Thirty-fifth Congress, the rehearing asked was refused because "all the facts and questions of law involved were as fully known and presented to the Senate on the former hearing as they were then presented in the memorial of the legislature asking a rehearing." It was held that in such a case the judgment first rendered by the Senate "was final, and precluded further inquiry into the subject."

In the Butler and Corbin case, in the Forty-fifth Congress, the report of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections correctly stated that no allegation was made "that testimony was before excluded which ought to have been admitted, or that testimony was admitted which ought to have been excluded; no request by either party to produce testimony had been denied, and no pretense that testimony then offered and excluded can now be produced. The jurisdiction is the same; the parties are the same; the subject-matter of contest is the same; the facts are the same, and the questions of law are the same." The report further said: "If, on the former hearing, Mr. Corbin had been denied the privilege of introducing material facts which he offered to produce; if he presented material facts now which were then unknown; if all the facts and questions of law now known and presented were not then as fully known and presented, the undersigned will not undertake to say his petition for a rehearing ought not, in justice and right, to be gravely heard and considered on the merits." The Senate adoped these views, though it is a significant fact that a large and intelligent minority of the Senate voted to unseat Mr. Butler and to admit Mr. Corbin, when not a single new fact or question of law had been presented or offered.

Your committee freely admit that a decision rendered on the merits ought not to be afterwards reviewed and reversed on light or even doubtful grounds. In the courts the familiar rule is that new evidence to authorize a reversal "ought to be material and such as would probably produce a different result." In this case your committee are willing to apply a much stronger test, though there is no reason why a stronger should be required. Let us adopt and apply the rule so strongly and forcibly expounded by a distinguished member of this Senate in the following language:

"The Senate would do manifest injustice were it hastily and without the most plain and most manifest reason to reverse a decision that had been made seating a Senator on this floor. The case must be extremely strong that would justify such a proceeding. All that I am free to admit, but to say that the technical rule of res adjudicata that applies to courts of justice applies in this chamber on a question of this kind is to confound all distinctions and to disregard all the laws of this body." (Congressional Record of May 7, page 24.)

Let us now apply this rigid rule to the present case:

1. On the former hearing not a single witness was examined. Some admissions were made by the parties, and some reports of investigations by Congressional committees not on the issues involved in this contest "were agreed to be considered in evidence as far as they were pertinent." This was done only to narrow the field of investigation.

On this hearing nearly one hundred and fifty witnesses have been examined, making over 1,200 printed pages of testimony of the most material and controlling character.

2. On the former hearing the memorialist begged and pleaded for the privilege of having witnesses called and examined on five points not covered by the admissions and reports above referred to, and by which witnesses he alleged he could prove, among other things, the direct personal complicity of the sitting member in glaring frauds in the pretended legislature which elected him. All these appeals were refused by the majority of the committee, although an investigation had been previously ordered by the Senate and resolved upon by the committee, and the investigation was suddenly closed against the protest of the memorialist and a minority of the committee.

On the present hearing the witnesses have been examined, and the complicity of the sitting member in the frauds alleged has been most convincingly established.

3. On the former hearing there was no evidence and no opportunity to produce evidence showing conspiracies, briberies, and other corruptions by the sitting member to procure a fraudulent legislature, and to control the members thereof in his own election to the Senate.

On the present hearing such conspiracies, briberies, and corruptions of the most startling, unblushing, and unparalleled character have been positively testified to by numerous witnesses, and these briberies and corruptions have been shown to extend to the witnesses in the case in the very face of the Senate.

Your committee could multiply the features of contrast between the former and the present hearing in this case, but we forbear. Under the most technical rule of res adjudicata there is not a court in civilized Christendom which would hesitate to review and reverse a judgment so utterly unauthorized and unjust; and surely it cannot be contended that the Senate can have less power than a court to annul such a decision.

Conceding then, for the argument, that the Senate in passing upon contests for seats in this body acts as a court, and that the technical rule of res adjudicata applies to decisions rendered in such cases, do courts not re-examine, review, and reverse their decisions? Are not appeals, writs of error, motions for new trials, and bills of review familiar to us all? The Senate, in considering such cases in the first instance, is not bound by the forms of proceedings in the courts. We have no declarations, no complaints, no bills in chancery, nor pleas, demurrers, answers, and joinders of issue in the Senate. If the Senate proceeds to original judgment without the pleading known to the courts, may not the Senate also proceed to review, re-examine, and reverse such judgments when good cause is shown, without resorting to the processes which in such cases are known to the courts? If the Senate is a court, then if the facts in a given case are such as would require the vacation of a judgment if rendered by a court, surely the Senate would also be authorized to vacate such judgment. The exclusion by the court of material testimony on the first hearing, the discovery of new and material evidence since the hearing, the existence of frauds, forgeries, briberies, and perjuries in procuring the first judgment are all well-known grounds on either one of which courts, by some of the methods of proceeding, will review and reverse such judgments. All these grounds are shown by the evidence and the records of this Senate to exist in extraordinary clearness, force, and repeated abundance in the case we are now considering. Is the Senate, by being likened to a court, to be bound by decisions which a court would rigorously vacate and annul?

But the attempt to apply to the Senate the technical rule of res adjudicata as it obtains in the courts is a palpable sophistry and not an argument. In the correct and forcible language of Senator Thurman, before quoted, "it confounds all distinctions and disregards all the rules of this body."

In cases where the contestants claim to represent the same State government, and the issue between them is one of informality or irregularity, or non-compliance with statutory provisions, there would be some show of reason for the application of this doctrine. In such cases there ought to be an end of litigation in the Senate as well as in the courts. A wise policy would certainly require in such cases the principle if not the rule of res adjudicata. It is to such cases the authorities cited by the eminent counsel for the sitting member were intended to apply.

But the questions involved in the present case rise immeasurably above such issues. They are not questions of regularity, but of authority. They are not questions of discretion, but of duty. They exist more between the State of Louisiana and this Senate than between the contestants. In their nature these questions are not merely judicial, but political in the highest sense.

The Constitution says:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof."

Can a man sit as a member of this Senate who was not chosen by the legislature of his State? But suppose, in ignorance of the fact that he was not so chosen, the Senate is induced to declare him entitled to the seat "on the merits," after investigation; does such erroneous decision supplant the Constitution and give him a title after the mistake becomes known?

Let us suppose an impossible case: Suppose a majority of this Senate should for any purpose, partisan or otherwise, seat a man in this body who they knew was not chosen by the legislature of his State, would any future Senate be compelled to continue such person in the seat? Would not such continuance be as criminal as the original admission? Will any man pretend that a plain constitutional provision can be superseded by a mistaken decision of this Senate? If the sitting member was not chosen by the legislature of Louisiana, every hour he sits on this floor after that fact is known is a violation of the Constitution. It is a question of obedience to the Constitution. Can any person estop this Senate, can the Senate estop itself, from obeying the Constitution? Can the Senate estop itself from inquiring toties quoties whether he was chosen by the legislature? Can it be so estopped by its own erroneous decision on a former hearing?

In cases like the one now before us, your committee do not hesitate to adopt the language employed by those eminent constitutional lawyers, Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, and Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, in the Fitch and Bright case in 1859. They said:

"The power of the Senate to judge of the election and qualification of its own members is unlimited and abiding. It is not exhausted in any particular case by once adjudicating the same, as the power of re-examination and correction of error and mistake, incident to all judicial tribunals and proceedings, remains with the Senate in this respect, as well to do justice to itself as to the States represented or to the persons claiming or holding seats. Such an abiding power must exist to purge the body from intruders, otherwise any one might retain his seat who had once wrongly procured a decision of the Senate in his favor by fraud or falsehood, or even by papers forged or fabricated."

In the light of the evidence now before the Senate the sitting member was admitted by a wrongly procured decision of the Senate in his favor by means quite as criminal as those stated in the last paragraph quoted, since the means employed by him to secure his pretended election included conspiracies, briberies, and perjuries often repeated, and the knowledge of which was vigorously suppressed on the former hearing. He was not chosen by the legislature of Louisiana. He was chosen by a body of men who conspired with him to defeat the will of the State, and who excluded by force the members elected by the people in order that the conspirators might be enabled to accomplish their work.

The primary authority to determine what is the legislature of a State is and must be the State herself. When the State determines that question for herself it is determined for all the world. In case there are two governments, or two bodies each claiming to be the true government or the true legislature of the State, and the State has not determined the controversy, the duty may devolve upon others, and in this case upon this Senate to adjudge that question pro hac vice.

In January, 1877, a portion of the members elected by the people united with others not elected and seized the State house by co-operation with the sitting member, who was then acting as governor, were barricaded in the building, which was surrounded with troops, and refused to permit other elected members to be admitted into the building. The barricaded persons called themselves the legislature, and the excluded members met in St. Patrick's Hall and called themselves the legislature. This was the condition of things when the sitting member presented his credentials to this Senate and asked to be admitted to his seat on this floor. He was not admitted, but his credentials were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Before the committee took any action whatever the issue thus raised between these two rival bodies was settled by the State. It was decided that the body which assembled and organized in St. Patrick's Hall was the true legislature of the State. This decision was accepted by all the people of Louisiana and by all the departments of her government, by the President and House of Representatives, and by the circuit and district courts of the United States, and finally by all the persons who composed the body which seized the State-house. The latter, which had been known as the Packard legislature, disbanded, leaving not a resolution, or act, or other thing which has ever been recognized as authoritative, or which has been claimed to be valid, save only the pretended election of the sitting member to this Senate; and this single act has been recognized only by this Senate. The former body, which had been known as the Nicholls legislature, performed all the functions of a legislature from the beginning, passed laws which are obeyed by all the people and enforced by all the courts. All the persons who had been elected left the pretended Packard legislature and took their seats in the Nicholls legislature, and those who had not been elected admitted they were not elected, without even a contest, and went home or into the custom-house or some other Federal office.

The regular legislature thus organized, composed of all the members elected by the people, chose the memorialist to the seat he is now claiming. The election was free, regular, legal, and without taint of corruption of any kind, and his credentials are in due form. Of a legislature which was composed, when full, senate and house, of one hundred and fifty-six members, the memorialist received over 140 votes.

Since the former hearing in this case, the supreme court of Louisiana has also decided that the officers of the Packard government had, in January, 1877, no official status, and that no acts performed by them at that time, though purporting to be performed virtute officii, could have the force and effect of official acts.—(State ex rel. Lipo vs. Peck, 30 Annual Reports, 280.)

And in addition to all this, the evidence now taken shows that the Packard legislature, which pretended to elect the sitting member, was, in fact as well as in law, not a legislature, but was a body of men assembled by fraud, held together by force and controlled by bribery; with the aid and in the interest of the sitting member.

Thus, the facts, the law, the integrity of this Senate, and the voice of a too long defrauded State of this Union unite in demanding the passage of the following resolutions which your committee now submit for adoption by the Senate, to wit:

1. Resolved, That according to the evidence now known to the Senate, William Pitt Kellogg was not chosen by the legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and is not entitled to sit in the same.

2. Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford was chosen by the legislature of Louisiana to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted to the same on taking the oath prescribed by law.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee of Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, claiming the seat now occupied by William Pitt Kellogg, submit the following as their views:

On the 30th day of November, 1877, the Senate passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto on taking the proper oath.

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States."

The party majority in the Senate has changed since Mr. Kellogg took the oath of office in pursuance of the above resolution. Nothing else has changed. The facts which the Senate considered and determined were in existence then as now. It is sought, by mere superiority of numbers, for the first time to thrust a Senator from the seat which he holds by virtue of the express and deliberate final judgment of the Senate.

The act which is demanded of this party majority would be, in our judgment, a great public crime. It will be, if consummated, one of the great political crimes in American history, to be classed with the rebellion, with the attempt to take possession by fraud of the State government in Maine, and with the overthrow of State governments in the South, of which it is the fitting sequence. Political parties have too often been led by partisan zeal into measures which a sober judgment might disapprove, but they have ever respected the constitution of the Senate.

The men whose professions of returning loyalty to the Constitution have been trusted by the generous confidence of the American people are now to give evidence of the sincerity of their vows. The people will thoroughly understand this matter, and will not be likely to be deceived again.

We do not think proper to enter here upon a discussion of the evidence by which the claimant of Mr. Kellogg's seat seeks to establish charges affecting the integrity of that Senator. Such evidence can be found in abundance in the slums of great cities. It is not fit to be trusted in cases affecting the smallest amount of property, much less the honor of an eminent citizen, or the title to an object of so much desire as a seat in the Senate. This evidence is not only unworthy of respect or credit, but it is in many instances wholly irreconcilable with undisputed facts, and Mr. Kellogg has met and overthrown it at every point.

GEORGE F. HOAR.
ANGUS CAMERON.
JOHN A. LOGAN.

WEDNESDAY, March 31, 1880.

On motion by Mr. Logan,

Ordered, That the evidence taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the investigation of the allegations set forth in the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, claiming to be Senator from the State of Louisiana, be recommitted to said committee for the purpose of revising and correcting said evidence.

On motion by Mr. Logan,

Ordered, That the report of the evidence already printed be withdrawn from further distribution.

FRIDAY, May 7, 1880.

The President pro tempore announced that the morning hour had expired, and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its adjournment yesterday, viz, the resolutions reported by Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, March 22, 1880, declaring that William P. Kellogg was not elected, and that Henry M.

* Printed with Report No. 388, Senate Reports, 2d sess. 46th Cong., vol. 4.

Spofford was elected, a Senator of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term beginning March 4, 1877; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the said resolutions.

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Hoar to amend the resolutions as follows, viz: Strike out all after the word "resolved" where it first appears, and insert the following:

"That in the judgment of the Senate the matters reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the present session respecting the right to the seat in this body now held by William Pitt Kellogg and claimed by Henry M. Spofford are not sufficient to justify the reopening of the decision of the Senate, pronounced in its resolution adopted on the 30th day of November, A. D. 1877, that said Kellogg was, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1877, and that said Spofford was not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States,"

On motion by Mr. Conkling (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned.

CREDENTIALS OF THOMAS C. MANNING.

TUESDAY, December 7, 1880.

Mr. Jonas presented the credentials of Thomas Courtland Manning, appointed a Senator by the governor of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Henry M. Spofford, who claimed to be elected Senator from that State; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

COMPENSATION TO MR. SPOFFORD'S REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 22, 1881.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:
"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the 'miscellaneous items' of the contingent fund of the Senate, to the legal representatives of the estate of the late Henry M. Spofford, contestant of a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana, a sum equal to the compensation, without mileage, of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1877, to the 20th day of August, 1880, inclusive."
The Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.
Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.
The said resolution was read the third times, by unanimous consent.
Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[First session of the Forty-seventh Congress.]

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. KELLOGG'S EXPENSES.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1882.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times, by unanimous consent:
"Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $9,550 to William Pitt Kellogg, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat."

MONDAY, March 20, 1882.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the resolution reported by him from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 17th instant, to pay W. P. Kellogg the expenses incurred by him in defending his title to a seat in the Senate; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.
Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.
The said resolution was read the third time.
Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

COMPENSATION OF MR. MANNING.

WEDNESDAY, July 19, 1882.

Mr. Vance, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times, by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. Thomas C. Manning, who was appointed United States Senator from Louisiana by the governor thereof to fill the vacancy caused by the death of H. M. Spofford, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation of all expenses incurred in endeavoring to obtain the seat to which his credentials accredited him."

MONDAY, August 7, 1882.

On motion by Mr. Kellogg, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the resolution reported by Mr. Vance July 19, 1882, to pay to Thomas C. Manning, appointed a Senator from the State of Louisiana to fill the vacancy caused by the death of H. M. Spofford, the sum of $1,000; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1873.]

LEWIS V. BOGY,

Senator from Missouri from March 4, 1873, till his death, September 20, 1877.

March 4, 1873, Mr. Bogy took his seat, having been elected for the term of six years from that date. March 17, the Vice-President laid before the Senate a memorial of members of the legislature, accompanied by a report of a select committee of the legislature appointed to investigate charges of bribery and corruption in the Senatorial election, praying for an investigation by the Senate of said charges. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. March 25, the committee reported that the memorial set forth that the investigation by the committee of the legislature was imperfect, and that if it had been full and fair, evidence would have been produced showing that there was corruption in Mr. Bogy's election; that the memorial did not state the character of the new evidence that could be produced, and that the Senate would not be justified in instituting an examination; that such a proceeding was of a grave character and should not be set on foot without such a statement of the evidence that could probably be produced as would appear to make it the duty of the Senate to proceed to an investigation. The committee reported a resolution that it be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial; which was agreed to.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from the Senate Journal, 3d sess. 42d Cong. (special session, March, 1873), and the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 3d sess. 42d Cong. (No. 1, special session, March, 1873).

There were no debates.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1873.

Mr. Schurz presented the credentials of Lewis V. Bogy, elected a Senator in Congress by the legislature of the State of Missouri for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1873; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1873.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a resolution of the legislature of Missouri exonerating Hon. Lewis V. Bogy, Senator-elect from that State, from any suspicion of having used corrupt means to secure his election to the United States Senate.

Ordered, That it lie on the table and be printed.

TUESDAY, March 4, 1873.

The credentials of Lewis V. Bogy having been heretofore presented to the Senate, the oaths prescribed by law were administered to him by the Vice-President and he took his seat in the Senate.

MONDAY, March 17, 1873.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the memorial of members of the legislature of the State of Missouri, accompanied by a report of a select committee of said legislature appointed to investigate charges of bribery and corruption in the recent Senatorial election in that State, and the views of a minority of the committee therewith, praying that certain charges of bribery and corruption against Lewis V. Bogy, recently elected a Senator from the State of Missouri, may be promptly and fully investigated by the Senate.

Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, March 25, 1873.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of members of the legislature of the State of Missouri, praying that an investigation be made by the Senate of certain charges of bribery and corruption against Lewis V. Bogy in his recent election as Senator from that State, submitted a report (No. 1) accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of members of the legislature of the State of Missouri, together with the evidence accompanying the same, touching the allegations of bribery and corruption in the election of Lewis V. Bogy to the Senate of the United States."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution; and the resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Anthony, Mitchell, Bayard, and Hamilton of Maryland.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 25, 1873.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of thirty-seven members of the legislature of Missouri in regard to the election of Lewis V. Bogy to the Senate of the United States from that State, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The memorial sets forth that the recent examination by a committee appointed by the house of representatives of the legislature of Missouri, touching the currupt use of money in the election of Mr. Bogy, was imperfect; that it was not full and fair, and in the opinion of the memorialists, if the investigation had been conducted with more vigor and with a purpose of revealing the real facts of the case, other and more important evidence would have been produced showing that there was corruption in Mr. Bogy's election.

The memorial, however, does not state what additional facts can be proven, nor indicate with any certainty the character of the new evidence that may be produced.

The committee understand that the only duty which they have upon this reference is to report to the Senate whether the memorial presents such facts as would justify the Senate in instituting an examination in regard to the election of Mr. Bogy, and are of the opinion that it does not. Such a proceeding is of a grave character, and should not be set on foot without such a statement of the evidence that could probably be produced as would appear to make it the duty of the Senate to proceed to an investigation.

The evidence taken by the committee of the legislature of Missouri also accompanies the memorial, and has been examined by the committee. It is not the province of the committee upon this reference to inquire whether the judgment pronounced by the house of representatives of the Missouri legislature upon this evidence was correct; but they express the opinion that the evidence is not of a character to require of the Senate an investigation.

The committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial and the evidence touching the election of Lewis V. Bogy to the Senate of the United States.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1873; and first sessions of the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses.]

FRANCIS W. SYKES vs. GEORGE E. SPENCER; AND GEORGE E. SPENCER, of Alabama.

December 13, 1872, the credentials of Mr. Spencer, elected for the term beginning March 4, 1873, were presented, and February 28, 1873, a memorial of Mr. Sykes claiming to have been elected for the same term was presented. Mr. Spencer was admitted, after debate, March 7. December 8, the memorial of Mr. Sykes was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. April 20, 1874, the committee reported that at the time of the elections there were in Alabama two bodies, each claiming to be the legislature, one known as the court-house legislature, which had elected Mr. Spencer, December 3, 1872, the other known as the State-house legislature, which had chosen Mr. Sykes, December 10, 1872; that at the time of the election of Mr. Spencer there were eight or nine members of the State-house legislature having regular certificates of election, but "who are conceded not to have been elected"; that persons claiming the seats of these eight or nine members, but having no certificates of election, were in the court-house legislature; that the question to be decided was whether that legislature composed of a quorum of the persons actually elected should be regarded as the legislature of the State, or whether that legislature the quorum of which depended upon members not actually elected, but having regular certificates of election, should be regarded as the legal legislature; that the State-house legislature was the legislature in form, and the court-house legislature the legislature in fact; that it would not be competent for the Senate to inquire as to the right of individual members to sit in a legislature that is conceded to have a quorum in both houses of legally elected members; but that the Senate must in this case inquire into the rights to hold seats of the eight or nine members whose rights to seats were disputed, in order to determine which of the two bodies was the legal legislature; and that in such inquiry the Senate should not look merely to the evidence of the fact, but go back to the fact itself and determine who of those claiming seats were in fact elected; that the persons claiming to be the legislature who voted for Mr. Spencer constituted a quorum of the members actually elected. The committee asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. There was a minority report. May 28, the Senate resolved that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the subject. A favorable report was made by the committee on a resolution to allow Mr. Sykes compensation and mileage, but no further action was taken by the Senate.

December 16, 1875, Mr. Spencer submitted a resolution that the committee be instructed to inquire whether in the election of Mr. Spencer corrupt means were used to secure his election. A report of a joint committee of the Alabama legislature on the election, and a memorial of the legislature that the seat held by Mr. Spencer be declared vacant, were also referred to the committee. May 20, 1876, the committee reported that the question whether Mr. Spencer was elected by the lawful legislature, raised in the memorial referred to, must be treated as res adjudicata; that upon the question whether Mr. Spencer or his friends had been guilty of bribery or corruption, the committee had made diligent inquiry, and had found that the charges were not proven; that no witness testified that Mr. Spencer or his friends had given or offered to give money or anything of value in consideration of votes; that only hearsay evidence to this effect was offered, which had been rejected by the committee. The committee reported the testimony taken and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. No further action was taken by the Senate. March 3, 1885, the Senate resolved that there be paid to Mr. Spencer the amount actually and necessarily expended by him in maintaining his title to his seat.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 3d sess. 42d Cong., and 1st sess. 43d and 44th Congs., and the reports of the committee, references to which are given in foot-notes.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

FRIDAY, December 13, 1872.

Mr. Morton presented the credentials of George E. Spencer, elected a Senator by the legislature of Alabama for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1873; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1873.

Mr. Goldthwaite presented a memorial* of Francis W. Sykes, claiming a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Alabama for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1873.

Ordered, That it lie on the table and be printed.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1873.]

THURSDAY, March 6, 1873.

Mr. George E. Spencer, whose credentials had been heretofore presented to the Senate

*Found in Senate Miscellaneous, 3d sess. 42d Cong., No. 94.

as a Senator from the State of Alabama, advanced to the Vice-President's chair to take the oath of office,

When

Mr. Bayard rose and objected to the oaths being administered to Mr. Spencer; and,

On the question, Shall the oaths be administered to Mr. Spencer?

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Bayard that the further consideration thereof be postponed to to-morrow,

After further debate,

On motion by Mr. Hamlin, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 7, 1873.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the question of administering the oaths of office to George E. Spencer as a Senator from the State of Alabama; and

The question being on the motion submitted by Mr. Bayard that the further consideration thereof be postponed to to-morrow,

After debate,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 24, nays 32.

After further debate,

On motion by Mr. Bayard to refer the credentials of Mr. Spencer, and the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming the seat in question, to a select committee of five Senators, it was determined in the negative—yeas, 20, nays 38.

On motion of Mr. Bayard, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Casserly, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Fenton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Ames, Boreman, Brownlow, Buckingham, Caldwell, Cameron, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright.

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Thurman that the further consideration of the question be postponed until the committees of the Senate are organized, it was determined in the negative.

After further debate,

On the question, Shall the oaths of office be administered to Mr. Spencer? it was determined in the affirmative.

Whereupon

Mr. Spencer advanced to the chair, and the oaths of office having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[The debate is found on pages 20–29 of the Congressional Record, vol. i.]

[First session of the Forty-third Congress.]

MONDAY, December 8, 1873.

Mr. Gordon submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming to be a Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, with accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with power to send for persons and papers."

MONDAY, April 20, 1874.

Mr. Carpenter, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Alabama, submitted a report (No. 291), with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

Mr. Saulsbury asked and obtained leave to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing memorial; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the report of the committee.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Carpenter, Logan, Alcorn, Anthony, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Hamilton of Maryland, and Saulsbury.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

APRIL 20, 1874.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Carpenter submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming to be Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, together with accompanying documents, respectfully submit the following report:

Mr. Sykes claims the seat now held by Hon. George E. Spencer as Senator from the State of Alabama; and his claim is based upon the assertion that the body claiming to be the legislature of the State of Alabama which elected the said Spencer was not the rightful legislature of that State, but that another body of men was such legislature; and that the latter body, on the 10th day of December, A. D. 1872, duly elected the said Sykes to be the Senator of the United States for that State for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1873.

It is a fact that for some time after the day fixed by law for the organization of the legislature of that State, in 1872, there were two bodies, each claiming to be the legislature of that State—one known as the State-house legislature, which pretended to elect Mr. Sykes, and the other known as the court-house legislature, which pretended to elect Mr. Spencer; and the question is, which of these two bodies ought to be considered the rightful legislature at that time? On the 3d day of December, 1872, the court-house legislature, so called, pretended to elect Mr. Spencer. The governor of the State certified that Mr. Spencer had been duly elected on that day by the legislature of the State; and the Senate, upon that certificate, seated Mr. Spencer as a Senator for the term in question. The first question is, therefore, whether the body of men which pretended to elect Mr. Spencer can properly be regarded as the legislature of the State at the time of such pretended election. If so, Mr. Spencer's election was valid, and, of course, if that be so, Mr. Sykes can have no right to the same seat during the same term.

The general election in that State was held on the 5th day of November, 1872. The time fixed for the meeting of the legislature thereafter was on the 18th of November, 1872. The constitution of the State provides, section 6, Article IV: "The house of representatives, when assembled, shall choose a speaker and its other officers, and the senate shall choose a president, in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, and its other officers; each house shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law. The president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives shall remain in office until their successors are elected and qualified."

By Article VIII of the constitution of Alabama, the house of representatives is declared to consist of one hundred members, apportioned among, and elected from, the counties of the State as directed in said article. The senate consists of thirty-three members, elected by the voters from the senatorial districts, as directed in said article, and these two bodies constitute the general assembly of the State, and in them, by section 1, Article I of the constitution, is vested the legislative power of the State.

By section 38 of the revised code of Alabama, which was re-enacted and continued in force by an act approved July 29, 1868, the general assembly is required to convene in the city of Montgomery.

It is provided by the act to regulate elections in Alabama as follows:

"SEC. 33. Be it further enacted, That one of the inspectors must number each ballot with the same number as the name of the voter on the poll-list, and the ballot must then, without being opened or examined, be deposited in the proper ballot-box.

"SEC. 34. Be it further enacted, That there shall be no challenging of electors appearing to vote at any election hereafter held in this State, and any registered voter appearing to vote at any election in this State shall be allowed to do so without question, challenge, or objection by any person; and any person who questions, challenges, or objects, or who unlawfully hinders or delays any person offering to vote, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined five hundred dollars, and, on failure to pay the same, shall be imprisoned in the county jail for six months.

"SEC. 35. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the inspectors of all elections in the election precincts, immediately on the closing of the polls, to count out the votes that have been polled, and, after so doing, to promptly certify the poll-list, seal up the boxes containing the ballots and poll-list, and deliver them to the returning officer, who shall deliver such sealed boxes to the judge of probate within forty-eight hours after they may be delivered to him, and take a receipt from the judge of probate for such sealed ballot-boxes.

"SEC. 36. Be it further enacted, That judges of probate, sheriffs, and clerks of the circuit court, or any two of them, of the several counties are hereby constituted a board of supervisors of elections in and for their respective counties; and it shall be the duty of said board of supervisors to open, compare, and count the ballots cast at all elections.

"SEC. 37. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors of elections, upon good and sufficient evidence that fraud has been perpetrated, or unlawful or wrongful means resorted to to prevent electors from freely and fearlessly casting their ballots, to reject such illegal or fraudulent votes cast at any of such polling places, which rejection, so made as aforesaid, shall be final, unless appeal is taken within ten days to the probate court; and in case of a tie for any county officer, the board of supervisors shall decide.

"SEC. 38. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors, within five days from the date of receiving the sealed boxes and certificates of the number of votes cast at each polling place from the inspectors, to make certificates, on blanks furnished by the secretary of state, of the exact number of votes cast in their county for each person, stating the office such person is voted for, and forward them, excepting for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney-general, to the secretary of state, who shall, after such returns have been duly examined by the secretary of state, be filed as other public papers required to be kept in his office, and shall be subject to the inspection of any elector of this State.

"SEC. 39. Be it further enacted, That the board of supervisors shall forward a certified return of election for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney-general to the presiding officer of the senate at least thirty days before the time fixed for the meeting of the next general assembly.

"SEC. 40. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of the senate, within five days after the assembling of the general assembly, in the presence of a majority of the members of the general assembly, to open the returns and proclaim the result of such election, after which they shall be filed in the office of secretary of state, as required by section thirty-seven of this act.

"SEC. 41. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to furnish, from time to time, the board of county supervisors with all necessary blanks upon which to make election returns.

"SEC. 42. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to forward certificates of election to such persons as may be ascertained to be elected to any office in this State, addressed to the board of supervisors, at the court-house of the county in which such person returned as elected may reside, within ten days after receiving such returns of election from the supervising board of the county; and it shall be the duty of said board of supervisors to forward said election certificates to the persons entitled thereto."

Section 7 of Article IV of the constitution provides as follows:

"A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house may provide."

On the 18th day of November, 1872, the day fixed by law for the assembling of the legislature, eighteen persons holding the required certificates of election as senators, issued to them by the secretary of state, appeared in the senate chamber in the capitol at Montgomery, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the holding-over lieutenant-governor, Moren. They exhibited their certificates of election issued to them by the secretary of state, enrolled their names as senators, took the oath of office in due form, and proceeded to the election of officers pro tempore, viz, secretary, assistant secretary, and other officers. On the next day another senator presented his certificate, enrolled himself, and took the oath of office, in pursuance of section 48 of the revised code of Alabama. All of said senators took the oath prescribed by Article XIV of the constitution before the Hon. J. Q. Smith, one of the circuit judges of the State of Alabama. On the next day the senate, so constituted, proceeded to elect its permanent officers, all its proceedings being under the presidency of the Hon. E. H. Moren, lieutenant-governor of the State. Said proceedings were had by a majority of the whole number required by the constitution to constitute a senate.

On the 18th day of November, 1872, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon, the Hon. John P. Hubbard, speaker of the previous house of representatives, took his seat at the speaker's desk in the hall of the house of representatives in the capitol in Montgomery, and called the house to order. Less than one-half of the hundred persons who constitute a full house appeared in their places. These persons exhibited certificates of election to the house of representatives issued to them by the secretary of state, as required by the act before quoted, enrolled themselves as members of the house, and adjourned until the next day.

Pursuant to adjournment, the house met the next day in the same hall, but still less than one-half of the whole number of members appeared, though some additional members appeared and presented their certificates of election, issued to them by the secretary of state, and enrolled themselves as members of the house. An adjournment was then had to the next day.

On Wednesday, the 20th of November, 1872, the house was again called to order, when fifty-three members appeared. Those who had not been previously enrolled presented their certificates of election, issued to them by the secretary of state, and were enrolled. All of said persons so appearing and presenting their certificates of election took the oath of office required by the constitution, the same oath being administered to them as was administered to the members of the senate by the Hon. J. Q. Smith. The house of representatives thus assembled then proceeded to the election of a speaker, and Hon. Lewis M. Stone, holding a certificate of election issued to him by the secretary of state as a member of said house from the county of Pickens, was chosen speaker of said house of representatives. All of these proceedings of said house were taken by it under the presidency of Hon. John P. Hubbard, the speaker of the previous house of representatives, who, until the election of his successor, occupied the chair. Mr. Hubbard, upon the election of the new speaker, retired and Mr. Stone assumed the duties of speaker of the house. The house then proceeded to the election of subordinate officers, and so fully organized itself, as the senate had previously, under the authority of Article IV, section 6 of the constitution of Alabama.

These two bodies of men constituted what is known as the State-house legislature, which pretended to elect Mr. Sykes as Senator. This legislature was recognized by the Hon. Robert B. Lindsay, who, under the constitution, remained governor of the State until the canvass of votes subsequently made by the State-house legislature, when it was ascertained and declared by them that Hon. David P. Lewis had been elected governor; and thereupon the said Lewis took the oath of office and entered upon the discharge of its duties.

On the same 18th day of November, two other bodies of men assembled at the court-house, one claiming to be the senate and the other the house of representatives—the legislature of said State. After Governor Lewis was inaugurated he recognized the court-house legislature as the proper and legal legislature of the State.

The contest between these two legislatures depends upon this: In the State-house legislature were eight or nine members who had received regular certificates of election, but who are conceded not to have been elected. There were of this class a sufficient number, together with unquestioned members, to make a quorum in both houses of the State-house legislature. In the court-house legislature, persons claiming the seats of this class of members of the State-house legislature assembled with others who were undoubtedly members-elect to the senate and house of representatives, and thereby constituted in numbers a quorum of the two houses at the court-house. And the question is, whether at the time the election of Spencer took place by the court-house legislature that legislature, composed of a quorum of the persons actually elected, should be regarded as the legislature of the State; or whether the State-house legislature, a quorum in both houses being made by this class of persons who in fact were not elected, but had the regular certificates of election, should be regarded as the legal legislature. And this again depends upon another question: whether for the time being, and until some decision by the two houses could be arrived at, the eight or nine persons holding certificates without the election or the eight or nine persons elected but having no certificates are to be considered as entitled to act and form part of the legislature of the State.

It is provided by the law of the State, passed in pursuance of section 6, Article IV of the Constitution, among other things, as follows:

"SEC. 45. That the election of persons declared elected to any office, whether State, county, Representatives in Congress, or to any office which is filled by a vote of the people, may be contested by any qualified elector of this State for any one or more of the following causes: First. Malconduct, fraud, or corruption on the part of any inspector, clerk, returning officer, or board of supervisors. Second. When the persons whose election to such office is contested was not eligible thereto at the time of such election. Third. On account of illegal votes. Fourth. Any intimidation, threats to discharge from employment, offer to bribe or bribery, violence, abuse, or any other misconduct calculated to prevent a fair, free, and full exercise of the elective franchise. But no person can contest the election of any person to any office on account of race, color, or previous condition.

"SEC. 46. That no testimony must be received of any illegal votes or other grounds of contest unless the party contesting has given to the adverse party notice in writing of the cause or causes which he expects to name on the trial, which notice must be served personally at least ten days before the trial.

"SEC. 47. That whenever any elector chooses to contest any election to any office embraced in this act he must make a statement in writing setting forth specifically, first, the names of the party contesting, and that he was a qualified voter at the time the election was held; second, the office which said election was held to fill, and the time of holding the same; third, the particular ground or grounds of such contest; which statement must be verified by the oath of the contesting party, or some one for such party to the effect that he believes the same to be true.

"SEC. 48. That it shall be the duty of the probate judge to deliver to either party, on his application, copies of the poll-lists on being paid his legal fees therefor, and on the trial of the contest the judge of probate shall be required by a subpœna duces tecum to produce the original poll-lists and ballots, filed in his office for enumeration, which shall be received as conclusive evidence of the fact that the person named in the poll-lists voted, and for whom he voted.

"SEC. 51. That any elector contesting the election of any senator or representative to the general assembly, he must first give security for the costs of such contest, which must be acknowledged before and approved by the clerk of the circuit court of any county of the senatorial district, if such contest be for the election of a senator; or if for the election of a representative, by the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which such election was held.

"SEC. 52. That the contesting party must next give notice to the person whose election is contested, by having served on him, or left at his usual place of residence, by the sheriff or some constable, a copy of the grounds of contestation and affidavit, as required by the provision of section 45 of this act.

"SEC. 53. That the security for costs must be given, and the person whose election is contested notified in the mode prescribed in the preceding section, within twenty days after he is declared elected.

"SEC. 54. That the original statement of the grounds of contest and affidavit must, after such service, be returned to the office of the clerk of the circuit court in which security for the costs has been given, with the return of the officer indorsed, which is presumptive evidence of the service.

"SEC. 61. That testimony taken in contests of election under this act must be certified, indorsed, and sealed up, as is required in taking depositions at suits at law. And if the contest is of the election of a senator or member of the house of representatives of the general assembly, the depositions must be directed to the presiding officer of that branch of the general assembly before which such contest is to be tried, at the seat of government, and deposited in the nearest post-office.

"SEC. 62. That on the determination of such contest, the secretary of the senate or clerk of the house, as the case may be, must tax the costs due to the commissioner, witnesses, the sheriff and other officers, for serving notices and subpœnas as for similar service in courts of law, and certify the amount of each separate item, the name of the person entitled thereto, and the result of such contest, to the clerk of the circuit court, in which security for costs is required to be given by the provisions of this act. And the clerk of such court must thereupon issue execution in favor of the successful party for the amount of such costs, specifying the items, the amount of each, and the persons entitled thereto, in the bill of costs, which execution must be made returnable to the term of the circuit court of such county next after its issue, and may be issued as often as may be necessary, and must, when collected, be paid by the officer collecting on demand to the parties entitled thereto."

It is not pretended that the persons who were elected, but had not received certificates of election, took the steps required by this statute to contest the seats of the persons who held the certificates, but had not been elected. It is claimed, and with great force, that, until a contest, in the manner provided by law, the members who had received the certificates of election, although those certificates had been erroneously delivered and they were not in fact elected, were entitled to sit as members of the legislature. It is undoubtedly true that had all the persons claiming to be members of the legislature met in the State-house, and the two houses had proceeded there to organize, the persons holding the certificate, without the election, would have been entitled to their seats until the persons who had been elected, but had received no certificates, should make contests for their seats and their claim should be determined by the houses themselves.

The matter, then, comes to this: The State-house legislature was the legislature in form, and the court-house legislature was the legislature in fact. While these two pretended legislatures were in existence, each claiming to possess the legislative power of the State, Spencer was elected to the Senate by the court-house legislature, and Sykes was elected by the State-house legislature. Spencer was first elected, and on the day of his election the court-house legislature was recognized by the governor as the legal legislature of the State. Therefore, in determining as to the right of Spencer or Sykes to this seat, the Senate is compelled to choose between the body in fact elected, organized, acting, and recognized by the executive department as the legislature, and another body, organized in form, but without the election and without a recognition on the part of the executive of the State at the time they pretended to elect Sykes. When we consider that all the forms prescribed by law for canvassing and certifying an election, and for the organization of the two houses, are designed to secure to the persons actually elected the right to act in the offices to which in fact they have been elected, it would be sacrificing the end to the means were the Senate to adhere to the mere form, and thus defeat the end which the forms were intended to secure.

The persons in the two bodies claiming to be the senate and house of representatives who voted for Spencer constituted a quorum of both houses of the members actually elected; the persons in the State-house legislature who voted for Sykes did not constitute a quorum of the two houses duly elected, but a quorum of persons certified to have been elected to the two houses. Were the Senate to hold Sykes's election to be valid, it would follow that erroneous certificates, delivered to men conceded not to be elected, had enabled persons who in fact ought not to vote for a Senator to elect a Senator to misrepresent the State for six years. On the other hand, if we treat the court-house legislature as the legal legislature of the State, it is conceded that we give effect to the will of the people as evidenced by the election. So that, to state the proposition in other words, we are called upon to choose between the form and the substance, the fiction and the fact; and, considering the importance of the election of a Senator, in the opinion of your committee the Senate would not be justified in overriding the will of the people, as expressed at the ballot-box, out of deference to certificates issued erroneously to persons who were not elected.

In the opinion of your committee it is not competent for the Senate to inquire as to the right of individual members to sit in a legislature which is conceded to have a quorum in both houses of legally elected members. But undoubtedly the Senate must always inquire whether the body which pretended to elect a Senator was the legislature of the State or not; because a Senator can only be elected by the legislature of a State. In this case, Spencer having been seated by the Senate, and being prima facie entitled to hold the seat, the Senate cannot oust him without going into an inquiry in regard to the right of the individual persons who claim to constitute the quorum in these respective bodies at the court-house and at the State-house. We cannot oust Spencer from his seat without inquiring and determining that the eight or nine individuals who were elected were not entitled to sit in the legislature of the State because they lacked the certificates. But if the Senate can inquire into this question at all, it must certainly inquire for the fact rather than the evidence of the fact. It cannot be maintained that when the Senate has been compelled to enter upon such an examination it is estopped by mere prima facie evidence of the fact, and the certificate is conceded to be nothing more than prima facie evidence. But the Senate must go back of that to the fact itself, and determine whether the persons claiming to hold seats were in fact elected. When we do this we come to the conceded fact that these persons lacking the certificate had in fact been elected, and that the persons who claimed to be the quorum of the two houses were in fact the persons who, in virtue of the election, were entitled to constitute the quorum of both houses.

So that, in any view of the matter which your committee can take, we are of opinion that Mr. Sykes makes no case entitling him to the seat now occupied by Mr. Spencer, and your committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Mr. Sykes.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

In the case presented by the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, contesting the election of Hon. George E. Spencer as a Senator from the State of Alabama, the undersigned respectfully submit the following minority report:

By a law of the State of Alabama, the third Monday in November in each year is fixed as the day for the annual meeting of the general assembly of said State, and on the 18th day of November, A. D. 1872, being the third Monday of said month, two separate bodies of men, each claiming to be the legislature of Alabama, assembled at different places in the city of Montgomery and proceeded to organize as such legislature.

One of these bodies, which met in the capitol, or State-house, in said city, on the 10th day of December, 1872, elected the Hon. Francis W. Sykes a Senator in Congress from the said State for the constitutional term commencing on the 4th day of March, 1873; and on the 3d day of the same month the other body, which met at the United States court-rooms, also claiming to be the legislature of the State, elected the Hon. George E. Spencer a Senator in Congress from said State for the said term.

The two bodies subsequently became merged into one general assembly, under an arrangement proposed by the Attorney-General of the United States. The organization of the fusion legislature took place after the election of both Mr. Sykes and Mr. Spencer, and the right of neither the one nor the other depends upon the action of that legislature or anything connected with its history.

Whatever claim either of the persons named may have to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama rests entirely upon the question whether the body that elected him at the time of such election was in fact the legislature of the State, and not upon anything that took place in the legislative history of the State subsequent to the time of his election. It is admitted that there could be but one lawful general assembly in Alabama, and in order to determine whether Mr. Sykes or Mr Spencer is entitled to a seat in the Senate, it is necessary to decide which of the two bodies, if either, claiming to have been the general assembly of the State, was in fact the legal legislature and competent to elect a Senator. If either of the bodies, known as the capitol legislature and the court-house legislature, assembled in accordance with the provisions of the constitution and laws of Alabama, it cannot be doubted that such body so assembled in conformity with law was vested exclusively with the legislative power of the State, and was alone competent to elect a Senator to represent the State in Congress. On the other hand, it cannot be maintained, if either of said bodies assembled in violation of law or without authority of law, that such body so meeting, by whatever name it chose to style itself, was clothed with any legislative authority, or had any rightful claim to be regarded, for any purpose, as the general assembly.

These propositions are self-evident, and cannot be questioned or denied. They are too clear to admit of argument, or to need illustration or enforcement. As isolated truths, unconnected with other questions, they would receive the ready assent of not only every member of the Senate but of every man in the country at all familiar with the constitution and laws of Alabama. The undersigned, therefore, deem it proper to refer to such provisions of the constitution and laws of the State of Alabama as bear upon the election of members of the senate and house of representatives—and their organization as legislative bodies—composing the general assembly of the State. The following are some of the provisions of the constitution and laws of said State. Article V, sections 2, 3, and 16, of the constitution:

"SEC. 2. The governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney-general shall hold their office for the term of two years, and the auditor for the term of four years.

"SEC. 3. The returns of every election for the officers named in the preceding section shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government by the returning officers, directed to the presiding officer of the senate, who, during the first week of the session, shall open and publish the same in the presence of a majority of the members of the general assembly; the parson having the highest number of votes shall be declared duly elected; but if two or more shall be highest and equal in votes for the same office, one of them shall be chosen by the joint vote of both houses. Contested elections for executive officers shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

"SEC. 16. The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, but shall vote only when the senate is equally divided, and in case of his absence or impeachment, or when he shall exercise the office of governor, the senate shall choose a president pro tempore."

By section 6, Article IV of the constitution of Alabama, the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives remain in office until their successors are elected and qualified, as follows:

"SEC. 6. The house of representatives, when assembled, shall choose a speaker and its other officers; and the senate shall choose a president, in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, and its other officers; each house shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law. The president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives shall remain in office until their successors are elected and qualified."

By Article VIII of the constitution of Alabama, the house of representatives is declared to consist of one hundred members, apportioned among, and elected from, the counties of the State as directed in said article.

The senate consists of thirty-three members, elected by the voters from the senatorial districts, as directed in said article; and these two bodies constitute the general assembly of the State, and therein, by section 1 of Article IV of the constitution, is vested the legislative power of the State, as follows:

"SEC. 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives."

By act of the general assemby of Alabama, approved 31st December, 1868, entitled

"An act to fix the time of the annual session of the general assembly," the third Monday of November in each year is declared to be the day for the annual assembling of the general assembly.

By section 38 of the revised code of Alabama, which was re-enacted and continued in force by an act approved July 29, 1868, the general assembly is required to convene in the city of Montgomery, as follows:

"The members of the general assembly shall convene in the city of Montgomery on the first day of November in each year, unless that day be Sunday, and if that day be Sunday, then on the next day afterward."

This provision of the law was amended so as to require the general assembly to meet on the third Monday of November, as before stated.

By the act of the general assembly of Alabama, approved 13th February, 1850, entitled "An act supplemental to an act making appropriations to establish the State-house at Montgomery," and by the original act approved 11th February, 1850, the State of Alabama provided for the erection of the present capitol, or State-house, at Montgomery, and construction therein of a hall of the house of representatives and the senate chamber, for the use of the general assembly of this State, and from the time of the removal of the seat of government from Tuscaloosa to Montgomery the two branches of the general assembly have been accustomed to use, for the purposes of their legislative sessions, the hall and chamber provided for them in the capitol now in use, and in that previously standing on the same site; and no other hall or chamber in Montgomery or elsewhere, except for a short period in 1849–'50, during a session of the legislature, when, in consequence of the destruction of the State-house by fire, the general assembly, by the concurrent action of the two houses, held their sessions in another building in Montgomery.

By act of the general assembly of Alabama, approved October 8, 1868, entitled "An act to regulate elections in this State," it is provided (section 7) that the State senators shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1872, and every four years thereafter; in section 6, that representatives in the general assembly shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1870, and every two years thereafter.

This act further provides as follows:

"SEC. 33. Be it further enacted, That one of the inspectors must number each ballot with the same number as the name of the voter on the poll-list, and the ballot must then, without being opened or examined, be deposited in the proper ballot-box.

"SEC. 34. Be it further enacted, That there shall be no challenging of electors appearing to vote at any election hereafter held in this State, and any registered voter appearing to vote at any election in this State shall be allowed to do so without question, challenge, or objection by any person; and any person who questions, challenges, or objects, or who unlawfully hinders or delays any person offering to vote, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined five hundred dollars, and, on failure to pay the same, shall be imprisoned in the county jail for six months.

"SEC. 35. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the inspectors of all elections in the election precincts, immediately on the closing of the polls, to count out the votes that have been polled, and, after so doing, to promptly certify the poll-list, seal up the boxes containing the ballots and poll-list, and deliver them to the returning officer, who shall deliver such sealed boxes to the judge of probate within forty-eight hours after they may be delivered to him, and take a receipt from the judge of probate for such sealed ballot-boxes.

"SEC. 36. Be it further enacted, That judges of probate, sheriffs, and clerks of the circuit court, or any two of them, of the several counties, are hereby constituted a board of supervisors of elections in and for their respective counties; and it shall be the duty of said board of supervisors to open, compare, and count the ballots cast at all elections.

"SEC. 37. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors of elections, upon good and sufficent evidence that fraud had been perpetrated, or unlawful or wrongful means resorted to to prevent electors from freely and fearlessly casting their ballots, to reject such illegal or fraudulent votes cast at any of such polling places, which rejection, so made as aforesaid, shall be final, unless appeal is taken within ten days to the probate court; and in case of a tie for any county officer, the board of supervisors shall decide.

"SEC. 38. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the board of supervisors, within five days from the date of receiving the sealed boxes and certificates of the number of votes cast at each polling place from the inspectors, to make certificates, on blanks furnished by the secretary of state, of the exact number of votes cast in their county for each person, stating the office such person is voted for, and forward them, excepting for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney-general, to the secretary of state, who shall, after such returns have been duly examined by the secretary of state, be filed as other public papers required to be kept in his office, and shall be subject to the inspection of any elector of this State.

"SEC. 39. Be it further enacted, That the board of supervisors shall forward a certified return of election for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney-general to the presiding officer of the senate at least thirty days before the time fixed for the meeting of the next general assembly.

"SEC. 40. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of the senate, within five days after the assembling of the general assembly, in the presence of a majority of the members of the general assembly, to open the returns and proclaim the result of such election, after which they shall be filed in the office of secretary of state, as required by section 37 of this act.

"SEC. 41. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to furnish from time to time the board of county supervisors with all necessary blanks upon which to make election returns.

"SEC. 42. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to forward certificates of election to such persons as may be ascertained to be elected to any office in this State, addressed to the board of supervisors, at the court-house of the county in which such person returned as elected may reside, within ten days after receiving such returns of election from the supervising board of the county; and it shall be the duty of said board of supervisors to forward said election certificates to the persons entitled thereto."

Applying these provisions of the constitution and laws of Alabama to the respective organizations known as the capitol and court-house legislatures, we are not left in doubt as to which of the two bodies was the lawful general assembly.

The undersigned have no hesitation in declaring it as their opinion that the senate and house of representatives which met at the capitol and elected Mr. Sykes a Senator from the State of Alabama were organized in strict compliance with the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State, and, thus organized, constituted the general assembly, and were vested exclusively with legislative power. To sustain the opinion, we need only to refer to facts which were admitted before the committee or shown by record evidence to be true.

In pursuance of the act of the general assembly of Alabama, approved October 8, 1868, hereinbefore referred to, an election for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, attorney-general, and other State officers, and also for senators and representatives in the general assembly was held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1872, in all the counties in the State. The returns of said election, certified as by law required, were made by the boards of supervisors of election to the secretary of state, and were by him filed in his office. Certificates of election were then issued by the secretary of state to the persons shown by said returns to have been elected to the general assembly, namely, to thirty-three senators and one hundred representatives. The duty of the secretary of state in this regard is prescribed by the forty-second section of the said act of October 8, 1868, as follows:

"SEC. 42. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the secretary of state to forward certificates of election to such persons as may be ascertained to be elected to any office in this State, addressed to the board of supervisors, at the court-house of the county in which such person returned as elected may reside, within ten days after receiving such returns of election from the supervising board of the county; and it shall be the duty of said board of supervisors to forward said election certificates to the persons entitled thereto."

It is not denied that the election had been held in strict compliance with the provisions of law, or that the persons to whom certificates of election were issued had been voted for at said election for the offices to which they were respectively certified to have been elected. Nor will it be denied that the board of supervisors of elections in the several counties of the State had made returns as required by section 38 of the act aforesaid to the secretary of state, showing that the persons to whom certificates of election were subsequently issued had been elected to the State senate and house of representatives.

Over these returns the secretary of state had no control other than their custody. He was required to receive them and file them in his office, and within ten days to issue certificates to the persons shown thereby to have been elected. His duty was purely ministerial, and enforced by penalties prescribed by law.

The suggestion has been made that the secretary of state, in issuing and causing to be delivered certificates of election to the members of the capitol legislature from Barber County, acted in bad faith, but no evidence was offered to sustain such suggestion, and, in fact, the imputation was not pressed in argument before the committee.

In the absence of any proof to the contrary, public officers must be presumed to act in good faith in the performance of official duty, and the undersigned know of no reason for denying to this officer the vindication arising from such presumption. He sought the advice of eminent counsel of both political bodies in reference to his duty in the matter, and acted in accordance with their written instructions in issuing the certificates referred to.

The constitution of Alabama provides, Article IV, section 21, as follows: "The general assembly shall meet annually on such day as may be by law prescribed, and shall not remain in session longer than thirty days, except by vote of two-thirds of each house."

The act of the general assembly of the State hereinbefore referred to, approved December 31, 1868, fixes the time for the annual meeting of the general assembly on the third Monday of November in each year.

Before proceeding to recite the facts connected with the organization of the two houses of the capitol legislature, it may be proper to refer to the following provisions of the constitution of Alabama, showing, among other things, the part to be taken by the lieutenant-governor and the speaker of the last house of representatives in the organization of the two houses of the general assembly of the State, and also that a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, and that each house "shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its members."

Article IV, sections 6 and 7, are as follows:

"SEC. 6. The house of representatives, when assembled, shall choose a speaker and its other officers; and the senate shall choose a president, in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, and its other officers; each house shall judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members, but a contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law. The president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives shall remain in office until their successors are elected and qualified.

"SEC. 7. A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each house may provide."

Article V, section 16, of the constitution also provides:

"SEC. 16. The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, but shall vote only when the senate is equally divided; and in case of his absence or impeachment, or when he shall exercise the office of governor, the senate shall choose a president pro tempore."

Bearing in mind these provisions of the constitution and laws of the State in reference to the meeting and organization of the two houses of the general assembly, let us inquire whether the senate and house of representatives known as the capitol legislature met and organized in conformity therewith.

The journals of the two houses of the capitol legislature, published by authority, show the following facts in common with the organization of the two houses. These facts were not disputed in the argument before the committee.

On the 18th day of November, 1872, being the third Monday of said month, the time prescribed by law for the annual meeting of the general assembly, eighteen persons holding certificates of their election as senators from the secretary of state appeared in the senate chamber in the capitol at Montgomery, and at the hour of 12 o'clock of the day were called to order by Lieutenant-Governor Moren, who was present in conformity with the requirement of the constitution for the purpose of organizing the senate and presiding over its deliberations. The eighteen members present, constituting a quorum of the whole number of senators, exhibited the certificates of their election issued by the secretary of state, enrolled their names, and took the oaths of office administered in due form and proceeded to elect officers, namely, secretary, assistant secretary, and other officers. On the following day another senator appeared in the senate chamber, was qualified, and took his seat in the senate. The oaths of office prescribed by the constitution of Alabama were taken by these nineteen senators before the Hon. J. Q. Smith, one of the judges of the circuit court of the State, and all the proceedings were conducted under the presidency of the lieutenant-governor, who is made the presiding officer of the senate by the constitution. These are the facts connected with the meeting and organization of the senate; let us now inquire into the organization of the house of representatives.

It appears from the journal of the proceedings, and is not disputed, that on the 18th day of November, 1872, being the third Monday of said month, the day fixed by law for the meeting of the legislature, forty-five persons holding the certificates of their election as members of the house of representatives convened in the hall of the house in the capitol at the city of Montgomery, and at the hour of 12 o'clock on that day the house was called to order by John P. Hubbard, speaker of the last house of representatives. A temporary clerk and doorkeeper were appointed, and a call of the house made, when forty-five persons enrolled their names, and, having been duly sworn, took their seats as members of the house. The number present being less than a quorum, an adjournment took place until 12 o'clock the next day, when the house again met. The speaker being in the chair, five additional members having certificates of election appeared, enrolled their names, were duly sworn, and took their seats as members of the house. The whole number of members then present being fifty, one less than a quorum, the house adjourned until 11 o'clock the following day. Pursuant to adjournment, the house again met on the 20th November, when three other members having certificates as aforesaid appeared and qualified by taking the oaths prescribed by the constitution, and took their seats as members of the body.

Fifty-three members of the house were present on that day, and, being a quorum of the whole number of representatives, proceeded to the election of a speaker and other officers.

Mr. Stone, a member from Pickens, received 51 votes for speaker, and was declared duly and constitutionally elected speaker of the house of representatives by the presiding officer. Mr. Stone then qualified as speaker and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Other officers of the house were elected on the same day, some of them receiving as many as 53 votes, and the house, on the said 20th day of November, thus became fully organized.

After the organization of the house, to wit, on the 25th of November, another member appeared and also qualified and took his seat.

All the proceedings in the organization of the two houses appear to have been orderly, regular, and in strict conformity with the requirements of the constitution and laws of the State. Both houses assembled on the day prescribed by law for the meeting of the general assembly in their respective chambers in the State capitol, set apart and appropriated by the State of Alabama for the use of the respective houses of the general assembly.

The senate was presided over by the lieutenant-governor, and the house of representatives by the speaker of the last house during the whole time of the organization of the respective bodies, and a quorum of members holding certificates of election issued by the secretary of state as required by law were present in each house and duly qualified, and participated in such organization and in the further proceedings of the two bodies.

Both houses of the capitol legislature having organized notified the governor that they were ready to receive any communication he might have to make to the general assembly. The constitution of Alabama, Article V, section 7, makes it the duty of the governor to "communicate at every session by message to the general assembly the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient." In performance of this duty, Robert B. Lindsay, then governor of the State, on the 22d day of November, 1872, sent his annual message in writing to the capitol legislature, a copy of which was delivered to each house.

This action of the governor in the performance of a duty imposed by the constitution was an unequivocal recognition by the executive department of the State of the capitol legislature as the lawful general assembly of Alabama, and is entitled to weight in the consideration of the question referred to the committee.

After the organization of the two houses of the capitol legislature, further proceedings were had by those houses to which it may be proper here to advert.

The constitution of the State provides, in Article V, sections 2 and 3, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney-general shall hold their offices for the term of two years, and the auditor for the term of four years.

"SEC. 3. The returns of every election for the offices named in the preceding section shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government by the returning officers, directed to the presiding officer of the senate, who, during the first week of the session, shall open and publish the same in the presence of a majority of the members of the general assembly; the person having the highest number of votes shall be declared duly elected, but if two or more shall be highest and equal in votes for the same office, one of them shall be chosen by the joint vote of both houses. Contested elections for executive officers shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

For the purpose of complying with these provisions of the constitution, the two houses of the capitol legislature, on the 22d day of November, 1872, under a resolution previously passed, met in the hall of the house of representatives to witness the opening and counting of the returns of the election of the officers named in section 2 above cited. Lieutenant-Governor Moren, the then lieutenant-governor of the State and the presiding officer of the senate, to whom said returns had been directed by the returning officers, in the presence of a majority of the members of the two houses proceeded to open and count the said returns; and on the following day, the opening and counting thereof having been completed, the lieutenant-governor, as presiding officer of the senate, published the result of the election as shown by the count of the returns; and thereupon the Hon. David P. Lewis was declared elected governor and Alexander McKinstry lieutenant-governor of the State, who were duly notified thereof and afterward took the oaths prescribed, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of their respective offices. The election of the other State officers was also duly declared, and said officers afterward entered upon the discharge of the duties of their several offices.

These proceedings of the two houses of the capitol legislature were had in fulfillment of duties imposed by the constitution of Alabama on the general assembly of the State—duties essential to the regular and orderly transmission of the executive offices from the possession of incumbents whose terms have expired to their legally elected successors in office. This is one of the most important functions devolved upon the legislature, and its honest performance secures the existence of legitimate executive government in the State.

No suggestion has been made from any quarter that in counting the returns and declaring the election of the governor, lieutenant-governor, and other State officers the capitol legislature exceeded its authority or did not act fairly and impartially.

The said legislature during its existence enacted at least one statute, which is still a law of the State, and the validity of which has never been called in question, and, at the time and in the manner prescribed by the act of Congress, proceeded to elect a Senator from the State of Alabama to the Congress of the United States, and on the 10th day of December, 1872, Francis W. Sykes, as hereinbefore stated, was elected such Senator, in conformity with the provisions of the act of Congress aforesaid relating to the election of Senators.

In the opinion of the undersigned, no element was wanting essential to the validity of the election of the contestant, Mr. Sykes, or the legal existence of the legislature that elected him; they therefore declare it as their judgment, based upon a thorough and careful investigation of every question of law or fact that could arise in the case, that Francis W. Sykes, on the said 10th day of December, 1872, was legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing on the 4th day of March, 1873, and is entitled to the seat now held by the Hon. George E. Spencer.

The lawfulness of the capitol legislature cannot be denied or the validity of its acts questioned, because a minority of the persons holding certificates of election from the secretary of state, and entitled to seats therein, chose factiously or otherwise to absent themselves and to assemble at a different place.

The senate chamber and the hall of the house of representatives in the capitol, erected at the public expense and dedicated to the use of the senate and house, and used exclusively by the two houses respectively during the sessions of preceding legislatures, were the proper, usual, and fitting places for the assembling of the two houses of the general assembly. No justification or excuse can be found for the action of the persons entitled to seats therein as members in absenting themselves from the hall dedicated to the use of the bodies in which they were entitled to be seated. No violence, threats, or intimidation is alleged to have prevented them from so doing.

The lieutenant-governor was present at the senate chamber, and the speaker of the last house of representatives was in the hall of the house on the day prescribed by law for the annual meeting of the general assembly, for the purpose of assisting in the organization of the respective houses in obedience to the requirements of the constitution of the State. In these halls the people of Alabama expected all persons entitled to seats as members in either house to be present and qualify as legislators. By clear implication of law it was their duty to do so, and their failure to perform that duty cannot derogate from the rightful authority of the legislature there assembled, or impair the validity of any act done in pursuance of the legislative power with which it was clothed. The absence of any number of persons entitled to seats in a legislative body, or their refusal to act with the body, from whatever cause such absence or refusal might occur, could not prevent the organization of the body or render its action illegal, provided a quorum was present, and the organization took place in accordance with the requirements of the constitution and the laws of the State.

If this is not true, then it follows that a factious minority may, by the mere refusal to qualify and participate in the organization of the legislature, destroy or suspend the action of the law-making department of the government at its pleasure. Such a position carried to its logical conclusion would place it in the power of one member-elect of the legislature to defeat the organization of the body to which he was elected by refusing to participate therein, and thus overthrow good government in the State. Absurd as such a proposition may seem, it could be sustained by the same arguments that deny to the capitol legislature the character of being the general assembly of the State of Alabama.

Nor can the fact that some of the persons holding the certificates of election, issued by the secretary of state, and seated thereon in the capitol legislature may not have been elected to such places by the votes cast at the election, impair the validity of the organization of the senate and house of representatives constituting the capitol legislature.

Every member who took his seat in either house presented the only evidence of his right to a seat required by the laws of the State, and such evidence entitled him to a seat in the house to which he was accredited until it should be made to appear by a contest that his right was not good.

For contesting the seat of any member of either house of the general assembly the laws of Alabama fully provide, and every person claiming a seat in either house may, if entitled thereto, obtain the same upon a contest made in accordance with law. But until such contest is successfully made the person seated as a member upon the certificate of election issued by the secretary of state has all the constitutional and legal rights of a member of the legislature. His acts and the acts of the body of which he is a member are as valid and binding as though he had been elected by the unanimous vote of the electors of his county or district.

It is not alleged or insinuated that any member of either house of the capitol legislature holds the certificate upon which he was admitted to a seat by reason of any fraud, artifice, or contrivance of his own; but if such had been the fact, or if any member of the said legislature seated on such certificate had not in fact been elected, it was a matter over which the said legislature had exclusive cognizance, and into which the Senate cannot properly inquire.

Each house of the general assembly of Alabama is the exclusive judge of "the election returns and qualification of its members," and any inquiry into such question by the Senate of the United States would be as unwarranted by precedent as it would prove dangerous in practice.

In a contest like the one now under consideration, between two persons elected to the Senate by different bodies, each claiming to be the legislature of the State, the Senate may look into the constitution and laws of the State to ascertain which of the two bodies, if either, has been organized in conformity with their provisions, but it cannot rightfully inquire into the election returns and qualifications of the members of either body.

If the Senate could enter upon such inquiry, where would be the limitation upon its prerogatives? Could it not just as legitimately inquire into the manner in which any election officer had performed the duties of his office, and even into the qualification of the electors who had voted for members of the State legislature?

The undersigned would not restrict the Senate in its constitutional right to judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members, but would regret its assumption of powers belonging exclusively to the two houses of the State legislature.

It may be true that persons will sometimes be returned members of the legislature through the failure of election officers to make the proper returns, but the person deprived of his seat in the legislature by reason of such failure has his remedy in a contest before the body to which he may have been elected. Such contests are neither unusual nor improper. It is the mode pointed out in the laws of every State for the correction of such errors, and in none more fully than in the laws of Alabama. The failure of any person or number of persons, deprived of their seats in the legislature by the default of election officers to make such contests, would not justify an inquiry into the matter by the Senate of the United States. The person so returned would have all the rights, and could properly perform all the duties, of any other member until deprived of his seat in the mode pointed out by law. A contrary doctrine has never received the assent of any respectable court or any legislative body in this land.

If we should go further, and, for the sake of argument, admit it to be true, as alleged, that the members from Marengo and Barber Counties seated in the capitol legislature upon certificates issued by the secretary of state were not in fact elected to the legislature by the votes actually cast at the election, still we confidently assert that the returns of election made by the supervisors of election, who are made judges of the facts by the laws of Alabama, and the certificate of their election, entitled them to be seated as members, and to hold their seats until displaced upon a contest, and that, as such, every act they performed was as valid as though they had received every vote cast at the election.

Let us now look at the facts connected with the organization and history of the assemblage of persons who met at the United States district court-rooms, and known as the court-house legislature. It met on the day fixed by law for the meeting of the general assembly. No public notice, through the papers or otherwise, was given of an intention on the part of any persons claiming to have been elected to the legislature to meet at that place, and no information was given to the lieutenant-governor, speaker of the last house of representatives, or any of the members-elect, other than those there assembled, of such purpose. No previous legislature had ever held its sessions at the court-rooms, which belonged to the United States and not to the State of Alabama, and no person holding a certificate as a member of either house other than those who there assembled could possibly have deemed it a proper and appropriate place for the meeting of the legislature.

The senate of the court-house legislature consisted of fourteen persons holding certificates of election as senators, issued by the secretary of state, and of five other persons (enough to constitute a quorum of a full senate) who held no such certificates. Their deliberations were presided over by one of their number, chosen as temporary president during the organization, and until after the lieutenant-governor-elect had been inducted into office. This body never had more than fourteen members (less than a quorum) holding certificates of election issued by the secretary of state in pursuance of law, and at no time had a quorum of the persons actually elected to the State senate.

The house of representatives at the court-rooms consisted of forty-six persons, to whom certificates of election as members of the house of representatives had been issued by the secretary of state, in pursuance of law, and of a sufficient number of other persons, holding no such certificates, to constitute a quorum of a full house of representatives. Some of the persons seated as members in this body had not been elected members of the legislature, and made no claim as such to seats in the fusion legislature, afterward organized under the plan proposed by the Attorney-General of the United States.

Immediately after the organization of the two houses of the court-house legislature, a joint committee was appointed to wait upon Governor Lindsay, and inform him of their readiness to receive any communication from him. The governor rightfully declined to recognize them as the general assembly, and sent his annual message, as before stated, to the capitol legislature.

Governor Lewis, after being legally inducted into office by the proceedings hereinbefore stated in the capitol legislature, co-operated with the assemblage of persons at the court-rooms, and professed to regard them as a de facto legislature.

The ground upon which Mr. Spencer, who was elected by this court-house body, predicates its claim to recognition by the Senate as the rightful legislature of Alabama, is not that it existed in conformity with the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State, but upon the unsustained allegation that a majority of the members, both of the senate and house, some of whom held no certificates of election, were elected by a majority of the votes cast in their respective counties and districts.

If the truth of such allegation was a legitimate subject of inquiry in this body; if the Senate of the United States could properly judge of the election of members of a State legislature (which the undersigned most emphatically deny), it would not be difficult to demonstrate that the court-house senate at no time had a quorum of members elected by the voters of the senatorial districts in which they reside.

Those who assert that the members at the court-house legislature were elected by the votes cast rely on the fact that persons holding no certificates of election, and who were members of the court-rooms, were afterward admitted to seats in the fusion legislature. It will be remembered that the fusion of the capitol and court-house legislatures took place upon an arbitrary plan proposed by the Attorney-General of the United States, leaving to persons claiming seats the right to make a contest for the same.

Without going into the history of its proceedings it is sufficient to state that Mr. Miller, who was a member of the court-house senate, holding no certificate of election, and whose presence was necessary to constitute a quorum, and who voted for Mr. Spencer, was, by proceedings the most arbitrary, illegal, and tyrannical, admitted to a seat in the fusion legislature as a senator from the senatorial district composed of Butler and Conecuh and part of Escambia Counties over Mr. Martin, who held the certificate of election, and who has received a large majority of the votes cast for senator at the election. This arbitrary and tyrannical proceeding to seat Mr. Miller in the fusion senate was doubtless deemed necessary to give color to his participation in the senate at the court-rooms, which, without his presence, had no quorum of members claiming to have been elected.

The legality of the court-house legislature and the validity of its proceedings depend not upon what took place in the fusion legislature, but must rest upon its own conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State. Tested by these requirements, it can claim no higher character than that of a revolutionary body organized in contempt of the constitution and laws of Alabama and in disregard of good order and legitimate government in the State.

An argument was made before the committee in favor of the legality of the court-house legislature drawn from the fact that a joint resolution was passed in the fusion house of representatives declaring in substance that the court-house legislature was the lawful general assembly of the State.

This resolution, which did not pass the senate, was voted for in the house only by members of the court-house body seated in the fusion legislature, and was an abortive attempt to justify and render valid their own illegal proceedings. It is submitted that no subsequent declaration, by one or both of the two houses of the fusion legislature, could have had the effect to render that legal which was before illegal. Much less could an attempt on the part of one house to do so have that effect. At best it was but the vain effort of persons whose previous action was irregular and revolutionary to condone their own contempt and disregard of the constitution and laws of the State. This argument, feeble as the cause it is intended to sustain, is unworthy of consideration, and we pass it without further notice.

It was alleged in argument before the committee that the observance of the provision of the constitution requiring the lieutenant-governor to preside in the senate, and the presidency of the speaker of the last house of representatives in the house, the meeting of the general assembly in the State capitol, and the issuing of certificates of election to members of the legislature by the secretary of state, based upon returns made to him by the supervisors of election, was not necessary to constitute a valid legislature, but that these provisions are mere matters of form which may be dispensed with at pleasure.

The undersigned cannot concur in views so narrow of constitutional and legal requirements, and while admitting that in the presence of overwhelming and absolute necessity matters of form, even when prescribed by law, may be dispensed with, yet in the absence of any such necessity what might otherwise be treated as matters of form, if prescribed by the constitution and laws of the State, become matters of substance not to be disregarded, but must be strictly observed. In the present case no such necessity can be pleaded. Party exigency alone prompted and is brought forward to sustain the utter disregard by the court-house legislature of requisites prescribed by the constitution and laws of Alabama and designed to perpetuate legitimate government in the State.

Are these requisites, deemed of sufficient importance to be incorporated into the constitution and laws of the State, to be degraded to mere matters of form, the observance of which may be disregarded at the suggestion of party interest? It might with the same truth be contended that the taking of the prescribed oaths of office by members of the legislature may be dispensed with, or that the execution of bonds required to be given by a public officer before entering upon his office are mere matters of form.

Let us turn to the law of Alabama relating to the issuing by the secretary of state of certificates of election to members of the legislature, to see whether it is only matter of form, to which no importance is attached.

Section 35 of the law of October 8, 1868, hereinbefore referred to, makes it the duty of inspectors of elections to count the votes polled and certify the poll-list, seal up the boxes containing the ballots and poll-list, and deliver them to a returning officer to be delivered to the judge of probate for the county.

Section 36 of said law constitutes the judges of probate, sheriffs, and clerks of the circuit court boards of supervisors of election, and makes it their duty to open, compare, and count the ballots cast at the election; and the next succeeding section confers upon them power and makes it their duty to reject illegal and fraudulent votes.

Section 38 makes it the duty of the board of supervisors, within five days after receiving the said boxes containing the ballots and poll-lists, to certify the number of votes cast in the county for each person, stating the office he is voted for, and to forward such certificate (except for certain named officers) to the secretary of state to be filed in his office. These are the steps to be taken preliminary to the issuing of certificates by the secretary of state.

Section 42 of the said law, hereinbefore recited, makes it the duty of the secretary, within ten days after receiving the returns and certificates of the supervisors of election, to issue certificates of election to the person shown by said returns to have been elected.

Is this all matter of form? Is there no meaning to be attached to these provisions of law for ascertaining who has been elected to the general assembly? Why, then, the provisions of law imposing penalties upon the election officers and the secretary of state for neglecting the performance of the duty imposed?

We admit that the legislature of the State, upon a contest for a seat in either house, may go behind the certificates and inquire into the facts of the case, but that is a right conferred by the constitutional provision making each house "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members."

The right of any number of the members-elect to the legislature to disregard these provisions of the law and treat them as nullities cannot be conceded. The same board of supervisors of election that certified to the secretary of state the election of members of the general assembly also certified under provision of law the vote for governor, lieutenant-governor, treasurer, and other State officers to the presiding officer of the senate, who opened and published the result, as before mentioned.

What would be thought of the opposing candidates for these offices who would attempt to disregard the certificates of the supervisors and the ascertainment of the result of the election in the manner prescribed by law, claiming that they were mere matters of form, and attempt to seize the offices for which they had been candidates on the allegation that they had been elected by the votes of the electors?

No one would sustain such revolutionary action, even if it was certain that the allegation was true. Their remedy would be by contests for the offices, under the provisions of law. And until that remedy had been tried, no one would justify a resort to other means, even to correct an admitted wrong. Such revolutionary action, however, would not be less indefensible than the conduct of the court-house assemblage. Indeed, they stand on precisely the same ground, and any mode of argumentation that can justify the one might be employed to sustain the other.

It is only by construing the constitutional and legal provisions relating to the organization of the general assembly as mere matters of form that the supporters of the court-house legislature can attempt to justify its action or claim for it the recognition of the Senate; yet no position could be more untenable, unsound, or irrational. Every provision of the constitution and laws of Alabama relating to the election of members of the legislature might with the same propriety be treated as mere form; the registration of voters, the appointment of inspectors and other officers to conduct the election—the voting by ballot, the keeping of poll-lists, the counting of the votes, in short, everything required by the constitution and laws of Alabama for guarding the election and ascertaining the result might be dispensed with as matters of form, for the same reasons that you can dispense with the returns and certificates required to be made by the inspectors and boards of supervisors of election, and the certificates in conformity therewith required to be issued by the secretary of state.

The fact that provision is made by law for contesting the seats of members of the legislature seated upon the returns and certificates referred to by persons claiming to have been elected, is a conclusive argument against the position that said returns and certificates are matters of form only, and may be disregarded at pleasure. The law attaches to said certificates such importance that a contest is required to show that they are not correct. This is the effect given to such returns and certificates by the laws of Alabama.

While, however, these provisions of law for contesting the right of members of the legislature admitted to seats upon the evidence of such returns and certificates demonstrate that they are not matters of form merely, they furnished the remedy, and the only legal remedy, for opposing candidates who claimed to have been elected to the general assembly.

So far as the court-house members who held certificates of election were concerned, there was no necessity for a contest; they had the right, and would have been admitted to seats in the capitol legislature upon the presentation of such certificates; and, had there been a majority of Republican members who had certificates of election, they doubtless would have been present at the capitol and taken their seats as members. The fact that they were in a minority could not release them from the obligation of obeying law or justify their contempt of its provisions. Every sentiment of patriotism and every consideration arising from citizenship, no less than the duty imposed by the position to which they had been elected, united in demanding their obedience to the laws of their State. In refusing that obedience, and disobeying the fundamental and statute laws of Alabama, they assumed the attitude of revolutionists, and put in jeopardy the peace and good order of society.

No party exigency can excuse such perfidy or condone its criminality. It was an utter disregard of law which this Senate cannot properly indorse by recognizing the court-house assemblage as the legislature of the State.

Such proceedings would have met with stern rebuke in the earlier days of the Republic, and can only now find countenance and sympathy from that toleration of lawlessness which looks with indifference, if not approval, upon the overthrow of legitimate government and the substitution of a despotism supported by Federal power in one of the States of this Union.

The refusal to give to Mr. Sykes the seat which he claims in this body would be a declaration on the part of the Senate that the legislature that elected him was not the lawful general assembly of the State; that the constitutional provision requiring the lieutenant-governor to preside in the senate has no meaning; that no importance attaches to the returns made by the supervisors of elections as required by law, or to the certificates of election issued to members by the secretary of state in conformity with such returns; that the legal ascertainment of who constitute the members of the respective houses of the legislature and every requirement of law for such ascertainment were unnecessary and might be dispensed with in the organization of the two houses; that no significance attaches to the provisions of law for the erection of a State capitol and the appropriation of halls therein for the senate and house of representatives; in short, that the observance of constitutional and legal requirements is wholly unnecessary and not essential to the legal existence of legislative bodies in the State of Alabama. Mr. Sykes was elected by a legislature met in pursuance of every requirement of law. No one disputes that the lieutenant-governor presided in the senate and the speaker of the last house of representatives in the house at the capitol. No one denies that the members of the two houses assembled at the proper time and in the halls set apart for the use of the respective houses of the legislature. No one denies that every member of each house produced the certificate of his election, issued by the secretary of state in conformity with the returns made to him by the supervisor of elections. No one denies that a quorum admitted to seats upon such certificates were present in both houses, and participated in their proceedings and in the joint convention that elected Mr. Sykes to the Senate. With these requirements fulfilled by the capitol legislature, it would be impossible to put any other construction on the rejection of Mr. Sykes than that the Senate does not deem compliance with law in the organization of the legislature of the State essential to its legal existence or the validity of its acts. On the other hand, the retention of Mr. Spencer, elected by a body of men assembled without warrant of law, at a place not designated for the meeting of the general assembly, with less than a quorum of persons in either house, holding certificates of election issued in pursuance of law and presided over by persons other than those designated in the constitution as the presiding officers of the two houses of the legislature, would be an unequivocal declaration on the part of the Senate of the United States that a revolutionary body of men may constitute itself the legislature of Alabama, and perform the functions appertaining to the general assembly of the State.

The enunciation of such a doctrine, either expressly or by implication, arising from the retention of Mr. Spencer in the position he occupies, would subject the Senate to the suspicion in the popular mind of being governed in its decision by party predilection. Unjust as such a suspicion might be, the preservation of its own dignity demands that no occasion shall occur from which it could possibly arise. No higher duty devolves upon the Senate than the preservation of its own character from reproach. Within the last few years it has suffered in public esteem from causes which it is unnecessary to name, and it is to be hoped nothing in connection with this contest may occur to weaken its claim to the respect and confidence of the country.

The decision of this contest against Mr. Sykes, elected by a legislature assembled with all the forms of law, and in favor of Mr. Spencer, elected by a legislature convened in contempt of law, would encourage faction and invite to revolution in every State of the Union in which political parties are about equal in numerical strength. The defeated party, basing its action on allegations of fraud, instead of pursuing the remedy pointed out by law, will seek the correction of its real or fancied wrongs by imitating the example of the court-house legislature of Alabama. For the justification of its action, it could point to the indorsement by the Senate of the proceedings of that revolutionary body. By recognizing the capitol legislature, however, and deciding the contest in favor of Mr. Sykes, the Senate would administer a just rebuke to lawlessness, promote public order and morality, and enforce the observance of law in the organization of legislative bodies throughout the land.

Much more important considerations are involved in this contest than the mere question which of the persons claiming shall be allowed to sit as a member in this body. If that was the single question to be decided, it would be worthy of the most careful and deliberate action of the Senate. Private rights ought not to be hastily or inconsiderately determined, but should be as carefully guarded and preserved by the decision of this body as they would be by the judgment of the highest legal tribunal in the land. Important, however, as the question of personal rights may be, it dwindles into insignificance in view of the graver consequences to result from the determination of this contest by the Senate. Presented in this issue is the broad question whether, in one of the States of this Union, legitimate legislative government, sanctioned by every requirement of the constitution and laws of the State, can be superseded by faction, and a revolutionary body, met without the forms and in contempt of law, receive the approval and sanction of the Senate as the lawful general assembly of the State.

This is the grave question which must be decided in the determination of the contest now before the Senate. Upon that decision may depend, in no small degree, the preservation of future peace and harmony, not only in Alabama, but in every State of the Union. In disposing of this case, no encouragement should be given, directly or indirectly, to a disregard of law; but in its action in the matter before it the Senate should teach the wholesome lesson that a due observance of the provisions of law is alike the duty and interest of every citizen, whether acting in a private or public capacity, and that no attempt to ignore or evade its requirements can meet the approval or be sustained by the American Senate.

The State of Alabama has a right to be represented on this floor by a Senator chosen by the legislature of the State organized in conformity with the requirements of her constitution and laws. That right would be secured in the admission of Mr. Sykes. The undersigned therefore respectfully submit the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, having been duly and legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing March 4, 1873, is entitled to the seat in this body now held by the Hon. George E. Spencer.

ELI SAULSBURY.
WILLIAM T. HAMILTON.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1874.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Alabama, viz:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Francis W. Sykes."

An amendment to the resolution having been proposed by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland,

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Conkling, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

[The debate is found on pages 4287–4290 of the Congressional Record, vol. ii, part 5. Mr. Hamilton's speech is found on pages 323–331 of the Appendix, vol. ii, part 6.]

THURSDAY, May 28, 1874.

The President pro tempore announced that the morning hour had expired and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its adjournment yesterday, viz, the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Francis W. Sykes, claiming a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Francis W. Sykes."

The Senate resumed the consideration of the said resolution.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting—

"That the Hon. George E. Spencer, not having been elected a Senator from the State of Alabama by the lawful legislature of that State, is not entitled to a seat in this body,"

After debate,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 11, nays 33.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Davis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Ransom, and Saulsbury.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, to amend the resolution by striking out all after "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting—

"That Francis W. Sykes, having been duly and legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing March 4, 1873, is entitled to the seat in this body now held by the Hon. George E. Spencer,"

It was determined in the negative.

The question recurring on the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, viz:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Francis W. Sykes,"

On the question to agree thereto, it was determined in the affirmative.

[The debate is found on pages 4325–4330 of the Congressional Record, vol. ii, part 5.]

COMPENSATION OF MR. SYKES.

[First session of the Forty-third Congress.]

THURSDAY, May 28, 1874.

Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, late contestant for a seat in this body from the State of Alabama, be allowed the salary of a Senator from the 4th of March, 1873, up to the 28th day of March, 1874, and one mileage each way."

FRIDAY, June 5, 1874.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him on the 29th of May last, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay certain compensation to Francis W. Sykes, late claimant of a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama; and

An amendment having been proposed by Mr. Carpenter,

Pending debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed to to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, June 10, 1874.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by him from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 29th instant, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay certain compensation to Francis W. Sykes as a claimant to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Alabama.

An amendment having been proposed by Mr. Carpenter, and an amendment to the amendment having been proposed by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland,

After debate,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed to to-morrow.

[The debate is found on pages 4798–4800 of the Congressional Record, vol. ii, part 5.]

THURSDAY, June 11, 1874.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by him from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 29th May last, viz:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Francis W. Sykes, late contestant from the State of Alabama, out of the appropriations for compensation and mileage for Senators, the sum of $8,374.80, being the salary of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, inclusive."

On motion by Mr. Carpenter to amend the resolution in lines 4 and 5 by striking out "$8,374.80, being the salary of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, inclusive," and in lieu thereof inserting "$3,000;"

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, to amend the amendment by striking out "$3,000" and in lieu thereof inserting "$6,500,"

After debate, it was determined in the negative—yeas 25, nays 32.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony Bayard, Bogy, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stockton, Thurman, and Tipton.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Sargent, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. Carpenter,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the said resolution be postponed to to-morrow.

[The debate is found on pages 4850–4852 of the Congressional Record, vol. ii, part 5.]

[Second session of the Forty-third Congress.]

WEDNESDAY, December 23, 1874.

On motion by Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland,

Ordered, That the resolution directing the Secretary to pay Francis W. Sykes the salary of a Senator while contesting a seat in the Senate be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1875.

Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to pay to Francis W. Sykes, late contestant from the State of Alabama, the pay and mileage of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874."

[First session of the Forty-fourth Congress.]

THURSDAY, February 3, 1876.

Mr. Saulsbury submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Francis W. Sykes, late contestant from the State of Alabama, the pay and mileage of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874."

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1876.

Mr. Cooper, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Saulsbury, submitted on the 3d of February last, to pay Francis W. Sykes the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 135) thereon.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 8, 1876.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Cooper, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred Senate resolution No. 10, to pay Francis W. Sykes the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The rule established by the Senate in cases similar to the present one has been uniform. A person applying for a seat in this body by reason of an election by the legislature of a State, although his application has been refused, and another adjudged entitled to the seat, has been paid the amount he would have been entitled to receive if he had been admitted and served the time the contest was pending. The action of the Senate upon such cases has been with such great unanimity as to call for little or no debate. The reasons, therefore, upon which the rule is based can only be surmised. It may be said the person claims his seat in pursuance of an implied duty imposed upon him to thus assert the right of his State to be represented in this body, which duty he owes to the public, and that expenses incurred in the performance of a public duty should be paid out of the common treasury.

A proper respect for the action of a State in the choice of a Senator may also justify the rule.

The committee see nothing in the present case to take it out of the general rule; they therefore recommend the passage of the resolution.

SECOND INVESTIGATION OF MR. SPENCER'S ELECTION.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1875.

Mr. Spencer rose to a question of privilege, and, having addressed the Senate upon the subject of certain charges made in connection with his election as a Senator, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections are hereby instructed to investigate into and inquire whether in the election of George E. Spencer as a Senator in Congress from the State of Alabama there were used, or caused to be used and employed, corrupt means or corrupt practices to secure his election to the seat he now holds; and that said committee be empowered to administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, to take testimony, to employ stenographers and such clerical assistance as they may deem necessary, and to sit during the recess of Congress, if considered advisable, and to report the result of their investigations as soon as practicable."

TUESDAY, January 18, 1876.

Mr. Goldthwaite presented a report of the joint committee of the general assembly of Alabama, accompanied by a memorial and testimony, in regard to the alleged election of George E. Spencer as a Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, January 24, 1876.

Mr. Goldthwaite presented a memorial of the general assembly of the State of Alabama, praying that the seat in the United States Senate now held by George E. Spencer may be declared vacant; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1876.

Mr. Morton submitted the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That the sum of $15,000 be appropriated from the contingent fund of the Senate to defray the expenses of the investigation into the facts attending the election of the Hon. George E. Spencer as a member of this body by the legislature of Alabama; to be disbursed on the warrant of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

The Senate proceeded to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That it pass.

WEDNESDAY, May 3, 1876.

Mr. Morton submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That 300 copies of the testimony taken in the investigation of the charges against George E. Spencer be printed for the use of the Senate."

SATURDAY, May 20, 1876.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of the 16th December last to investigate into and inquire whether in the election of George E. Spencer as a Senator in Congress from the State of Alabama there were used and employed corrupt means or corrupt practices to secure his seat he now holds; and to which committee was referred the memorial of the legislature of Alabama charging that George E. Spencer had not been legally elected a Senator from that State, accompanied by a copy of certain testimony purporting to have been taken by a committee of said legislature, and a certain report of said committee thereon, submitted a report (No. 331) thereon, accompanied by the testimony taken by said Committee on Privileges and Elections, and a request that the said committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. Saulsbury asked and obtained leave of the Senate to submit, on some subsequent day, the views* of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing subject.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.†

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Morton (chairman), Logan, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Cooper.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MAY 20, 1876.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections beg leave to submit the following report:

On the 16th day of December, 1875, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be hereby instructed to investigate into and inquire whether in the election of George E. Spencer as a Senator in Congress from the State of Alabama there were used and employed corrupt means or corrupt practices to secure his election to the seat he now holds; and that the said committee be empowered to administer oaths, to send for persons and papers, to take testimony, to employ stenographers and such clerical assistance as they may deem necessary, and to sit during the recess of Congress if considered advisable, and to report the result of their investigations as soon as possible."

Afterward a memorial from the legislature of Alabama, charging that Mr. Spencer had not been duly and legally elected, which was accompanied by a copy of the testimony purporting to have been taken by a committee of that legislature, and a report of the committee upon the testimony, was also referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

This testimony was ex parte in its character, very much of it hearsay, and could not be received by the committee as evidence.

The question whether Mr. Spencer was elected by the lawful legislature of Alabama, raised in the memorial referred to, and in the specifications filed before the committee by the counsel, Mr. Morgan, who represented the State of Alabama, was considered by a majority of the committee to have been fully settled in the contest for the seat occupied by Mr. Spencer, before made, in the Senate by Mr. Sykes.

The question in that contest was whether what was known as the court-house legislature, by which Mr. Spencer was elected, or the capitol legislature, by which Mr. Sykes was elected, was the lawful legislature of Alabama. After full consideration and argument of counsel, it was determined by the committee and afterward by the Senate that the court-house legislature was the lawful one, and that Mr. Spencer and not Mr. Sykes was entitled to the seat.

*The views of the minority referred to were never presented

The question having been definitely settled, it was considered by the committee that it was not competent for the committee or the Senate to reopen it, and that it must be treated as res adjudicata.

Upon the other branch of the inquiry, as to whether Mr. Spencer, or his friends, had been guilty of bribery, corruption, or other unlawful practices in procuring his election, the committee made faithful and diligent inquiry. Mr. Morgan, counsel for the accusers, subpœnaed and examined many witnesses, and, after the testimony was over, supported the charge against Mr. Spencer by a lengthy argument.

Those charges were not proven in any respect. No witness testified that Mr. Spencer had given, directly or indirectly, or offered to give money, or anything of value, in consideration of votes, or support, in the Alabama legislature; nor was it shown that any of his friends had done so. Some hearsay testimony was offered to the effect that certain persons had said that they had received money in consideration for voting for Mr. Spencer for the Senate; but this testimony was ruled out by the committee. The persons alleged to have made these statements were competent witnesses, but were not produced, nor was it proven that any money had been paid to them for such a purpose by anybody, whether a known friend of Mr. Spencer or not.

The counsel for the accusers complain strongly of the rejection of such testimony; but its illegality and worthless character were too plain to require argument, and had it been admitted it might have contributed to make some scandal, but would have proved nothing. Attempts were made to offer the hearsay statements against Mr. Spencer of persons who were not shown to have been engaged with him in any conspiracy to procure his election by corruption or undue means, and by whose statements made in his absence he could not be bound by any known principle of law, which were also rejected by the committee.

While hearsay evidence was thus excluded, the door was thrown open widely to prove the payment of money by any person to any member of the legislature, or to be used with the legislature, to procure Mr. Spencer's election, by any person, whether such person was shown to be a friend of Mr. Spencer or not.

The committee deem it unnecessary to go into the full details of the case, and having thus given the general result, beg leave to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and memorial, and herewith submit copies of the testimony taken before the committee.

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. SPENCER'S EXPENSES.

THURSDAY, December 18, 1884.

Mr. Hoar presented a petition of George E. Spencer, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, praying to be reimbursed the amount necessarily incurred by him in defending his title to a seat in the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1885.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to George E. Spencer, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, the sum of $7,132, being the amount actually and necessarily expended by him in maintaining his title to his seat."

FRIDAY, February 20, 1885.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution given above, and it was Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1885.

Mr. Jones, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution (given above), reported it without amendment.

TUESDAY, March 3, 1885.

On motion by Mr. Jones, of Nevada, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (given above), and

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1877.]

L. Q. C. LAMAR,

Senator from Mississippi from March 6, 1877, till he resigned, March 9, 1885.

Mr. Lamar was first elected for the term beginning March 4, 1877. Objection being made March 5, 1877, to the oaths of office being administered to him, his credentials were laid on the table. The following day, the credentials were taken from the table after debate, and he was sworn. It appears from the debates that the objections to the admission of Mr. Lamar were upon the ground that the "State government in Mississippi was a usurpation." (An inquiry into alleged frauds in the election in Mississippi in November, 1875, had been made by a select committee and a report thereon submitted to the Senate August 7, 1876.) Most Senators proceeded upon the ground that Mr. Lamar had at least a prima facie title to the seat and should be sworn, though it was claimed that this rule had not been followed in the case of Mr. Pinchback, of Louisiana.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 2d sess. 44th Cong. (special session, March, 1877).

The debate is found on pages 5–15 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1877.

Mr. Alcorn presented the credentials of L. Q. C. Lamar, elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of Mississippi for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877; which were read.

MONDAY, March 5, 1877.

Mr. Anthony submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the credentials of Senators-elect in all disputed or contested cases lie upon the table until to-morrow."

Objection under the foregoing resolution having been made to the oaths of office being administered to Mr. L. Q. C. Lamar from Mississippi, whose credentials were heretofore presented,

Ordered, That his credentials lie on the table.

TUESDAY, March 6, 1877.

Mr. Wallace submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the credentials of L. Q. C. Lamar, Senator-elect from the State of Mississippi, be taken from the table and that he be sworn."

Mr. Spencer called for the reading of a report made to the Senate at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the subject of recent elections in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. Wallace having objected to the reading of the said report,

The Vice-President submitted the question to the Senate, Shall the report be read? and it was determined in the negative.

The question recurring on the resolution of Mr. Wallace,

On motion by Mr. Spencer to amend the resolution by striking out, in the last line thereof, the words "that he be sworn," and in lieu thereof inserting "be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when the committee shall be appointed,"

On the question to agree thereto,

After debate, it was determined in the negative—yeas 1, nays 58.

On motion by Mr. Spencer, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

The Senator who voted in the affirmative is Mr. Wadleigh.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Blaine, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Coke, Conkling, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Hoar, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan Kirkwood, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Maxey, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Randolph, Ransom, Rollins, Saulsbury, Saunders, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the resolution of Mr. Wallace,

On the question to agree thereto,

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 57, nays 1.

On motion by Mr. Spencer, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Blaine, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Coke, Conkling, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Hoar, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Kirkwood, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Saunders, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

The Senator who voted in the negative is Mr. Wadleigh.

So it was

Resolved, That the credentials of L. Q. C. Lamar, Senator-elect from the State of Mississippi, be taken from the table and that he be sworn.

Whereupon

The oaths prescribed by law were administered to Mr. Lamar by the Vice-President, and he took his seat in the Senate.

[Special session of the Senate, March, 1877.]

JOHN T. MORGAN,

Senator from Alabama from March 8, 1877. [Held seat until death in 1907.]

Mr. Morgan was first elected for the term beginning March 4, 1877. Objection being made March 5, 1877, to the oaths of office being administered to him, his credentials were laid on the table. The credentials were taken from the table March 8, after debate, and he was sworn. It appears from the debate that objection was made to his admission on the ground that the legislature elected in August, 1876—the one electing Mr. Morgan—had been fraudulently elected, and were not representatives of the people. (An investigation into the Alabama elections of 1876 had been made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and a report thereon submitted to the Senate March 3, 1877.) It further appears that the Senate proceeded upon the ground that Mr. Morgan had at least a prima facie title to the seat.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 44th Cong., 2d sess. (special session, March, 1877).

The debates are found on pages 24-31 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1877.

Mr. Gordon presented the credentials of John T. Morgan, elected a Senator by the legislature of Alabama for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877; which were read.

MONDAY, March 5, 1877.

Mr. Anthony submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the credentials of Senators-elect in all disputed or contested cases lie upon the table until to-morrow."

Objection under the foregoing resolution having been made to the oaths of office being administered to Mr. John T. Morgan, from Alabama, whose credentials were heretofore presented,

Ordered, That the credentials lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877.

Mr. Bayard submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the credentials of John T. Morgan, Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, be taken from the table, and that he be sworn."

On motion by Mr. Morrill, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THURSDAY, March 8, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Bayard, viz:

"Resolved, That the credentials of John T. Morgan, Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, be taken from the table, and that he be sworn."

On motion by Mr. Spencer, to amend the resolution by striking out, in the last line thereof the words "he be sworn," and in lieu thereof inserting "they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed,"

After debate, it was determined in the negative.

The question recurring on the resolution of Mr. Bayard, it was agreed to, as follows:

"Resolved, That the credentials of John T. Morgan, Senator-elect from the State of Alabama, be taken from the table, and that he be sworn."

Whereupon

Mr. Morgan appeared at the bar of the Senate, and the oaths prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. Morgan by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1877, and Forty-fifth Congress.]

DAVID T. CORBIN vs. M. C. BUTLER, of South Carolina.

February 13, 1877, the credentials of Mr. Corbin, elected for the term beginning March 4, 1877, were presented, and March 2, the credentials of Mr. Butler, elected for the same term, were presented. March 7, the Senate resolved that both credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed. November 26, the Senate resolved, after debate, that the committee be discharged from the consideration of Mr. Butler's credentials. November 30, Mr. Butler was sworn as a Senator. February 4, 1879, the committee reported that at the State election held in November, 1876, one hundred and twenty-four persons were to be voted for as members of the house of representatives; that the board of State canvassers declared that only one hundred and sixteen were duly elected; that fifty-nine of these met at the State-house November 28, and organized, being known as the Mackey house; that the other fifty-seven of those elected, together with eight persons having no certificates of election, met on the same day in a private hall and pretended to organize, being known as the Wallace house; that the Mackey house and an unquestioned senate elected Mr. Corbin December 12, 1876, whose credentials were signed by Governor Chamberlain, who was, until December 14, 1876, the unquestioned governor; that the Wallace house, with a minority of the senate, elected Mr. Butler December 19, 1876, whose credentials were signed by Governor Hampton. The committee reported the following conclusions: The Mackey house constituted the lawful house. Though composed of less than a majority of all the possible members of that body (one hundred and twenty-four) there was a "quorum to do business," which consisted of a "majority of the members chosen"—a majority of all those holding lawful certificates of election. Mr. Corbin was legally elected December 12, 1876, and there was no vacancy when Mr. Butler was elected. The Wallace house had no quorum when it organized, and was never a lawful body. The Wallace house had no senate to recognize it. The committee submitted a resolution that Mr. Corbin was duly elected and entitled to have the oath of office administered to him. A minority report held that the decision of the Senate, November 30, 1877, admitting Mr. Butler made the question res adjudicata; further, that fifty-nine members did not constitute a legal quorum under the constitution and laws of South Carolina, so that the Mackey house was not the legal house. A motion was made, February 25, 1879, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the committee, and it was determined in the negative. February 28, the Vice-President laid before the Senate a letter from Mr. Corbin, withdrawing his claim. No further action was taken by the Senate. Messrs. Corbin and Butler were allowed reimbursement of the necessary expenses of the contest.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 2d sess. 44th Cong., and 45th Cong., and the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 45th Cong., 3d sess, No. 707.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

TUESDAY, February 13, 1877.

Mr. Patterson presented the credentials of David T. Corbin, elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of South Carolina for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877; which were read.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1877.

Mr. Ransom presented the credentials of M. C. Butler, certified by Wade Hampton, as governor of South Carolina, to have been elected a United States Senator by the legislature of that State for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1877.]

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877.

Mr. Patterson submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the credentials of David T. Corbin and M. C. Butler, each claiming to be a Senator from the State of South Carolina, lie upon the table until the committees are appointed, and their credentials shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

[First session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

TUESDAY November 20, 1877.

Mr. Thurman submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina."

[The debate is found on pages 556–559 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

WEDNESDAY, November 21, 1877.

On motion by Mr. Thurman, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by him to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler; and

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Hoar that the resolution lie on the table,

Mr. Conkling demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

On motion by Mr. Thurman, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THURSDAY, November 22, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Thurman on the 20th instant, to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina; and,

The question being on the motion of Mr. Hoar that the resolution lie on the table, it was determined in the negative—yeas 30, nays 32.

The yeas and nays having been heretofore ordered,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

So the motion was not agreed to.

[Several amendments to the resolution of Mr. Thurman were then offered, none of which were agreed to. The debate is found on pages 603–605 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

MONDAY, November 26, 1877.

The Vice-President announced that the morning hour had expired, and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its last adjournment, viz, the resolution submitted by Mr. Thurman on the 20th instant to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina; and

The Senate resumed the consideration of the said resolution; and,

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Edmunds that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, it was determined in the negative—yeas 28, nays 30.

* * * * * * *

So the motion was not agreed to.

After further debate,

On motion by Mr. Edmunds to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire forthwith, and report as soon as may be, whether any threats, promises, or arrangements respecting existing or contemplated accusations or criminal prosecutions against any Senator, or any other corrupt or otherwise unlawful means or influences have been in any manner used or put in operation, directly or indirectly, by M. C. Butler, one of the claimants to a seat in the Senate from the State of South Carolina, or by any other Senator or other person, for the purpose of influencing the vote of any Senator on the question of discharging said committee from the consideration of said M. C. Butler's credentials or on the other question at the present session of the Senate; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sittings of the Senate,"

It was determined in the negative—yeas 27, nays 30.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, and Wadleigh.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Matthews, Merrimon, Morgan, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

[Several other amendments to the resolution of Mr. Thurman were then offered, none of which were agreed to.]

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 27.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Conover, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

So the resolution was agreed to.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Thurman submitted a motion that M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, be sworn as Senator from that State.

Mr. Edmunds objected to the consideration of the motion this day.

WEDNESDAY, November 28, 1877.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution to admit William Pitt Kellogg to a seat in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. Thurman to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

"That M. C. Butler be now sworn as a Senator from the State of South Carolina,"

After debate,

On the question to agree thereto, the yeas were 30 and the nays were 30.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

The vote of the Senate being equally divided,

The Vice-President voted in the negative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Upon the announcement of the result of the vote on the amendment,

Mr. Thurman rose to a question of order, and submitted that the provision of the Constitution that the Vice-President shall have no vote unless where the Senate is equally divided does not apply to the case of seating a member; but that questions of seating a member should be left to the Senators themselves, under the provision that each House shall be the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members; and,

After debate,

Mr. Thurman withdrew the question of order.

[The debate is found on pages 730–740 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, November 30, 1877.

On motion by Mr. Thurman that M. C. Butler be now sworn as a Senator from the State of South Carolina, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 28.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Cockrell, Coke, Conover, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Thurman, Voorhees, Wallace, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hoar, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McMillan, Matthews, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Rollins, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, and Wadleigh.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. M. C. Butler then appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[Second session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

THURSDAY, December 13, 1877.

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of David T. Corbin, praying that his right to a seat in the Senate as Senator from South Carolina may be inquired into and determined by the Senate upon its merits.

SATURDAY, December 15, 1877.

Mr. Butler submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire forthwith, and report as soon as may be, whether any threats, promises, or arrangements respecting existing or contemplated accusations or criminal prosecutions against any Senator, or any other corrupt or otherwise unlawful means or influences have been in any manner used or put in operation, directly or indirectly, by M. C. Butler, one of the Senators from the State of South Carolina, or by any other Senator or other person, for the purpose of influencing the vote of Senators on the question of discharging said committee from the consideration of said M. C. Butler's credentials or the other question at the late session of the Senate; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit during the sittings of the Senate."

TUESDAY, March 26, 1878.

On motion by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin,

Ordered, That the petition of David T. Corbin, praying that his right to a seat in the Senate may be inquired into and determined, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, June 4, 1878.

Mr. Wadleigh submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That one hundred copies of the arguments before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Messrs. Corbin and Butler be printed for the use of the committee."

[Third session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

THURSDAY, December 5, 1878.

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That one hundred copies of the report made to the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, in the matter of the claim of David T. Corbin to a seat in this body as Senator from the State of South Carolina be printed for the use of said committee."

THURSDAY, January 23, 1879.

Mr. Wadleigh submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That one hundred copies of the minority report of the subcommittee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Messrs. Butler and Corbin be printed for the use of the committee."

TUESDAY, February 4, 1879.

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of David T. Corbin, claiming to be Senator-elect from the State of South Carolina, and his petition praying an inquiry into his right to a seat in the Senate, submitted a report (No. 707) accompanied by the following resolution:

"Resolved, That David T. Corbin was on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1876, duly elected by the legislature of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State in the Congress of the United States for the term of six years commencing on the 4th of March, A. D. 1877, and that as such he is entitled to have the oath of office administered to him."

Mr. Hill asked and obtained leave to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing case; which were ordered to be printed, to accompany the report (No. 707).

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Wadleigh (chairman), Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Ingalls, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hill.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 4, 1879.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the credentials of David T. Corbin and M. C. Butler, each claiming to be Senator-elect from the State of South Carolina, submit the following report:

The resolution of the Senate of March 7, 1877, referring this case, is as follows:

"Resolved, That the credentials of David T. Corbin and M. C. Butler, each claiming to be a Senator from the State of South Carolina, lie on the table until the committees are appointed, and their credentials shall then be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections."

On the 9th day of March the committees were appointed, and, without any further action on the part of the Senate, this committee received the credentials of David T. Corbin and M. C. Butler. The committee took no action upon these credentials during the special session convened in March, 1877. At the called session, convened on the 15th October, 1877, the Senate passed an order by which the subjects referred to the committees and not acted upon at the close of the March session were returned to the several committees to which they had been referred. Under this order these credentials were returned to this committee.

On the 20th of November, 1877, Mr. Thurman offered a resolution that "the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler." This resolution is to be found in the Congressional Record of November 21, page 12. The final vote upon that question was taken November 30, 1877, and the credentials of Mr. Butler were withdrawn from the committee.

On the 22d of November, 1877, Mr. Edmunds offered an amendment to the resolution of Mr. Thurman for the purpose of attaching the name of D. T. Corbin to the resolution. It appears upon page 27 of the Congressional Record of November 23:

"Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am now going to make a motion to amend, that I cannot help thinking will get the votes of the gentlemen who voted against the former proposition. I am sorry I had not thought of it before, because in that case I should have got all their votes in the first instance. After the word 'credentials,' as it stands in the resolution, I move to insert the words 'of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, of Louisiana, and,' so that the resolution will read, if amended as I now propose, 'that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the consideration of the credentials of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, of Louisiana, and of M. C Butler, of South Carolina'; and I move to add also, after 'Butler,' the words 'and D. T. Corbin,' so as to put them all on that equality where the fourteenth amendment, that we all believe in now, places them."

That motion, as appears on the same page of the Record, was not agreed to.

On the 30th of November, 1877, the Senate having under consideration the contested-election case of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, the following occurred:

"Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I ask the liberty to venture to suggest once more the possibility of our coming to an understanding as to taking a vote upon these questions, and I ask that unanimous consent be given in the usual method, not that the Journal shall bind as an order, but the understanding of Senators does: I ask unanimous consent to come to this understanding among Senators:

"'First, to vote on the Kellogg-Spofford case at or before 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. to-day'—

"By which I mean the next 2 o'clock and 30 minutes, one hour from this time by the clock—

"'The chairman of the committee or any one allowed by him to have the last hour to sum up if desired.'

"Mr. THURMAN. That would give him all the time now.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but your side has had all the evening on the Kellogg case.

"Mr. THURMAN. Go ahead.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. 'Second, to vote on the Butler-Corbin case at or before the expiration of one hour after the Kellogg-Spofford case is disposed of, the time to be equally divided, the chairman of the committee or some one for him to have the last thirty minutes to close the debate.'

"I ask unanimous consent to come to that understanding, Mr. President.

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

"Mr. GARLAND. Is there nothing, I ask the Senator from Vermont, of the other case?

"Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose nothing. I ask unanimous consent for that I have named, nothing more, nothing less.

"Mr. GARLAND. I do not think it is an improper proposition at all.

"Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I hope the proposition will be agreed to, and I ask my Democratic friends on this floor to agree to it and to trust to me that it will result in an arrangement perfectly honorable and fair to both parties.

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposition? The Chair hears none.

"Several SENATORS. Question! Question!"—(Congressional Record, vol. vi, 1877, pages 796, 797.)

The resolution seating Mr. Kellogg was then adopted.

Thereupon Mr. Thurman moved that M. C. Butler be sworn in as Senator from South Carolina, and the resolution was voted upon and adopted without debate.

On the 13th of December, 1877, Mr. Corbin's petition was presented to the Senate, asking that his claim to a seat in the Senate be considered upon its merits.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States:

Your petitioner, David T. Corbin, of the State of South Carolina, shows to your honorable body that he was, on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1876, duly and lawfully elected by the legislature of the State of South Carolina to the office of United States Senator from that State for the term of six years commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1877.

That in said election all the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States were complied with, and your petitioner was regularly and duly declared elected by the legislature of said State, and duly commissioned accordingly by the governor of said State.

And your petitioner further shows that his credentials were presented to your honorable body before the close of the last regular session; and at the commencement of the extra session in March last said credentials, together with the credentials of M. C. Butler (who claimed to have been elected also Senator from South Carolina), were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of your honorable body.

And your petitioner shows, on information and belief, that his said credentials have, since said reference of them to said committee, remained in the possession of said committee, and that no action has been taken thereon, either by said committee or the Senate.

And your petitioner now prays that your honorable body will, in justice to your petitioner, and in justice to the legislature of the State of South Carolina that elected and the governor that commissioned him, inquire into, hear, and determine on their merits the claim and right of your petitioner to a seat in your honorable body as Senator from the State of South Carolina.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DAVID T. CORBIN.

On the 26th day of March, 1878, this petition was referred to this committee. At the very outset of the committee's examination of Mr. Corbin's claim they were met with a plea to their jurisdiction, submitted by the counsel of Mr. M. C. Butler, as follows:

"The sitting member respectfully submits that the Committee on Privileges and Elections cannot entertain jurisdiction of the contestant's claim to the seat of a Senator from the State of South Carolina in the Congress of the United States. He bases his denial of the right of the committee to take jurisdiction of the case upon the following grounds:

"1. In the adjudication of a contested-election case, under that clause of the Constitution which makes each House "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," the Senate acts as a judicial tribunal. And the general principle that every question in issue settled by the final judgment of a judicial tribunal becomes res judicata as between the parties thereto applies to judgments of the Senate in contested-election cases.

"2. The contestant's petition, referred to the committee March 26, 1878, suggests no question which was not adjudicated by the Senate in the determination of this cause at the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress; nor was any question involved in the contestant's case as presented to the committee or to the Senate at that session which was not adjudicated in that determination.

"3. Inasmuch as the Senate has no set forms for its judicial decisions, the nature and scope of an adjudication will be determined, not by the mere form of the judgment, but by the whole record of the case.

"4. When the Senate adjudicates a contested-election case upon its merits the jurisdition of the committee over the case ipso facto terminates, whatever formalities may or may not attend the termination of such jurisdiction.

"5. Judicial tribunals of last resort will not rehear a cause after final judgment, on the application of a party, but only on a motion to reconsider made by a member of the tribunal who concurred in the decision; nor even in such a case after the expiration of the term at which the judgment is rendered. And this principle applies to decisions made by the Senate in contested-election cases."

An elaborate discussion of the proposition stated in this plea to the jurisdiction is not necessary, as while expressing no opinion on their general soundness, the committee overruled the plea on the ground that the same is not supported by the facts in the case. The claim or right of Mr. Corbin to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of South Carolina is not res adjudicata, because in point of fact it has not been passed upon and adjudicated by the Senate.

To ascertain what has and what has not been determined in any given case, reference must be had to the record of the proceedings taken therein.

If the record shows the controversy between the parties determined upon a consideration of the merits, then that determination binds the parties and their privies, and precludes further inquiry.

The facts above stated, from the records of the Senate in regard to Mr. Corbin's case, show that his credentials were referred to this committee of the Senate, and that no action of the Senate has been had to withdraw them from the committee. And the fact is that the credentials have been with the committee to the present time by the direct action of the Senate. No case has in any form been made up between Mr. Corbin and Mr. Butler and submitted to the Senate to be passed upon, and no case, as between them, has been passed upon by the Senate.

Mr. Thurman's resolution, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, meant precisely what it said. Its language is too clear to be misunderstood. It indicates a mere purpose on the part of the mover to dispense with the further service of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the consideration of Mr. Butler's credentials.

If there was any question as to his purpose, Mr. Thurman's remarks on introducing it would relieve it of any doubt. He said, among other things, on introducing it—

* * * * * * *

"I do not ask them in this resolution to decide that Mr. Butler is chosen Senator from South Carolina. I ask that the committee be discharged from the consideration of his credentials. Any one who believes Mr. Corbin to have been elected can make a like motion in his case, and thus the whole case will be before the Senate; and all I ask is that the Senate will hear and decide."

In the discussion that followed on this resolution the Record shows it was, without exception, the purpose of Senators to show why this resolution on the one hand should be adopted, and on the other why it should not be adopted. Much was incidentally said by individual Senators as to the validity of the claims of Mr. Butler and Mr. Corbin respectively, but this was, as plainly appears, with a view to influence action upon the pending resolution But whatever individual Senators said in the course of the discussion, the action of the Senate is to be looked to finally to acertain what was determined. When the resolution was adopted its effect was simply to bring before the Senate the credentials of M. C. Butler. It did not bring before the Senate the credentials of D. T. Corbin.

After Mr. Butler's credentials were thus brought before the Senate, a motion was made that he be sworn in as Senator from South Carolina, and without debate the vote was taken and the motion adopted. Mr. Butler was then sworn in. Swearing in a Senator on his credentials has always been regarded as admitting him to his seat on the prima facie case made by those credentials. There is no instance in the history of the Senate where a member has been so sworn in and allowed to take his seat as Senator that such admission has been held to preclude investigation into the merits of his title. On the other hand the precedents are exactly the reverse. The cases of James Shields of Illinois, James Harlan of Iowa, Bright and Fitch of Indiana, and of Mallory of Florida, reported in Bartlett's Contested Election Cases in Congress, at pages 606 621, 629, and 668, are examples of this rule.

But the principle of res adjudicata can only apply where parties to the controversy have been before the court or body having jurisdiction thereof, and have been heard upon the merits of their respective claims, and a decision has been rendered thereon.

In the present case Mr. Corbin has never been a party before the Senate to any controversy with Mr. Butler respecting his rights to a seat as Senator. The Senate, by its action, has not permitted him to be a party to any such controversy, and the merits of his case have never been passed upon by the Senate. Therefore, the doctrine of res adjudicata has no application to the case.

So holding, the committee have proceeded to inquire into the grounds of Mr. Corbin's claim to a seat in the United States Senate as Senator from the State of South Carolina.

The grounds upon which his claim rests are as follows:

A general election was held in that State November 7, 1876, for State and county officers, and for members of the house of representatives of the State legislature, and for a part of the members of the State senate.

The returns of this election were made, first, by the several boards of precinct managers—each board consisting of three members—to the commissioners of election for their respective counties, called in this connection boards of "county canvassers"; second, by the several boards of county canvassers to the board of State canvassers at Columbia, the capital of the State; and, third, by the board of State canvassers who finally acted upon the returns and determined and declared the results.

The board of State canvassers on November 22, 1876, completed their canvass of this election and returned as duly elected sixteen (16) State senators and one hundred and sixteen (116) members of the house of representatives.

Subsequently, and previous to November 28, 1876, the day of the meeting of the legislature, the secretary of state delivered the official certificate of his election to each person declared elected by the board of State canvassers.

On the 28th day of November, 1876, the newly elected senators, with those holding over from the former election, met and organized as the senate, in the senate chamber in the State-house. The legality of the senate as a legislative body and the regularity of its organization are not now and never have been questioned.

On the same day fifty-nine (59) of the persons declared elected by the board of State canvassers met in the hall of the house of representatives in the State-house and organized as the house of representatives, the other fifty-seven members, holding certificates of election from the board of State canvassers, refusing to meet with them. These fifty-seven members met in a private hall in the city of Columbia, and pretended to organize as a house of representatives by the election of William H. Wallace as speaker. The fifty-nine members at the State-house elected E. W. M. Mackey speaker.

The two bodies organized at the State-house recognized each other, respectively, as the senate and house of representatives of the State by the interchange of official communications pertaining to legislative business. They also officially recognized Governor Chamberlain as the governor of the State, and were officially recognized by him as the senate and house of representatives, together constituting the legislature of the State.

On November 29, 1876, five persons who contested the election of the persons declared elected by the board of State canvassers as representatives of Barnwell County were declared by this house of representatives at the State-house to be entitled to seats, and were admitted and sworn in as members.

On December 2, 1876, five persons who in like manner contested the election of the persons declared elected by the board of State canvassers as representatives of Abbeville County were declared by this house to be entitled to seats, and were admitted and sworn in as members.

On December 5, 1876, four other persons, contestants for seats from Aiken County, were in like manner admitted and sworn in as members.

The members thus admitted, with the original membership of fifty-nine, make the whole number of members of this house of representatives (commonly known as the Mackey house) seventy-three.

On December 2, 1876, this house of representatives considered the matter of the election for members of the house of representatives in Edgefield and Laurens Counties, and declared that no valid election was held in those counties on the 7th of November, 1876.

On the 12th day of December, 1876, being the second Tuesday after the said 28th day of November, 1876, the two bodies above described proceeded, in the manner prescribed by the statutes of the United States (U. S. Rev. Stat., Tit. II, ch. 1, p. 3), to elect a Senator in Congress.

D. T. Corbin received a majority of all the votes cast in both bodies on December 12, 1876.

On the following day, December 13, 1876, the two bodies convened in joint assembly at 12 o'clock meridian; the journal of each house was read; and it appearing that D. T. Corbin had received a majority of all the votes in each house, he was declared duly elected Senator.

Mr. Corbin's credentials were signed on December 13, 1876, by Governor Chamberlain, who was, until December 14, 1876, the unquestioned governor of the State, General Hampton not claiming to hold the office until after his inauguration on December 14, 1876.

Upon this general statement of facts arises the question, was the election of Mr. Corbin valid, and is he now entitled to a seat in this body as a Senator from the State of South Carolina?

I. It has already been stated that no question has ever been made as to the complete validity, as a legislative body and a constituent house of the general assembly, of the senate which sat in the State-house and co-operated with the house of representatives, in which Mr. Corbin received a majority of votes. No other body claimed to be the senate.

This senate never in any manner recognized the existence, as a legislative body, of the other assemblage which assumed to be the house of representatives (commonly known as the Wallace house), and which met in a private hall in Columbia.

The action of this senate, therefore, so far as it enters into the title of Mr. Corbin, need not be further discussed. It was valid.

The part performed by the house of representatives which sat in the State-house in the election of Mr. Corbin presents the most important question which arises in this case.

The validity of this body is called in question. It is claimed, in denial of Mr. Corbin's title, that this body was never a valid legislative body under the constitution and laws of South Carolina; that it never had a quorum of lawfully elected members; that all its acts were null and void.

The facts upon which this question must be decided are these:

The constitution of the State, Article II, section 4, provides as follows:

"The house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members, to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of inhabitants in each."

Article II, section 14, is as follows:

"Each house shall judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members; and a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business."

At the election of November 7, 1876, one hundred and twenty-four persons were to be voted for as members of the house of representatives. Of this number, constituting a full house, the board of State canvassers declared that only one hundred and sixteen were duly elected, and the secretary of state issued certificates of election to only one hundred and sixteen, the canvassers at the same time placing upon the records a declaration of their inability, by reason of unlawful influences and practices in the election, to determine that any persons had been duly elected as representatives for the counties of Edgefield and Laurens.

Of the one hundred and sixteen persons thus declared elected by the board of State canvassers, and holding certificates of election from the secretary of state, fifty-nine took part in the organization of the house of representatives in the State-house on November 28, 1876, being a majority of all the members declared elected by the board of State canvassers and holding certificates of election from the secretary of state.

Was the body thus composed and organized the legal house of representatives of the State?

Attention has been called to the fact that after the organization of the house of representatives which elected Mr. Corbin certain of those who took part in that organization withdrew and acted with another assemblage calling itself the house of representatives, thereby reducing the number of canvassing board members sitting in the Mackey house from fifty-nine to fifty-three, of whom only forty-four voted for Mr. Corbin.

There is no force in these suggestions, because the fact is that the number of members who acted with the Mackey house was never reduced below fifty-nine. It is true that a few of those who formed part of the original fifty-nine canvassing board members of the Mackey house left their seats in the State-house and joined the Wallace house; but before a single such person had left the Mackey house had, upon contests duly made, admitted other members in number more than equal to those who afterward left.

If, therefore, the original house of fifty-nine members was a lawful house on the day of its organization, it was a lawful house at all times thereafter till its final adjournment December 22, 1876. If it was a lawful house for any purpose it was a lawful house for the purpose of deciding contested elections of its own members and for admitting those whom it might adjudge to be lawfully elected.

The statement that out of the original fifty-nine who organized the Mackey house only forty-four voted for Mr. Corbin has no significance. At the time of his election the inquiry was not how many canvassing board members voted for Mr. Corbin, but how many lawful members voted for him. If the house was lawfully organized on November 28, then the members admitted on the 29th, and subsequently, were lawful members, entitled to all the rights and powers belonging to any members.

But to the point of the legality of the Mackey house.

The constitutional provisions which regulate the matter of a legislative quorum in South Carolina are (1) that "the house shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members," and (2) that "a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business."

Stated in its most condensed form, the inquiry here is, what is the meaning of the phrase "a majority of each house"? Does it mean a majority of one hundred and twenty-four or a majority of the members duly elected or qualified?

As an original question it would seem that there are strong reasons why the latter view should be adopted.

If the former view be adopted a contingency may easily occur in which it will be absolutely impossible to organize a lawful house. If under any circumstances there should be a failure to elect a majority of the whole possible representation, the government would be brought at once to a dead stop; nor would there be any power anywhere to remove the obstruction.

In opposition to this view it is said that if it be held that a number less than a majority of the whole possible representation constitute a quorum, then under some circumstances it will be in the power of a small fraction of the whole representation to hold and exercise the powers of the house. This is admitted; but such a danger will not menace the life itself of the State. The government will be able to go on without recourse to extra legal remedies.

All governments aim at self-perpetuation. No element of self-destruction is intentionally admitted into the framework or fundamental law of a State. All constitutional provisions should therefore receive a construction, if possible, which shall be in harmony with this idea of the perpetuity of the government, of its unbroken life and efficiency. If the rule were adopted that a quorum of the house of representatives of South Carolina must consist of at least sixty-three members, then if from any cause sixty-three members should not be elected, it would be impossible by any constitutional methods to obtain a house of representatives at least until the next general election.

No speaker could be chosen; no writs of election could be issued. Did the fifty-nine members composing the body at the State-house constitute a quorum of the house of representatives?

The most controlling decisions upon this question are those of the two Houses of Congress.

The Constitution of the United States and the constitution of South Carolina may be said to contain identical provisions upon this point. The Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years.—(Article I, section 3.)

"The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative."—(Article I, section 2.)

The only respect in which these provisions differ from the corresponding provisions of the constitution of South Carolina is that here the numerical aggregate of Senators and Representatives is not stated. The rule of representation is laid down, and under that rule there is always at any specified point of time a fixed number of Senators and Representatives in Congress, precisely as much so as in South Carolina.

In principle these two constitutional provisions are identical, and it is idle to insist that the mere verbal difference is of the least importance.

The provisions respecting a quorum in the Constitution of the United States and that of South Carolina are identical in terms, namely:

"A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business."

It will be found that in the Senate of the United States prior to 1862 it was held as a matter of parliamentary practice in some instances that a quorum consisted of a majority of the whole possible representation, and in other instances of a majority of Senators elected and qualified.

The question does not appear to have been discussed by the Senate, or to have been maturely considered, until after April 11, 1862. On that day Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, offered a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in these words:

"Resolved, That a majority of the Senators duly elected and entitled to seats in this body is a constitutional quorum."—(Congressional Globe, April 11, 1862.)

On July 9, 1862, this resolution was debated in the Senate and laid upon the table by a vote of 19 to 18.

On March 7, 1864, Mr. Sherman offered a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in these words:

"Resolved, That a quorum of the Senate consists of a majority of the Senators duly chosen or qualified."

On May 3, 1864, the Committee on the Judiciary having been discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, it was taken up and debated. On this and the following day the subject was elaborately discussed, especially by Senators Carlisle and Davis against the resolution, and by Senators Johnson and Sherman in its favor. The words "or qualified" having been struck out, the resolution was adopted by a vote of 26 to 11, May 4, 1864, in these words:

"Resolved, That a quorum of the Senate consists of a majority of the Senators duly chosen."—(Congressional Globe, March 7, May 3 and 4, 1864.)

The precedents in the House of Representatives prior to 1861 had been varying, but here, as in the Senate, the subject does not appear to have been maturely considered until 1861. During the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, in the House of Representatives, Speaker Grow finally decided that a quorum of the House consisted of a majority of the members chosen, and he was sustained by the House in this decision.—(Journal H. R., 1st sess. 37th Congress.)

The effort has sometimes been made to disparage this precedent by stating that it was made under the stress of a necessity to secure an organization of the House. This is a mistake. The decision was made fifteen days after the organization of the House, and upon a question which did not involve the question of the validity of the organization.

The resolution adopted by the Senate in 1864 has since been adopted by the Senate as a permanent rule, and now appears in Rule 1.

If, in opposition to these precedents, it is urged that they were made because of special circumstances then existing, or upon certain constitutional theories regarding the status of the States then in rebellion, the answer is that there is no doubt that the peril of an opposite construction did lead to the final reversal of former precedents. And justly so. One of the truest canons of constitutional construction is that which adopts the construction which best effectuates the purpose of the instrument or provision to be construed. A construction which leads directly to the practical paralysis of the legislative power of a State can never be admitted.

Professor Farrar, in his Manual of the Constitution of the United States, page 166, says in relation to the constitutional provision respecting a quorum that "this has been held to be a majority of the members actually sworn in and entitled to seats at the time, and not a majority of a full delegation from all the States."

Another precedent arose in the Senate of the United States on March 2, 1861, when a proposition to amend the Constitution was on its passage. The Constitution, upon this point, provides that "Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution," &c.

When the vote was taken in the Senate, March 2, 1861, Mr. Trumbull raised the point of order that this provision required two-thirds of all the Senators which all the States were entitled to elect. The Presiding Officer overruled the point of order, and upon appeal the ruling was sustained by a vote of 33 to 1.

Another precedent of considerable force is found in connection with the ratification of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. The constitution of Indiana provided that two-thirds of each house should constitute a quorum. In 1867 certain members of the legislature resigned in order to defeat a vote upon the ratification of the amendment. The remaining members thereupon decided that two-thirds of the actual membership constituted a quorum, and proceeded to ratify the amendment. This action was certified in forwarding the vote of the legislature on the ratification of the amendment. No question was raised by Congress in regard to the legality of the vote, and the vote of Indiana, as thus cast, was accepted and counted.

The case of State vs. Huggins, 1 McCord, 139, decided in the court of appeals in South Carolina, is in point. Eighteen managers of election were appointed by the legislature for the district of Georgetown. Two had refused to qualify, one was dead, and one was disqualified, reducing the number to fourteen. It was held by the court that a majority of fourteen properly formed the board of managers for the district to determine the validity of the election of a sheriff, a majority of those qualified to serve, and not a majority of the whole number appointed, being a lawful quorum.

Under the provision of the Constitution of the United States that "each House shall be judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," the Senate is the sole judge of this matter. The action, opinion, or decision of any other body is, therefore, entitled to such weight or respect only as may be due to the reasons which support it.

It is proper to consider the connection of the supreme court of the State of South Carolina with this case. And it may be remarked that this presents the most remarkable and, perhaps, unfortunate feature of the controversy. That court may be said, without injustice, to have taken part in the purely political contests of the State. Instead of leaving such contests to be settled by other departments of the government, where they properly belong, the court engaged in those contests.

The action of that court was taken under these circumstances: After the Mackey house and the Wallace house were each organized, the former with fifty-nine and the latter with fifty-seven members declared elected by the canvassing board, a petition was presented to the supreme court by Mr. Wallace, as speaker of the Wallace house, asking a mandamus to compel the secretary of state and the speaker of the Mackey house to deliver to him the returns of the election for governor and lieutenant-governor.

By Article III, section 4, of the constitution of the State, these returns are required to be sent by the managers of the election to the secretary of state, who is required to return them to the speaker of the house of representatives.

By the return of the secretary of state to the rule to show cause, issued by the supreme court upon the petition above stated, it appeared that that officer had delivered the returns to the speaker of the Mackey house.

The return of the speaker of the Mackey house showed that he had received the returns from the secretary of state, and held them by virtue of his office as speaker, and he denied the power and jurisdiction of the court in the matter.

The court thereupon reserved the question as to the secretary of state for further argument, and dismissed the petition as to Speaker Mackey.

In coming to this conclusion, the court said that "sixty-three members were in their seats when Mr. Wallace was elected. * * * That the house of representatives consisted of one hundred and twenty-four members, and sixty-three were necessary for a quorum to do business. * * * That all the members had certificates from the secretary of state except eight, and the qualification of these eight was established by the proceedings in this court. * * * That no matter what was the character of the certificates they had, the return of the board of State canvassers to the court, showing that they had received the greatest number of votes in their particular counties, entitled them to access to the floor for the purpose of organization."

In taking cognizance of this matter and rendering a decision therein the court plainly transgressed the limits of its judicial powers, and its decision is void and binding on no one.

The constitution of the State, in section 26 of Article I, provides that "in the government of this Commonwealth the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the government shall be forever separate and distinct from each other."

That the due organization of the house of representatives is a legislative power or function, and not a judicial one, seems too clear for argument. Two bodies were claiming each to be the lawful house of representatives. This was a purely political question. It was a question between two sections or parts of one legislative body, each claiming to represent that body. No other questions were involved.

Whether Mackey or Wallace was entitled to have the election returns was a question which directly involved the action of the members of the legislative body, not in its effects upon citizens generally, but in relation to the due organization of that body under powers granted to it alone by the constitution.

The interposition of the court was not only without authority, but was also absolutely unnecessary. There was ample power in the lawful house of representatives to afford the necessary remedy in the matter if any remedy was needed.

The judgment of the court itself shows for another reason its want of jurisdiction over the case. It held that Mackey, not being an official person, could not be reached by mandamus and dismissed the petition. It could grant no relief, accomplish no result, and yet it proceeded to express an opinion. This was extrajudicial. The court must have recognized this dilemma at the outset, namely, if Mackey is speaker he is the lawful custodian of the returns; if he is not speaker he is not such an official person as can be reached by mandamus. Hence, in either event, no writ could have been issued, and nothing remained but to dismiss the petition.

Under these circumstances, the expression of an opinion that Wallace was the speaker and that sixty-three members are necessary to form a quorum was utterly uncalled for, a mere empty obiter dictum.

When, therefore, it is claimed that the supreme court of the State is empowered to construe the constitution, and hence to decide upon the question of a quorum, the answer is that this is true only when the court has a proper case before it requiring the decision of such a question.

But further, it is to be noted that the court in giving this opinion assumed the fact, now denied, that one hundred and twenty-four members of the house, instead of one hundred and sixteen, had been in fact chosen.

The supreme court gave no reason for the opinion that sixty-three members were necessary to form a quorum. It was their unsupported opinion, a dictum in every sense, not expressed in the course of reasoning or discussion leading to a judgment, and wholly unsupported by argument.

In Carroll vs. Lessee of Carroll, 16 How., 28, Judge Curtis said: "This court, and other courts organized under the common law, has never held itself bound by any part of an opinion which was not needful to the ascertainment of the right or title in question between the parties. In Cohens vs. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 399, this court was much pressed with some portion of its opinion in the case of Marbury vs. Madison. And Mr. Chief-Justice Marshall said: 'It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit, when the very point is presented. The reason of this maxim is obvious. The question actually before the court is investigated with care, and considered in its full extent; other principles which may serve to illustrate it are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all other cases is seldom completely investigated.' The cases of ex parte Christy, 3 How., 292, and Jenness vs. Peck, 7 How., 612, are an illustration of the rule that any opinion given here or elsewhere cannot be relied on as a binding authority unless the case called for its expression. Its weight of reason must depend on what it contains."

The conclusion on this point is that the construction of that provision of the Constitution of the United States relative to a quorum given by both Houses of Congress is applicable to a like provision in the constitution of the State of South Carolina.

It is a construction dictated by sound reason and public policy. And if it is a safe and sound construction of the Constitution of the United States it is equally a safe and sound construction of the constitution of the State of South Carolina.

A quorum, therefore, of either house of the legislature of South Carolina must be held to be a majority of the members chosen.

Legality of the action of the board of State canvassers.

There is another question lying back of those already discussed which must receive attention, viz: Was the action of the board of State canvassers in refusing to certify the election of members of the house for Edgefield and Laurens Counties legal?

The fact has already been stated that the board of State canvassers did not determine and declare any persons elected to the house of representatives for Edgefield and Laurens Counties. It may also be mentioned here that, in consequence of this action of the board of State canvassers, no person representing Edgefield or Laurens Counties took part in the organization of the Mackey house.

The provisions of the statutes of South Carolina defining the powers and duties of the canvassing boards which are important to the present question are as follows:

"SEC. 16. The board of county canvassers shall then proceed to count the votes of the county, and shall make such statements thereof as the nature of the election shall require within ten days of the time of the first meeting as a board of county canvassers, and shall transmit to the board of State canvassers any protest and all papers relating to the election.

"SEC. 24. The board of State canvassers shall, upon certified copies of the statements made by the board of county canvassers, proceed to make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for the various officers, and for each of them voted for, distinguishing the several counties in which they were given. They shall certify such statements to be correct, and subscribe the same with their proper names.

"SEC. 25. They shall make and subscribe, on the proper statement, a certificate of their determination, and shall deliver the same to the secretary of state.

"SEC. 26. Upon such statements they shall then proceed to determine and declare what persons have been by the greatest number of votes duly elected to such offices or either of them. They shall have power, and it is made their duty, to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not, by the constitution, reside in some other body.

"SEC. 27. The board shall have power to adjourn from day to day for a term not exceeding ten days."

A large mass of evidence in the form of affidavits was laid before the board of State canvassers, tending to show irregularities and illegal influences affecting the election in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, to such an extent as to render it impossible for the board to determine and declare who had been duly elected. A summary of that evidence appears in the "statement" of Mr. Corbin's case, and need not be repeated here.

Under the provisions of the statutes which have now been presented, and upon the evidences affecting the election in Edgefield and Laurens Counties referred to, the board of State canvassers determined that they could make no statement or determination of the election in those counties.

The board of State canvassers was authorized to reach such a conclusion if, in their judgment, the facts presented to them warranted it. They were required "to proceed to determine and declare what persons have been by the greatest number of votes duly elected to such offices, or either of them. In the present instance they found themselves unable to determine and declare that any persons had been by the greatest number of votes duly elected as representatives for Edgefield and Laurens Counties, and they so declared. If, for purposes of argument, it were here admitted that it was the duty of the board to declare what persons appeared to be elected upon the face of the returns, still until they did so declare, or until the house of representatives itself had acted upon the question, the persons claiming to be elected as representatives for these counties could have no claim to take part in the organization or proceedings of the house of representatives.

It has been claimed in argument that the action of the board of State canvassers was illegal because they undertook to decide a case under protest or contest, when the power to do so resided, by the constitution, in the house of representatives itself. The answer to this is that they did not undertake to decide any cases under protest or contest, or to decide at all upon the final right of any person to sit as representative for Edgefield or Laurens Counties. Their action may more properly be described as a reference of the matter to that body which, by law, had a right to pass finally upon the question of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members.

It is true that in many, and perhaps most of the States, the powers and duties of the returning or canvassing boards have been held to be merely ministerial, consisting in the aggregation of the several returns from the various voting precincts throughout the State. The question, however, whether the powers and duties of a particular canvassing board are merely ministerial or not will always depend upon the law under which they act; and it does not follow that because, as a general rule, the powers of canvassing boards are merely ministerial that they are so in any particular instance.

Action of the supreme court of South Carolina.

While the board of State canvassers were engaged in the canvassing of the elections proceedings were instituted in the supreme court of the State for the purpose of controlling their action. And it is proper, in order to meet objections, to consider the relations of those proceedings to the present question.

Those proceedings consisted of the petition of the Democratic candidates for the various State offices; first, for a writ of prohibition to restrain the State canvassers from doing anything except the ministerial acts of ascertaining from the returns and statements forwarded by the boards of county canvassers for the respective counties the persons who have received the highest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates, and declare the same and certify the statements to the secretary of state; second, for a writ of mandamus to compel the board to ascertain from the said returns and statements the persons who received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates, and to declare the same and certify such declaration to the secretary of state, &c.

Upon this petition a rule to show cause was granted by the court, to which a return was made by the board of State canvassers, setting forth the powers conferred on them by the statute; alleging that they were then proceeding to discharge their whole duty according to the constitution and laws of the State, &c. Thereupon the court made an order commanding the board to proceed to aggregate the statements forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, and ascertain the persons who have received the greatest number of votes for the offices for which they were candidates, respectively, at the general election, and to certify their action in the premises under this order of the court.

The board accordingly made a return to the court under this order, giving the various aggregates of the votes for the various candidates as they appeared on the face of the county canvassers' return. The portion of this return relating to the counties of Edgefield and Laurens is as follows:

"The board of State canvassers, respondents herein, hereby certify that it appears by the statements of the several boards of county canvassers laid before the board that the following named persons have received the number of votes set opposite their respective names for the several offices designated, namely:

EDGEFIELD COUNTY.

SENATOR.

NOTE.—This county is allowed three representatives.

"The board further certifies that 'this statement is made to the court in obedience to its order of November 17, 1876, but is respectfully submitted that under the present proceedings in this court this board is not by law compelled to report any of its actions to the court.'

* * * * * * *

"This board further shows to this court that allegations and evidences of fraud have been filed with this board as to the election held in Edgefield County by many of the managers of election in said county; but similar allegations have been made and filed as to one or more precincts in Barnwell County; that the statements of the commissioners of election for Laurens County laid before this board were signed by two commissioners only, one of whom signed, as he certifies, under protest; said commissioner has also filed an affidavit that the reason he signed said statements was because he was in fear of bodily injury if he refused to do so; that various protests and notices of contest have been filed from many other counties of the State, alleging irregularities on the part of election officers, illegal voting, &c.

"That in view of said allegations, protests, and notices of contests, none of which have been heard or passed upon by this board, because of the pendency of these proceedings, this board cannot, in their opinion, properly ascertain and certify who have actually received the greater number of legal votes in said counties for the several offices voted for unless they have the opportunity of investigating these allegations and hearing evidence upon these protests."

This statement having been made to the court, the next day the court of its own motion made the following order:

"It is ordered, That a writ of peremptory mandamus do issue, directed to the chairman and members of the board of State canvassers and the secretary of state, commanding the said board forthwith to declare duly elected to the offices of senators and members of the house of representatives the persons who by said certificate of the said board to this court have received the greatest number of votes therefor, and to forthwith deliver a certified statement and declaration thereof to the secretary of state; and commanding the secretary of state to make the proper record thereof in his office, and without delay transmit a copy thereof, under the seal of his office, to each person thereby declared to be elected, a like copy to the governor, and cause a copy thereof to be printed in one or more public newspapers of this State."

Before this latter order was served upon the members of the board, the ten days allowed by law having expired, the board completed its canvass of the election returns, declared the election, and adjourned sine die.

The course of the supreme court in this case is deserving of notice in several respects.

First. When the petition and the return were before the court there had been no refusal by the board to do any duty imposed upon it. The board had only begun their work as canvassers when the court issued its order in mandamus. It is an elementary principle of law that a refusal to perform a duty must precede an application for mandamus. Eight of the ten days within which they could act still remained.

Second. The court immediately issued an order requiring the board to report to the court itself the result of the face of the returns. This was an order for which no foundation had been laid in the proceedings. It was wholly irregular and without authority of law. Such an order could only have been granted, if at all, by way of a writ of certiorari, which had not been prayed for in this case.

The object of this order cannot be mistaken. It was to secure for the court the information necessary to determine beforehand the order to be made in order to accomplish a desired end. Can any other purpose be suggested? The court is asked in the petition for a writ of mandamus to order the board to aggregate the returns and certify the results. The court say in reply, let the board show us first what the results will be. When those results were presented to the court then the order was made to declare those persons elected who, according to the said report made to the court, had received the highest number of votes.

Third. Aside from all these evidences of partisan purposes, the action of the supreme court was wholly without jurisdiction. This is true as to all the officers voted for at that election, and particularly of members of the legislature. It was in fact a plain usurpation of power, whereby the functions of the board of State canvassers were usurped by the supreme court, and the board required by the court to declare a specified result dictated to it by the court.

After the board had acted the court could by quo warranto have reversed the action of the board in cases where such a writ would lie; but as to members of the legislature it was without jurisdiction at any time to entertain the case. The house of representatives, under the constitution, had sole jurisdiction of the matter.

Such action on the part of the court is without precedent in South Carolina. It is believed to be without precedent in any State.

The board had a right to reach a conclusion uninfluenced and uncontrolled by any power. If it acted wrongly or illegally, its action could by various means be reviewed and corrected.

No power could rightfully compel any decision, and especially any particular decision, until the expiration of the ten days allowed for its action.

The only subsequent action of the court in this case was the imprisonment of the board for contempt of the order which was not served on them till after their adjournment sine die.

Cushing, in his Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies (page 52, section 141), speaking of returning officers, says:

"It remains to be observed, in conclusion, that the proceedings of these (returning) officers, from the necessity of the case, are, in the first instance, uncontrollable by any other authority whatever; so that if, on the one hand, notwithstanding an election has been effected, the returning officers neglect or refuse to make the proper return, the party thereby injured is without remedy or orders until the assembly to which he is chosen has examined his case and adjudged him to be duly elected; and, on the other hand, if the returning officers make a return when no election has in fact taken place, or of one who is not eligible, the person returned will not only be entitled, but it is his duty, to assume and discharge the functions of a member until his return and election be adjudged void."

After the final adjournment of the board of State canvassers, November 22, 1876, the order of the supreme court already recited was served upon them.

That the board then had no power to reassemble and act upon the returns is clear.—(Cooley on Const. Lim., 622; Clark vs. Buchanan, 2 Minn., 346; 33 N. Y., 603.)

In Minnesota it has been held, in accordance with the principle just stated, that if the board of canvassers, after canvassing the votes, adjourn without day, their power in the premises is at an end, and they cannot reassemble; neither can a court, by mandamus, compel them to reassemble, or give them any power in case of their doing so.—(Clark vs. Buchanan, 2 Minn., 346. See also Gooding vs. Wilson, 42d Congress; State vs. Daumwirth, 21 Ohio, 216.)

The decision of the supreme court of South Carolina was subsequently reviewed on habeas corpus and set aside by Hon. Hugh L. Bond, of the United States circuit court.

The State supreme court proceeded to imprison the members of the board for contempt.

After their imprisonment a writ of habeas corpus was sued out before Judge Bond, United States circuit judge, sitting at Columbia. Judge Bond delivered an elaborate decision in which he held that the proceedings in the supreme court of the State were without jurisdiction, and that its order was void. He says:

"The first question to be decided at this time and upon this motion is whether or not the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter before it."

After quoting the sections of the constitution which confer upon the supreme court its jurisdiction, and the sections of the statute which define the powers of the board of canvassers, he continues:

"The objection to the jurisdiction of the supreme court made by the petitioners is that they are a part of the executive department of the government charged with the execution of a law of the State, and that they alone are authorized to canvass the votes, and that they are not subject in the exercise of their functions to the control of the judicial branch of the government.

"The Supreme Court of the United States in a very able opinion by Mr. Justice Miller, in the case of Gaines vs. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347, has very clearly determined what the law is on this subject, and that is, 'that if it appear that the act which the court is asked to compel the officer of the executive department of the government to do be purely ministerial, the court having jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus may compel the executive officer to perform his duty; but if the act required to be done by the executive officer be not merely ministerial but discretionary, or one about which he is to exercise his judgment, a court cannot by mandamus act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care in the ordinary exercise of official duty.' And the court further says that 'the interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments would be productive of nothing but mischief, and we are quite satisfied that such a power was never intended to be given them.' And for this Mr. Justice Miller quotes the opinion of Chief-Justice Taney in the case of the Commissioner of Patents vs. Whitely, 4 Wall., 522, and the law is stated to the same effect in a very celebrated case in Maryland, by Chief-Justice Bowie, Miles vs. Bradford, 22 Md. Rep., 170, a case where the power of the governor to canvass the votes was not so broadly given as in the case at bar.

"That the duty of this board of canvassers was not merely ministerial, but that they were clothed with a large discretion, it seems to me is very plain. They were not merely to take the returns and aggregate them. They were to canvass them. That is, they were to examine, to sift, to scrutinize them, which implies a power to reject such as were not lawful in their judgment; and more, they were to receive all cases under protest or contest that might arise when the power to do so did not by the constitution reside in some other body.

"They were the executive officers appointed to declare the election of such persons as had in their judgment the majority of the legal votes cast. If they decided erroneously or falsely the remedy of those candidates who thought themselves wronged was by quo warranto; but no court had the jurisdiction to compel the board of State canvassers to do otherwise than their own judgment dictated.

"It remains now to be seen what the court was asked to do by the relators. Their suggestion sets forth 'that the board is proceeding to hear and determine all matters of protest and contest before them in regard to the election of persons who were candidates at the general election, and is proceeding to certify their determination in such contests and protests to the secretary of state.' And they pray that a writ of mandamus may issue commanding them to ascertain from 'the managers' returns and statements forwarded to them by the boards of county canvassers, the persons who at the general election on the said 7th day of November, ultimo, had the highest number of votes; and commanding them and compelling them to revoke and annul any determination or decision which they may have made in any case of contest or protest, if any such there be.'

"Under the cases cited in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, Gaines vs. Thompson, 7 Wall., 347, above referred to, I am of opinion that the supreme court of the State of South Carolina had no jurisdiction to entertain any such 'suggestion' or 'petition.' * * * The board of State canvassers is required to meet on the 10th day of November for the purpose of sifting, scrutinizing, not merely aggregating, the statements of the county boards. * * *

"We have shown from the 'suggestion' itself that in our judgment the court had no jurisdiction to entertain it, and though the returns (to this writ) show that the parties are in custody solely for not obeying the mandate of the court respecting State officers, it is our duty to go behind the returns and look at the case as it presented itself to the supreme court at its inception. What the relators asked the court to do in their original suggestion is perfectly plain, and we have above quoted the paragraph of the 'suggestion' which constituted the ground of complaint of the relators. In my judgment the whole matter was beyond the jurisdiction of the supreme court, and any order passed by them upon such 'suggestion' is void. * * *

"I think this proceeding in the supreme court was beyond the jurisdiction of that court; that the board of State canvassers were clothed under the law with discretionary powers, which required them to discriminate the votes, to determine and certify the candidates elected after scrutiny, and that they were a part of the executive department of the government and were in no wise subject to the control as to what they should do after they had commenced to perform that duty of the judicial department."

We concur in the conclusions reached by Judge Bond.

Some importance in argument was attached to the action of the Wallace house in passing upon and affirming the right of the persons who claimed to represent Edgefield and Laurens Counties. From the journal of the Wallace house it appears that on December 6 the credentials of the persons claiming to be elected for Edgefield and Laurens Counties were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate and report as to their right to hold seats.

On December 7 this committee reported that the persons referred to were duly elected and entitled to their seats, and this report was adopted.

The chief and only real significance of this action is that it is evidence of the want of confidence on the part of the Wallace house in the legality of its own original organization, as well as in the right of the persons claiming to be elected for Edgefield and Laurens Counties to take part in the proceedings of that body.

The claim is that on the 7th of December, when the Wallace house adopted the resolution seating the Edgefield and Laurens members, that house contained sixty-three canvassing board members, and hence that the action of the house in seating those members cannot be questioned. It is to be noted first that this claim is a concession that that house to be a valid house must have a majority of one hundred and twenty-four, holding the certificates of the canvassing board.

If this be so, then the Wallace house on the day of its organization was clearly without a quorum to do business, for it had only fifty-seven members holding such certificates.

The six members who joined that house between November 29 and December 7 had all been sworn in as members of the Mackey house, and had acted with that house in effecting its organization.

If, now, the Mackey house was a valid house of representatives at its organization, the subsequent withdrawal of these six members to join another body could have no effect either to impair the validity of the Mackey house or to cure the invalidity of the Wallace house. If their absence had reduced the body below a quorum the house could do no business, but, in point of fact, their absence did not reduce the Mackey house below a quorum.

On the same day, December 7, the Wallace house also adopted resolutions declaring valid the election of the speaker and subordinate officers of that house on the 28th of November.

This action is another evidence that the Wallace house regarded its organization on the 28th of November as at least of very doubtful validity.

Organization of the house of representatives.

Passing now from questions affecting the legality of the action of the board of canvassers we come to questions concerning the mode of organizing the Mackey house, and especially the exclusion therefrom of all persons not declared elected by the canvassing board.

The legal and parliamentary principles on which the Mackey house was organized may be stated as follows:

First. That no persons except those declared elected and duly returned by the board of State canvassers and holding certificates of the secretary of state were entitled by law or usage to be placed upon the roll.—(Cushing, sections 229 and 240.)

Second. That the organization of the house must be effected by those persons only whose election had thus been declared by the board of State canvassers and certified by the secretary of state in accordance with the law of the State.

Third. That all other persons claiming to be entitled to seats in the house of representatives must submit their claims to the house after its organization by the members whose seats were undisputed.—(Cushing, sections 229 and 240.)

"It is to be observed in the outset that when a number of persons come together, each claiming to be a member of a legislative body, those persons who hold the usual credentials of membership are alone entitled to participate in the organization."—(McCrary's Law of Elections, 377.)

"It is apparent that the case of Sykes vs. Spencer is not in conflict with the rule that in the organization of legislative bodies persons holding the usual credentials are alone authorized to act."—(McCrary's Law of Elections, 392.)

In the well-known case of Kerr vs. Trego, 47 Pa. S. R. —, cited in Brightly's Leading Cases on Elections (page 632), Chief-Justice Lowrie, of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, laid down the following principle:

"On the division of a body that ought to be a unit the test of which represents the legitimate social succession is which of them has maintained the regular forms of organization according to the law and usages of the body, or, in the absence of these, according to the laws, customs, and usages of similar bodies in like cases, or in analogy to them. This is the uniform rule in such cases."

And in the same case, speaking of the custom of the clerk of the former organization taking charge of the organization of the new body, he says (page 638):

"It has the sanction of the common usage of every public body into which only a portion of new members is annually elected. It is the periodical form of reorganizing the select council and the senate of the State, and also the form of organizing the Senate of the United States on the meeting of a new Congress, when the Vice-President does not appear and the last President pro tempore does; and we understand this custom to be uniform throughout the United States, though this is not very important. And when there is a President whose term as a member has expired, then the functions of the clerks continue, and they, in all cases, act as the organs of reorganizing the body, and continue to hold office until their successors are chosen and qualified. Our State and Federal Houses of Representatives are illustration enough of this. So universal is this mode of organizing all sorts of legislative and municipal bodies that all departures from it can be justified only as founded on special and peculiar usages or on positive legislation. Whenever this form is adhered to, a schism of the body becomes impossible, though the process of organization may be very tardy.

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so; but no law can guard against such frauds so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing and perjury and bribery; the people are liable to such frauds at every step in the processes of an election or organization. But so much more the need for order and law in this part of the process; the law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order that we have announced have existed so long and so generally is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

In Wilson's Digest of Parliamentary Law, section 1603, page 221, this author says:

"At the commencement of every regular session the Clerk of the House opens the session by calling the names of members by States and Territories, if in Congress, and by counties if in State legislative assemblies. If a quorum answer to their names, he will put the following question: 'Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to the election of a Speaker?' If decided in the affirmative, tellers are generally appointed to conduct the vote."

This seems to be the universal custom in the organization of legislative bodies, and such custom not only prevails in South Carolina, but is specially established by the rules of the house of representatives of this State.

Rule 80 of the rules of the house of representatives of this State is as follows:

"In all cases not determined by these rules, or by the laws, or by the constitution of this State, as ratified on the 14th, 15th, and 16th days of April, 1868, this house shall conform to the parliamentary law which governs the House of Representatives of the United States Congress."

Rule 81 is as follows:

"These rules shall be the rules of the house of representatives of the present and succeeding general assemblies until otherwise ordered."

Turning now to Barclay's Digest (pages 44 et seq., and 126), we find that the law governing the House of Representatives of the United States Congress requires the Clerk of the last House to make up the roll of the members of the new House by placing thereon the names of such persons only whose credentials show "that they were regularly elected"; that having ascertained, by a call of this roll, that a quorum is present, the Clerk then proceeds to call the names of the members for the choice of a Speaker; the Speaker being chosen, assumes the duties of presiding officer, and, after swearing in the members, the oath of office being first administered to him, proceeds to complete the organization. Pending the election of a Speaker the Clerk preserves order and decorum.

Upon the question of the right of the claimants from Edgefield and Laurens Counties to be placed upon the roll, and to participate in the organization, the following citation from Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, section 229, page 87, is in point:

"The right to assume the functions of a member, in the first instance, and to participate in the preliminary proceedings and organization, depends wholly and exclusively upon the return or certificate of election; those persons who have been declared elected and are duly returned being considered as members until their election is investigated and set aside, and those who are not so returned being excluded from exercising the function of members, even though duly elected, until their election is investigated and their right admitted."

To the same effect is section 141 (page 52) of the same work, which has already been cited in connection with the action of the Supreme Court.

In section 238 (page 91) of the same work, in discussing the principles of parliamentary law governing the assembly and organization of legislative bodies, Cushing says:

"Hence it has occurred more than once that struggles for political power have begun among the members of our legislative assemblies, even before their organization; and it has happened on the one hand that persons whose rights of membership were in dispute, and who had not the legal and regular evidence of election, have taken upon themselves the functions of members; and, on the other, that persons having the legal evidence of membership have been excluded from participating in the proceedings."

In order to avoid such difficulties, this distinguished writer lays down the following principles in section 240, which are applicable to the question now under consideration:

"That no person who is not duly returned is a member, even though legally elected, until his election is established.

"That those members who are duly returned, and they alone (the members whose rights are to be determined being excluded), constitute a judicial tribunal for the decision of all questions of this nature."

In Kerr vs. Trego (Brightly's Election Cases, page 636), already cited, the Chief-Justice said:

"In all bodies that are under law, the law is that where there has been an authorized election for the office in controversy the certificate of election which is sanctioned by law or usage is a prima facie written title to the office, and can be set aside only by a contest in the form prescribed by law. This is not now disputed. No doubt this gives great power to dishonest election officers; but we know no remedy for this but by the choice of honest men."

It is proper here in this connection to again refer to the language already quoted from the same authority (page 638):

"It is objected that a rule that attributes so much power to the officers of the previous year gives them an advantage which they may use arbitrarily and fraudulently against the new members, so as to secure to themselves an illegitimate majority. No doubt this may be so; but no law can guard against such frauds so as to entirely prevent them, just as it cannot entirely prevent stealing and perjury and bribery; the people are liable to such frauds at every step in the process of an election or organization. But so much the more need for order and law in this part of the processes; the law can dictate that, though it cannot furnish honesty and sound judgment to the actors in it. That the law and order which we have announced have existed so long and so generally is proof, at least, that they are better than no law at all."

Applying the law as now stated to the facts in the present instance, it is clear, first, that there were no representatives from Edgefield and Laurens Counties having certificates of election according to the law and usage of this State; and second, that under the law, without such certificates, the clerk had no right to place the names of any persons upon the roll of the house as representatives from these counties.

It follows that fifty-nine members of the house of representatives who met in the State-house at Columbia and organized by the election of E. W. M. Mackey as speaker were lawfully convened, were lawfully organized, and, under the constitution of South Carolina, constituted the lawful house of representatives of that State. Though less than a majority of all the possible members of that body (one hundred and twenty-four), there was a "quorum to do business," which consisted of a "majority of the members chosen"—a majority of all those holding lawful certificates of election.

This house of representatives, in connection with the unquestioned senate, constituting together, as they did, the legislature of the State of South Carolina, proceeded on the 12th day of December, 1876, to the election of a Senator to represent that State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years to commence on the 4th of March, 1877. The election was duly held, duly determined and declared, and D. T. Corbin was duly and formally declared elected Senator, and subsequently he was duly commissioned as such by the governor of the State. He is, therefore, entitled, on the merits of his case, to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from South Carolina for the term of six years commencing on the 4th of March, A. D. 1877.

M. C. Butler's case.

Under the view taken of the facts relative to Mr. Corbin's election and the legal effect thereof, it would seem unnecessary to discuss the grounds of Mr. Butler's claim to be Senator, as it is impossible that he should have been legally elected if Mr. Corbin had already been elected. That the legislature cannot, after electing one person as Senator, subsequently set aside this election and elect another person to the same seat has been decided by the Senate in the case of Potter vs. Robbins, from Rhode Island. But we think it is not improper in this connection to consider briefly the facts in his case, and upon which his title depends.

The fifty-seven Democratic members of the house of representatives holding certificates of election under the determination of the board of State canvassers on the 28th day of November, 1876, declined to enter the State-house and unite with the other fifty-nine Republican members of the house of representatives there assembled; but, by themselves, assembled in a private hall, called Carolina Hall, in the city of Columbia. Eight other persons, five from Edgefield County and three from Laurens County, claiming to be members of the house of representatives elect, but holding no certificates of election from the board of State canvassers, assembled with said fifty-seven members at Carolina Hall. This body, so made up, organized by electing William H. Wallace speaker. In the organization of this body it was assumed that the fifty-seven members with certificates of election and the eight persons claiming seats from Edgefield and Laurens, but who had no certificates of election, constituted a quorum of the house of representatives, and the same was competent to do business.

On the 4th, 5th, and 6th of December, 1876, six members of the house of representatives assembled at the State-house, and who had been regularly sworn in as members of that house and had taken part in its organization, retired therefrom, and joined the Wallace house at Carolina Hall. One of them subsequently returned to his seat in the body at the State-house.

This body, at Carolina Hall, on the 12th day of December, 1876, this being the second Tuesday after the meeting and pretended organization thereof, proceeded to vote for a United States Senator, taking one ballot, which resulted in no choice. From day to day this house continued to vote for a United States Senator, but without making any choice, until the 19th of December, 1876, when, having then present eleven members of the senate (six less than a majority of that body), the election resulted in the choice of M. C. Butler as Senator. The senate, as such, never recognized in any manner this assemblage at Carolina Hall as the house of representatives; but always recognized the other body assembled in the State-house as the lawful house of representatives.

Was the election of Mr. Butler under these circumstances valid? It is impossible that it can be so regarded.

There was no quorum, no majority of the members chosen at the then recent election, present. As already stated, one hundred and sixteen members of the house of representatives had been chosen at the recent election, and no more. Of this number fifty-nine were necessary for a "quorum to do business," and there were but fifty-seven here present. Such a body could not lawfully organize as a house of representatives, and all its pretended acts were void. Again, it is not possible to recognize this body as the legislature of South Carolina, which under the United States Constitution alone could elect a Senator.

The legislature of the State of South Carolina consists, under the constitution of that State, of a senate and house of representatives.

A quorum of those two bodies must each meet and organize, and they must recognize each other before they can be considered the legislature of the State. Until this is done the legislature is not organized.

This body never had a senate recognizing and corresponding with it. Without such a body, even if itself lawful, it was nothing in law, and could do nothing as a legislative body. It did not, in fact, during its whole session do any legislative act or pretend that it could do any. It recognized its own impotency in this respect, but, strange inconsistency, it made a dash at the election of a United States Senator.

The defects in Mr. Butler's title to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of South Carolina may be stated briefly as follows:

1. There was no vacancy to be filled at the time of his election on December 19, 1876, as Mr. Corbin had been lawfully elected to said office on the 12th of December, 1876.

2. The house of representatives that assumed to elect Mr. Butler had no quorum at the time it was organized, and was never, therefore, a lawful body.

The additions made to it by recruits from the house of representatives assembled in the State-house did not make it a lawful body. If that house was a lawful body at its organization, it would so remain, notwithstanding the absence of five of its members.

If, by their absence, it was reduced below a quorum, no business could be done except to adjourn or send for the absent members.

But that house was not in fact at any time reduced below a quorum. It remained intact from the day of its organization, November 28, 1876, till December 22, 1876, following, when, in connection with the senate, it adjourned.

3. But admitting all that is claimed by Mr. Butler for the Wallace house at Carolina Hall, that it was lawfully organized and had a quorum of the house present, still, while this would invalidate Mr. Corbin's election, it would not make valid Mr. Butler's election. The single and isolated house of representatives of South Carolina cannot by any process of reasoning be held to constitute the legislature of that State. The constitution of that State requires a senate and house of representatives for that purpose. But the Wallace house had no senate to recognize it. It stood isolated and alone, and, so standing, it could originate no lawful action. It could no more elect a Senator than it could enact laws.

The following resolution is submitted as the determination of the committee upon the merits of this controversy:

Resolved, That David T. Corbin was, on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1876, duly elected by the legislature of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State in the Congress of the United States for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1877, and that, as such, he is entitled to have the oath of office administered to him.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which committee was referred the petition of David T. Corbin, praying the Senate "to inquire into, hear, and determine on their merits the claim and right of the petitioner to a seat in the Senate from the State of South Carolina for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1877," being unable to agree with the reasoning and conclusion of the majority of the committee, respectfully submit the following as their views in the premises.

On the 7th of March, 1877, the credentials of David T. Corbin and M. C. Butler, each claiming the seat as Senator from South Carolina, were ordered to lie on the table and be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed. Two days thereafter the committee was appointed, and received the credentials of both claimants for the seat.

Mr. Butler filed a printed statement setting forth the issues of fact and law upon which he claimed the seat.

Mr. Corbin also filed a like statement setting forth the issues of fact and law upon which he claimed the seat.

Replies to the statements thus made were also filed.

On examination of the issues thus made up there seemed to be no material issue of fact between the contestants, and the question as to which of them, or whether either, was duly elected by a legal legislature was one of law.

In this condition the contest remained until the 20th of November, 1877, and on this latter day a motion was made in the Senate "that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the consideration of the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina." The reason alleged for this motion was that the facts were all stated in the records furnished by the contestants; that neither of the contestants desired to take any testimony aliunde, and that the question of law could be debated and decided in the Senate as well without as with a report from the committee.

On the 27th of November, after elaborate debate, this resolution to discharge the committee was accepted by the Senate, and after further debate, and after the statements made and printed in behalf of Mr. Corbin and arguments on both sides had been read and made in the Senate, the Senate agreed to a motiton to swear in Mr. Butler, and he was, on the 30th of November, sworn in as the Senator from South Carolina for the term in contest. A vote admitting one contestant to a seat is certainly a vote denying the same seat to another contestant when both contestants are parties to the issue. No motion was made to reconsider this action of the Senate, and no reservation was made looking to any further contest between the claimants. On the 26th of March, 1878, and during a subsequent session of Congress, the petition now under consideration by Mr. Corbin, asking the Senate "to inquire into, hear, and determine his right and claim" to the same seat in the Senate was referred to this committee.

In considering this petition the facts which have been presented to this committee are precisely the same which were presented on the former consideration of this case. Not a new fact has been presented, nor offered to be presented, and not an old fact has been withdrawn or modified, nor offered to be withdrawn or modified. The arguments now made have been made from the same statements and briefs filed on the former hearing, and not a new question of law has been presented except the issue of res adjudicata. No charge of fraud has been made against the former decision. No allegation that testimony was before excluded which ought to have been admitted, or that testimony was admitted which ought to have been excluded; no request by either party to produce testimony has been denied, and no pretense that testimony then offered and excluded can now be produced. The jurisdiction is the same; the parties are the same; the subject-matter of contest is the same; the facts are the same, and the questions of law are the same. The petition now before us is a mere, sheer, naked proposition that the Senate at a subsequent session shall revote on the identical questions, facts, and issues on which the Senate voted and decided at a former session.

Without going into a tedious and unnecessary review of the authorities and cases to be found in the books, we deem it sufficient to say that no demand like that contained in the petition of Mr. Corbin was ever granted by this Senate, nor, as we believe, by any legislative body.

In the case of Bright and Fitch, in the Thirty-fifth Congress, the parties to the rehearing asked were new and different, and had not before been heard, and the rehearing itself was asked in a memorial from the legislature of the State of Indiana. But because "all the facts and questions of law involved were as fully known and presented to the Senate" on the former hearing as they were then presented in the memorial of the legislature asking a rehearing, it was held that the judgment first rendered by the Senate "was final, and precluded further inquiry into the subject."

If, on the former hearing, Mr. Corbin had been denied the privilege of introducing material facts which he offered to produce; if he presented material facts now which were then unknown; if all the facts and questions of law now known and presented were not then as fully known and presented, the undersigned will not undertake to say his petition for a rehearing ought not in justice and right to be gravely heard and considered on the merits. But as Mr. Corbin himself has suggested no new facts or questions of law, and as we well know that all the facts and questions of law now known and presented were then quite as well known and presented both to the committee and the Senate, we cannot regard his petition for another vote as entitled to further consideration.

If, however, a majority of the Senate shall differ with us in the view we have presented, and shall, without precedent, without law and without reason, determine to re-examine on its merits the title of Mr. Corbin to the seat which he claims in the Senate, we submit that the former decision, excluding him from that seat, was right, and ought not to be reversed.

There is no controversy between the contestants about the facts, and the only question presented is one of law. The only real question is, whether the house of representatives of the legislature which it is claimed elected Mr. Corbin was a legal house or a legal quorum of a house under the constitution and laws of South Carolina.

By section 4, Article II, of the constitution, it is is provided that "the house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members."

By section 14, Article II, it is provided that "a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as may be provided by law."

It is difficult to see how language could more plainly define what should be a house, or what should be a quorum of a house, or what only a less number than a quorum had power to do. Nor is there anything in law, morals, or party exigency which can justify a resort to construction or sophistry to confuse such plain language. The number of members who assembled in what is called the Mackey house, which pretended to elect Corbin, was fifty-nine. Clearly this was neither a house nor the quorum of a house, as plainly defined by the constitution of the State, and this number had no power except to adjourn from day to day and compel the attendance of absent members. But this number proceeded to organize as a legal quorum to do business.

The pretext for this extraordinary assumption of power by fifty-nine members was that the board of State canvassers had only issued certificates of election to one hundred and sixteen members, and the claim is that fifty-nine is a majority of one hundred and sixteen. But this very statement admits that a quorum of the house was certified as elected. The fifty-nine, then, are left without excuse for failing to exercise their only power under the constitution, "to compel the attendance of absent members." But the facts show that the people in fact elected one hundred and twenty-four members—a full house. The precinct commissioners and the county commissioners of election, in all the counties, respectively, made out and forwarded the statements required by law showing the votes cast at the election. The board of State canvassers refused to cast up the votes in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, under the shallow pretext that they were unable to determine whether the elections in those counties were legal. They refused to discharge their plain ministerial duty of casting up the votes and thereby "determine and declare what persons had been by the greatest number of votes duly elected," but excused themselves from this duty by pretending they were not able to determine whether there had been legal elections in those counties! This was a question which, under the constitution, each house alone had authority to determine, and which the board of State canvassers, by plain language of the act creating it, is forbidden to determine.

In due time, also, the house of representatives did determine that there had been elections held in the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, and the returns very plainly showed who had been elected, and, in fact, the full house of one hundred and twenty-four members were elected. Both in fact and law, therefore, fifty-nine was not a quorum of the house to do business, and Mr. Corbin was not elected by a legal legislature.

The facts in this case show very plainly that the board of State canvassers were guilty of a disreputable attempt by mere trickery to defeat the result of the election by the people, and such conduct should not receive the countenance of the Senate.

The undersigned, therefore, recommend that the resolution to seat Mr. Corbin, reported by the majority of the committee, be not adopted.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1879.

On motion by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections declaring David T. Corbin duly elected and entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of South Carolina, it was determined in the negative—yeas 25, nays 36.

On motion by Mr. Conkling, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chandler, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Ingalls, Kirkwood, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Plumb, Rollins, Wadleigh, and Windom.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Beck, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cockrell, Coke, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Garland, Gordon, Grover, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Lamar, McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon, Morgan, Patterson, Ransom, Saulsbury, Shields, Voorhees, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers.

So the motion was not agreed to.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1879.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a letter of David T. Corbin, withdrawing his claim to a seat in the Senate as Senator-elect from the State of South Carolina.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

[A copy of the letter is found on page 2028 of the Congressional Record, vol. viii, part 3.]

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. BUTLER'S EXPENSES.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1882.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $3,500 to M. C. Butler, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat."

MONDAY, March 20, 1882.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the following resolution reported by him from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 17th instant, and no amendment being made it was reported to the Senate:

"A resolution to pay M. C. Butler the expenses incurred by him in defending his title to a seat in the Senate."

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[The debate is found on pages 2046, 2047 of the Congressional Record, vol. xiii, part 3.]

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. CORBIN'S EXPENSES.

"To pay D. T. Corbin, late contestant for a seat in the United States Senate from the State of South Carolina, his expenses of such contest, $10,000."—U. S. Statutes at Large, 45th Cong., 1877–'79, vol. 20, page 400; sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1879.

[Special session of Senate, March, 1877, and second session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

LA FAYETTE GROVER,

Senator from Oregon from March 8, 1877, till March 3, 1883.

March 2, 1877, the credentials of Mr. Grover, elected for the term beginning March 4, 1877, were presented. March 7, a memorial of citizens of Oregon protesting against his admission to a seat were presented, and objection was made to the oaths being administered to Mr. Grover at that time. The following day he was admitted after debate. March 9, Mr. Grover submitted a resolution that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation. The resolution was agreed to. December 14, 1877, the testimony taken was printed. June 15, 1878, the committee reported that the evidence taken did not sustain any of the charges. The committee asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject. One member of the committee, concurring in the conclusion of the committee, submitted views more at length, maintaining that a great injustice was done to Mr. Grover by the consideration given in the Senate to the vague charges preferred against him.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 2d sess. 44th and 45th Congs., and the report of the committee (except the testimony) from Senate Reports, 45th Cong., 2d sess., No. 540.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1877.

Mr. Kelly presented the credentials of La Fayette Grover, elected a Senator by the legislature of Oregon for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1877; which were read.

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1877.

Mr. Wallace moved that the oaths required by law be now administered to Mr. La Fayette Grover, whose credentials were heretofore presented as a Senator from the State of Oregon, and who appeared at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. Hamlin objected to the oath being now administered to Mr. Grover, for the reason that Mr. Mitchell, a Senator from Oregon, now absent from the Chamber, had received and desired to present to the Senate a memorial of citizens of Oregon remonstrating against the admission of the said Grover to a seat in the Senate.

Pending further debate upon the amendment of Mr. Bayard to the resolution of Mr. Blaine,

Mr. Mitchell asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to present at this time a memorial of citizens of Oregon protesting against the admission of L. F. Grover to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from that State until certain charges therein made can be investigated and disproved.

Ordered, That the memorial lie on the table.

[A statement by Mr. Mitchell and a copy of the memorial are found on pages 22, 23 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

THURSDAY, March 8, 1877.

Mr. Wallace submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Whereas, under the Constitution and the laws and the practice of the Senate, La Fayette Grover, claiming to be a Senator from the State of Oregon—his credentials being regular and in due form and there being no contestant for the seat—and there being in said State but one body claiming to be the legislature, and but one person claiming to be the governor, and there being no doubt or dispute as to the existence of one legal, rightful State government, is entitled to admission to a seat in this body, on the prima facie case presented by such credentials, notwithstanding the objections contained in the petition of citizens of the State of Oregon against his admission: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the credentials of La Fayette Grover be taken from the table and the oaths of office be now administered to him.

"Resolved, further, That the petition of citizens of Oregon containing charges against La Fayette Grover lie on the table until the Committee on Privileges and Elections is organized, when they shall be referred to such committee, together with his credentials, with instructions to investigate such charges and report to the Senate as to their truth or falsity."

On the question to agree thereto,

After debate,

Mr. Whyte demanded a division of the question, and the question being first put on agreeing to the first resolution and preamble,

It was determined in the affirmative.

The question recurring on the second resolution, Mr. Wallace, with the consent of the Senate, withdrew the same.

Whereupon

Mr. Grover presented himself at the bar of the Senate, and the Vice-President having administered to him the oaths prescribed by law, he took his seat in the Senate.

[The debate is found on pages 31–39 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, March 9, 1877.

Mr. Grover submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, viz:

"Resolved, That the thirteen memorials heretofore presented to the Senate by Hon. J. H. Mitchell, purporting to be signed by 369 citizens of the State of Oregon, reciting that it was currently reported and generally believed that the election of L. F. Grover as a Senator of the United States was procured by bribery, corruption, and other unlawful means in the legislature of the State of Oregon, and that the said L. F. Grover did corruptly and fraudently issue a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin as a Presidential elector, on December 6, 1876, and that the said L. F. Grover did bear false witness before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, on or about January 6, 1877, be now referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who shall thoroughly investigate and report upon the foregoing charges, with power to send for persons and papers."

WEDNESDAY, March 14, 1877.

Mr. Mitchell submitted the following resolution for consideration:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to designate a subcommittee of three of its members who shall have authority to sit in the vacation for the purpose of taking testimony and making report to full committee at commencement of next session in pursuance of the resolution of the Senate authorizing an investigation into certain charges preferred against La Fayette Grover, Senator from Oregon; and such subcommittee shall have all the powers to send for persons and papers and administer oaths that the full committee now has."

THURSDAY, March 15, 1877.

Mr. Mitchell presented twenty-three petitions of citizens of Oregon, praying that L. F. Grover may be denied a seat in the Senate until certain charges preferred against him may be investigated; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Mitchell to authorize the Committee on Privileges and Elections to appoint a subcommittee to sit during the recess for the investigation of certain charges against La Fayette Grover, a Senator from the State of Oregon; and

Pending debate, it was Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed to to-morrow.

[The latter proceeding is taken from the Record. It does not appear in the Journal. The debate is found on page 42 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, March 16, 1877.

The Senate resumed, &c., and an amendment having been proposed by Mr. Saulsbury,

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Allison, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

SATURDAY, March 17, 1877.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Mitchell on the 14th instant, to authorize the Committee on Privileges and Elections to appoint a subcommittee to sit during the recess for the investigation of the charges against La Fayette Grover, a Senator from the State of Oregon; and

The question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Saulsbury, viz: Strike out all after the word "resolved" and in lieu thereof insert:

"That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate relating to the election of La Fayette Grover as Senator from the State of Oregon, be, and the said committee is, instructed to appoint the judge of the fourth judicial district of said State a commissioner to take testimony relating to the matters referred to in said resolution, and the said commissioner so appointed shall have power and authority, and it shall be his duty, to issue subpœnas for witnesses as well on behalf of the said La Fayette Grover as against him and to give due notice of the time and place when and where the testimony will be taken. The testimony so taken shall be forwarded to the said committee, which shall report the same, with their conclusions thereon, at the next regular session of the Senate,"

On motion by Mr. Mitchell to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "instructed" and in lieu thereof inserting:

"To appoint from its members a subcommittee of three, who shall take testimony relating to the matters referred to in said resolution and report to the full committee on the first Monday in December next; and for such purpose said subcommittee shall have power to sit in vacation; and if they deem expedient, go to the State of Oregon; and such committee shall have power to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers; and the expenses of such subcommittee, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of such subcommittee,"

After debate,

It was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, to amend the amendment as amended by striking out the work "clerk," it was determined in the negative—yeas 10, nays 34.

On motion by Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Beck, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Harris, Hereford, Hill, McCreery, McPherson, Wallace, and Whyte.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Blaine, Bogy, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Dorsey, Eaton, Garland, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Plumb, Randolph, Rollins, Sargent, Saulsbury, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, and Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury to further amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

"And that the said L. F. Grover shall be notified of the sessions of the said subcommittee, with the right to be present at the examination of witnesses,"

It was determined in the affirmative.

The amendment of Mr. Saulsbury, as amended, was then agreed to; and,

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate relating to the election of La Fayette Grover as Senator from the State of Oregon, be, and the said committee is, instructed to appoint from its members a subcommittee of three, who shall take testimony relating to the matters referred to in said resolution, and report to the full committee on the first Monday in December next; and for such purpose such subcommittee shall have power to sit in vacation, and, if they deem expedient, go to the State of Oregon; and such subcommittee shall have power to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the power of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers; and the expenses of such subcommittee, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of such subcommitte; and that the said L. F. Grover shall be notified of the sessions of the said subcommittee, with the right to be present at the examination of witnesses,"

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 39, nays 8.

On motion by Mr. Whyte, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Blaine, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Chaffee, Christiancy, Coke, Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Dorsey, Eaton, Garland, Hamlin, Hoar, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, McPherson, Maxey, Mitchell, Morgan, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, Windom, and Withers.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs. Cockrell, Davis of West Virginia, Harris, Hereford, McCreery, Merrimon, Wallace, and Whyte.

So the resolution was agreed to.

[The debate is found on pages 43–46 of the Congressional Record, vol. vi.]

FRIDAY, December 14, 1877.

On motion by Mr. McMillan,

Ordered, That the testimony taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, designated to investigate certain charges against La Fayette Grover, a Senator from the State of Oregon, be printed.

SATURDAY June 15, 1878.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by the resolution of the Senate of March 9, 1877, to investigate certain matters touching the election of La Fayette Grover as a Senator from the State of Oregon, submitted a report (No. 540), with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and that any member of said committee have leave to present to the Senate, at the present or the next session, his views in writing upon said testimony; and Leave was granted as requested.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted his views on the question of the election of La Fayette Grover as a Senator from the State of Oregon, to accompany the report of the committee (No. 540) this day made.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Wadleigh (chairman), Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Ingalls, Saulsbury, Merrimon, and Hill.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JUNE 15, 1878.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate authorizing said committee to investigate and report upon charges that the election of La Fayette Grover as a Senator from the State of Oregon was procured by bribery, corruption, and other unlawful means, report that in their opinion the evidence taken does not sustain any of said charges against him.

Your committee therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of said resolution, and that any members of said committee have leave to present to the Senate at the present session or the next session their views in writing upon said testimony.

VIEWS OF MR. SAULSBURY.

Mr. Saulsbury, a member of the subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, appointed to take testimony in reference to the election of the Hon. L. F. Grover as Senator, concurring in the foregoing conclusion of the committee, submits more at length his own views.

At the special session of the Senate in March, 1877, the following resolution, offered by Senator Grover, was adopted, referring to the Committee on Privileges and Elections certain memorials which had been presented to the Senate, and requiring said committee to investigate the allegations therein contained. The resolution is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the thirteen memorials heretofore presented to the Senate by Hon. J. H. Mitchell, purporting to be signed by 369 citizens of the State of Oregon, reciting that it was currently reported and generally believed that the election of L. F. Grover as a Senator of the United States was procured by bribery, corruption, and other unlawful means in the legislature of the State of Oregon, and that the said L. F. Grover did corruptly and fraudulently issue a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin as a Presidential elector on December 6, 1876, and that the said L. F. Grover did bear false witness before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections on or about January 6, 1877, be now referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who shall thoroughly investigate and report upon the foregoing charges, with power to send for persons and papers."

The following is a copy of the memorials referred to in the foregoing resolution:

To the Senate of the United States:

Whereas it is currently reported and generally believed that L. F. Grover by bribery, the corrupt use of money, and other unlawful and dishonorable means procured his election to the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Oregon at its last session; and

Whereas the said L. F. Grover, in obedience to a corrupt scheme to defraud the State of Oregon of its proper electoral vote, as the governor thereof did unlawfully, dishonestly, corruptly, and by acts of usurpation, declare elected to the office of Presidential elector for the State of Oregon, on the 6th day of December, 1876, and did issue a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin, who had been defeated by the people for said office by more than 1,000 majority; and

Whereas the said L. F. Grover did fraudulently undertake to sustain his said act by falsely testifying as a witness concerning the same before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections on or about the 6th day of January, 1877:

Now, therefore, we, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Oregon, earnestly but respectfully ask that the said L. F. Grover be denied a seat in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Oregon until the foregoing charges are thoroughly investigated and disproved.

M. L. WILMOT and others.

Subsequently during the same session a resolution was adopted by the Senate instructing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to appoint a subcommittee from its members to take testimony relating to the matters referred to in the said memorials and report the testimony taken to the full committee on the first Monday of the present session.

The following is the resolution last referred to:

"That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate relating to the election of La Fayette Grover as Senator from the State of Oregon, be, and the said committee is, instructed to appoint from its members a subcommittee of three, who shall take testimony relating to the matters referred to in said resolution and report to the full committee on the first Monday in December next; and for such purpose such subcommittee shall have power to sit in vacation and if they deem expedient go to the State of Oregon; and such subcommittee shall have power to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers; and the expenses of such subcommittee, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be presented by the chairman of such committee."

In obedience to said resolution a subcommittee consisting of the late Senator Morton, Senator McMillan, and the undersigned, was appointed, who proceeded to Portland, in the State of Oregon, and examined a large number of witnesses, whose testimony has already been printed by order of the Senate.

The undersigned, as a member of the subcommittee charged with the duty of making the investigations required by the first mentioned resolution, begs leave respectfully to submit his own conclusions from the evidence taken.

An examination of the testimony will show that the widest latitude was given to the investigation by the subcommittee. Witnesses were not restricted to matters within their own knowledge, but were allowed to testify as to their beliefs and suspicions, unsupported by any facts, and to narrate hearsay evidence of no higher character than the fugitive rumors which are not unfrequently current on the streets of a State capital preceding the election of a United States Senator.

It may be at times impossible for a legislative committee to apply to an investigation with which it is charged the rules which govern the admissibility of evidence in courts of justice, but the undersigned must be allowed to express his conviction that in an investigation into the truth of allegations affecting the personal honor of a member of the Senate, as well as his right to a seat in the body, no such wide departure should be allowed in the admission of testimony as the evidence in this case will show was permitted. While Senator Grover can have no cause to regret the latitude that was given to the inquiry into matters alleged against him or the regularity of his election, by reason of anything elicited against him or those to whom he owes his election to the Senate, it ought not to be allowed to become a precedent to govern similar investigations in the future.

The undersigned objected at the very commencement of the investigation to the latitude in the examination of witnesses which is usually allowed in investigations by legislative committees, and insisted on an observance, as far as possible, of the rules which obtain in courts of justice in that regard. Had his suggestion been adopted in practice, the testimony in this case would have been compressed into a very narrow compass, and would have excluded a large mass of irrelevant testimony taken by the subcommittee. The undersigned begs leave to refer to the objections which he made on this point, found at pages 9, 10, and 11 of the printed testimony.

Without reviewing in detail the testimony taken by the subcommittee, the undersigned has no hesitation in saying that, so far from justifying the insinuations contained in the memorials presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, it completely vindicates Senator Grover from the aspersions attempted to be cast upon him, and establishes beyond question the regularity and fairness of his election as a Senator.

The testimony shows that the two houses of the Oregon legislature voted separately for Senator on the day fixed by the act of Congress, and met in joint convention and voted for Senator daily thereafter until Senator Grover received the votes of a majority of all the members of the legislature. In the vote taken in the two houses separately, and in every vote in the joint convention, he received a larger number of votes than any other candidate.

The testimony will further show that Senator Grover, in the final caucus of the Democratic members of the legislature, received the caucus nomination, and was thereafter the only recognized candidate of his party for the position, and as such received ultimately the vote of every democratic member of the legislature.

The testimony further shows that during the contest for Senator Governor Grover repeatedly assured his personal and political friends that he did not desire and would not have an election that was not honorable to himself and his party, and offered to withdraw from the contest if the Democratic members could agree upon any other candidate.

In the opinion of the undersigned, no member of the Senate is freer from suspicion of having procured his election to the body by improper means than Senator Grover, while none perhaps has been subjected to more unjust and slanderous accusations, or could have vindicated his character more completely against the assaults of personal and political foes.

The only witness who directly or indirectly sought to connect Senator Grover with bribery, or who in fact professed to know anything about the corruption of any member of the legislature, was a man by the name of Styles. This witness, who had made an affidavit to be sent to Washington to be used to prevent Governor Grover from taking his seat in the Senate, testified before the committee to a conversation between Governor Grover, Mr. Gilfry, and William H. Watkins in reference to the purchase of the vote of a member of the legislature by the name of Goodman, and also to a conversation which he had with Goodman, and also to seeing another member, by the name of Mosier, come out of the room of Governor Grover into the room of Mr. Gilfry with several hundred dollars in gold in his hands. In reference to the first statement he was contradicted by Goodman, Gilfry, and Watkins, and in reference to the second by Gilfry and Mosier. See testimony of Mr. Goodman, page 445, from which the following extract is taken:

"[The Senator here called the attention of the witness to certain passages in the testimony of Mr. Styles, as printed in a newspaper which he held in his hand.]

"Question. Did Governor Grover ever make any promise to you of any office whatever in case he was elected?—Answer. Never.

"Q. Did he approach you on the subject of voting for him?—A. I had a talk with Governor Grover, but he did not mention concerning my voting for him.

"Q. He said nothing in that conversation in the way of inducements; he held out no inducements for you to vote for him?—A. He did not offer me any inducement whatever; in the talk with him he asked me if I was not afraid that I was injuring the prospects of the Democratic party in this State by holding out as I did against the caucus, but he never during the conversation asked me to vote for him.

"Q. Did you state to this man Styles at any time that you could get a thousand dollars for your vote?—A. I never did. I consider that that gentleman has done me and Governor Grover a great injustice, and he stands before the people of Oregon to-day a perjured villain.

"Q. No person in your county, as I understand, believes any such allegation against you?

"Senator McMillan. Senator, that is taking a pretty wide range, it seems to me.

"Senator Saulsbury. No, sir; this gentleman is a man of character, and I take it that he has a right to say before this committee what he knows as to what his neighbors think of this thing.

"The Witness. No, sir; nobody believes it.

"Q. Are you regarded in your community as a corrupt man?—A. I think not; I hope not, at least.

"Q. Do you believe there are any Republicans in that county that would charge it upon you?—A. I don't believe there are.

"Q. Now I will ask you this question, Mr. Goodman: Did you ever, directly or indirectly, receive one dollar for your vote for Governor Grover for the Senate?—A. No, sir, never; not one dollar. No man ever approached me upon that subject, either of the Grover faction or the Nesmith faction.

"Q. Were you, directly or indirectly, influenced by any pecuniary consideration or reward, in any shape, manner, or form, or by promises of office or money, directly or indirectly, in connection with your vote for Governor Grover for the Senate?—A. There was no influence brought to bear upon me whatever."

See also the testimony of Mr. Watkins, page 589, &c.

See also testimony of J. H. Mosier, page 412, from which the following extract is taken:

"Question. Do you know a man by the name of W. H. N. Styles, who has testified before the committee?—Answer. I never saw the man that I know of. That is him right over there, I believe [turning to the left and pointing to a row of by-standers]. No, I am mistaken; I beg your pardon; that is a better-looking man than he was. I will take it all back. He was sitting right over there [pointing] a few moments ago.

"Q. You say you never saw the man that you know of—never saw him till now?—A. I never saw him till yesterday. I never saw him in my life that I know of till I came here.

"Q. That man in his testimony swears as follows:

"'Q. Did you see Mosier at any time after the election?—A. I did.

"'Q. Where did you see him?—A. I was introduced to him in Mr. Gilfry's office.'

"Q. Now, I ask you, Mr. Mosier, if it is true that you were introduced to Mr. Styles in Mr. Gilfry's office, as he swears?—A. I never was; I never was introduced to any man by that name.

"Q. He says in his testimony as follows:

"'Q. When was that?—A. One or two days after the election I sat down there waiting for Mr. Gilfry to come in. As I sat there perhaps fifteen minutes, I guess, some gentleman came in. I supposed Mr. Gilfry was in the other room. I heard some one talking in there, but I did not go in. I sat down there. The gentleman came in who was in the other room, that is, in the governor's room. I may have sat there fifteen or twenty minutes and Mr. Mosier came in from the governor's room.'

"Q. I ask you now, Mr. Mosier, if that assertion in this testimony is true?—A. It is not, sir. I never was in the governor's private room in my life to my knowledge.

"Q. You say here upon your honor and upon your oath that that is not true?—A. I never was in Governor Grover's private room in my life.

"Q. The testimony of Mr. Styles goes on:

"'Q. Mr. Mosier came in from the governor's room?—A. Yes, sir.

"'Q. Through the door in the partition?—A. Yes, sir. He came into the room where I was and had money in his hand.'

"Q. I ask you, sir, if on any occasion you ever were in the governor's room?—A. I was not, to my recollection.

"Q. I ask you, sir, if you ever came out of the governor's room with money in your hand?—A. No, sir; and any man that makes that assertion or testifies to that statement is a liar.

"Senator McMillan. Mr. Mosier, the use of that kind of language does not add anything to the strength of your testimony.

"Senator Saulsbury (to the witness). Say it in your own language, sir. You have a perfect right to defend and vindicate your reputation here and elsewhere.

"The Witness. Yes, sir; I have, and I will do it, too. I have a right to say what I know about this thing, and I say it is false.

"[The answer of the witness was greeted by applause from a portion of the by-standers.]

"The Chairman. I said a while ago that if these unseemly demonstrations were repeated I should feel it to be necessary to clear this room. Any demonstrations of applause, or otherwise, calculated either to encourage and embolden or to discourage and intimidate a witness are evidently improper. I shall let it pass this time; but if after this second warning this thing is repeated I shall have the room cleared. I do not want to give anybody any offense, or to put anybody out if I can help it, but such demonstrations as this are highly improper, as every man who indulges in it must know, and cannot be tolerated here.

"The Witness. These things do not encourage me any; I shall state the facts all the same, whether they stamp their feet or not."

See also testimony of H. H. Gilfry, from which the following extract is taken:

"Senator Saulsbury. I ask you, sir, if you ever saw Mr. Mosier in Governor Grover's private office?—Answer. No, sir; I did not. I do not think he was in there at all during the session of the legislature.

"Q. Was he ever in the governor's private office with you?—A. Mr. Mosier? No, sir; he never was.

"Q. Did you ever see any money paid to Mr. Mosier?—A. I never did; no, sir.

"Q. Or to any other member of the legislature?—A. I never did; not a cent, sir.

"Q. On the occasion here referred to, or at any other time?—A. No, sir; never.

"Q. Did you ever see Mr. Mosier with any money in his hand in your room?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Or anywhere else?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you ever come from the governor's room into your own office and find Mr. Styles in your own office?—A. No, sir; I never did.

"Q. Do you pronounce that statement, then, so far as it relates to you, an unmitigated falsehood?—A. I do, emphatically. It is an unmitigated falsehood, without any foundation whatever."—(Testimony, page 578.)

In relation to other matters testified to by Styles, intended to affect the character of Senator Palmer, of the State legislature, he is not only contradicted most positively by Senator Palmer, but his testimony is proven to be false by the overwhelming testimony of from four to seven witnesses, on every important point.

Styles is also impeached by more than twenty witnesses, who swear that his character for truth was bad, and that they would not believe him on oath.

Nothing but the importance which was attached to the statements of this man Styles by those who originated and prosecuted the charges against Senator Grover could have justified so extended a notice of his testimony; but it would be improper to dismiss the statements of this witness without saying that for his perjury in this investigation he was indicted in the United States district court in Oregon and tried before a jury largely composed of Republicans, eleven of whom were in favor of conviction to one opposed; and on a second trial he again escaped because of a divided jury. At this last trial the most important witness to prove the guilt of the accused was necessarily absent, attending to his public duties in Washington.

It will be observed from an examination of the testimony that the theory of those who sought to impeach the regularity of the election of Senator Grover was that the money used in the alleged bribery of members of the legislature was furnished by the Hon. Joseph S. Smith, formerly a member of Congress, and Hon. B. Goldsmith, formerly mayor of the city of Portland. Mr. Smith came before the subcommittee and swore that he never, directly or indirectly, furnished any money to influence the vote of any member of the legislature on the Senatorial or any other question; that he was in Salem but once, and only for a short time, during the Senatorial contest, and then only to prevent the use of his own name for the position, which he had been informed might be done; and that he did not while there speak to any member of the general assembly on the subject of electing a Senator.

Mr. Goldsmith was, during the investigation, in the city of New York with one of his children, whom he had taken there for the purpose of having a difficult operation performed, and was consequently not before the committee, but telegraphed to the chairman his willingness to appear at any time and place convenient to the committee, and testify touching his alleged complicity with the corruption of members of the legislature, and subsequently sent an affidavit denying emphatically having furnished one dollar for the purpose of affecting the action of any member of the legislature upon the Senatorial question. Independently of the statements of Mr. Goldsmith himself, it was abundantly proved that he took but very little part in the contest, and was present in Salem only to procure legislation affecting his own interest, and for that reason was careful not to become mixed up in the Senatorial question, which might prejudice his own business before the legislature. Besides, it was conclusively shown that Mr. Goldsmith's financial condition was at the time such that he could not, if he had desired, advance money for so improper a purpose.

The only members of the legislature who voted for Senator Grover against whom the least whisper of suspicion was heard in the undefined rumors circulated by party malignity or inspired by the chagrin of disappointed hope were Mr. Goodman, of Umatilla County; Mr. Straight, of Clackamas County; Messrs. Mosier and Butler, of Wasco County; Senator Palmer, of Benton and Polk Counties; and R. W. Wilson, deceased, a representative from Clatsop and Tillamook Counties.

Whatever suspicions were indulged at any time in reference to Goodman, Straight, Butler, and Palmer, except so far as Mr. Goodman was charged by Styles, had their only foundation in the fact that they were known to be in favor of another gentleman for Senator, and some of them did not recognize the binding obligation of a caucus nomination, and therefore did not take part in the caucus, and voted in the separate houses and in joint convention several times for their first choice for Senator, and until they became satisfied that he could not be elected, when they cast their votes for Senator Grover.

All of those gentlemen are men of character and standing in their respective counties, and testified before the subcommittee denying most positively that they had been influenced in voting for Governor Grover by any corrupt or other improper consideration, and explained fully their entire course upon the Senatorial question. Neither of them had aught against Senator Grover, who, they declared, was from the first their second choice. Their testimony is full upon this point, and the undersigned refers to it with full confidence that it will satisfy every one who will take the trouble to read it of the candor and honesty of the witnesses, not only in testifying before the subcommittee, but in their entire action upon the Senatorial question.

With reference to Mr. Mosier, his indiscreet conversation while intoxicated gave rise to suspicions that he desired to procure money for his vote for Senator, and the man Styles was doubtless instigated thereby to charge him with having received money from Governor Grover, as already stated. The testimony of Mr. Mosier in reply to the statements of Styles has already been given. In his testimony he further stated that his only object in the conversations cited against him was to ascertain the truth of rumors to the effect that money was being used to defeat the election of Senator Grover, and that he neither received nor desired to receive one cent for his vote on the Senatorial question. The testimony shows that he voted in caucus and on every vote but one in the separate houses and in joint convention of the two houses for Senator Grover, and that he withdrew his support from Grover on one vote because he was informed that the Senator was opposed to certain local improvements in which the people of his county were interested, and upon being assured that he had been misinformed upon that point he again voted steadily for Governor Grover, who was his first choice. He was shown to be a reputable and honest man by persons who had known him for a long time, and to be in good circumstances and under no necessity to obtain money in any improper way. The undersigned does not believe that Mr. Mosier was either given or promised pecuniary or other reward for his support of Senator Grover, and that whatever suspicions were entertained against his integrity were traceable to his own indiscreet conduct while in a state of inebriety.

The only other member whose character was assailed by suspicions detailed before the subcommittee was R. W. Wilson, deceased. Mr. Wilson, being dead, could not personally vindicate his character before the subcommittee; but every ground alleged for the suspicions entertained by any one against him was fully met and shown to be without foundation.

He was shown by the testimony of Governor Chadwick and other gentlemen who knew him well to be a man of sterling integrity and character, and in the opinion of the undersigned, based upon the testimony before the subcommittee, not the slightest justification existed for the attempted defamation of his fair name while living or his memory now that he is no more. He had always been a Democrat of the strictest sect, adhering to the usages of the party and supporting its candidates, whether made in convention or in caucus, and but followed out the rule of his life and the will of his constituents in supporting Governor Grover after he was nominated in caucus, although his personal predilections were in favor of another.

An attempt was made by a Republican by the name of Brown, an employé about the custom-house in Portland, to induce him by an offer of $1,500 to vote against Grover. Mr. Wilson communicated this insult to friends and took legal advice with a view of prosecuting Brown criminally for his offense. Brown testified before the committee to his own infamy and guilt, but failed to inculpate Wilson in his crime or cast a stain upon his untarnished memory. In the opinion of the undersigned no more unjustifiable attempt or more signal failure was ever made to blast the reputation of a worthy man.

A careful examination of the testimony taken before the subcommittee it is confidently believed will satisfy any unbiased mind that the story of bribery and corruption in the election of Senator Grover was unwarranted by any fact or circumstance worthy of a moment's consideration. Even the most uncharitable political opponent will find in that testimony not only ample refutation of the slanderous rumors circulated to the prejudice of Senator Grover and the members of the legislature who supported him, but abundant proof that his election to the Senate was free from every taint and honorable alike to him and the legislature of Oregon.

It will be observed that the memorials hereinbefore set out, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, do not charge Senator Grover directly with procuring his election to the Senate by corrupt means, but simply state that "it is currently reported and generally believed" that such was the fact, and ask that he be denied a seat in the Senate until these charges are investigated. The undersigned cannot withhold the expression of his conviction that great injustice was done to Senator Grover by the consideration given in the Senate to these loose and undefined charges, if charges they can be called. They were made the basis of an objection to his right to a seat in the Senate, which was not withdrawn until it had been announced on the floor of the Senate that he would ask an investigation.

It is the first time in the history of the Senate when charges so vague and indefinite against a member-elect have received the least consideration, and it is to be hoped that it will not hereafter be regarded as a precedent to excuse injustice to others entitled to seats in this body. The testimony will show that these memorials were distributed from the custom-house in Portland (where they were proved to have been first seen) through the mails to Republican postmasters for the purpose of procuring signatures; and the man Brown, already referred to, employed in some subordinate position about that building, testified that he went into different counties with these petitions for that purpose. With the exception of this man Brown, no satisfactory proof could be obtained as to who were the guilty parties; but in the opinion of the undersigned, drawn from all the facts and circumstances proved in this investigation, the charges against Senator Grover contained in these memorials originated in a conspiracy to deprive him, by perjury and subornation of perjury, of a seat in the Senate to which he had been fairly elected by the legislature of Oregon.

ELI SAULSBURY.

[Forty-fifth Congress—Second and third sessions.]

STANLEY MATTHEWS,

Senator from Ohio from October 15, 1877, till March 3, 1879.

June 5, 1878, Mr. Matthews submitted a resolution that a select committee be appointed to consider what connection, if any, he had had with any real or pretended frauds committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876, and with any promises of reward made by any one to one James E. Anderson in consideration of any official conduct by said Anderson in relation to said election, and to inquire into all the circumstances of any recommendation by himself of the said Anderson for appointment to office. The resolution was agreed to. March 1, 1879, the committee reported that they met on the 21st day of June, 1878, for the purpose of examining Mr. Anderson; that he refused to testify; that Congress having adjourned they could not compel him to testify; that the committee met again in December, 1878, and not agreeing to a motion that the Senate be requested to take proceedings to compel Mr. Anderson's attendance, reported to the Senate a resolution that the House of Representatives be requested to transmit to the Senate a copy of Mr. Anderson's testimony relating to Mr. Matthews before a House committee; that the testimony was transmitted and referred to this committee January 28, 1879; that Mr. Matthews was then examined. The committee found unanimously the statements of Mr. Matthews to be true; that he had had no connection with any real or supposed frauds in the election in Louisiana, and that he was not guilty of any corrupt conduct in any of the matters referred to in the testimony, while they regarded his action in respect to Mr. Anderson's effort to obtain an appointment to office, under the circumstances, as wrong and injurious to the public interest. No further action on the subject was taken by the Senate.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals 45th Cong., 2d and 3d sess., and the report of the committee from Senate Reports, 45th Cong., 3d sess., vol. 2, No. 867.

There were no debates.

WEDNESDAY, June 5, 1878.

Mr. Matthews rose to a question of privilege, and having addressed the Senate upon the subject of certain statements made elsewhere, calculated to reflect upon his character and standing as a member of the Senate, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That a select committee of seven Senators be appointed to inquire into and consider all things touching the matter stated and referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Matthews] and the events connected therewith, and particularly what connection, if any, that Senator had with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876, and with any promises of protection or reward, if any, made by any one to one James E. Anderson, or others, in consideration of, or connection with, any official conduct by said Anderson or others, in relation to said election or the returns thereof; and into all the circumstances of any recommendation by the said Senator of the said Anderson for appointment to office; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and have leave to sit during the recess."

Ordered, That the committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

SATURDAY, June 8, 1878.

The President pro tempore appointed Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Allison, Mr. Ingalls, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Davis of Illinois, Mr. Whyte, and Mr. Jones of Florida members of the select committee authorized by the resolution of the 5th instant to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential election in Louisiana.

WEDNESDAY, June 12, 1878.

On motion by Mr. Allison,

Ordered, That the select committee appointed to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential election in Louisiana have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

WEDNESDAY, June 19, 1878.

Mr. Allison submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the select committee appointed under the resolution of the 5th instant to make inquiry concerning the alleged connection of Senator Matthews with matters relative to the late Presidential election in Louisiana, in exercising the power heretofore granted to sit during the recess of Congress, may hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation."

[Third session of the Forty-fifth Congress.]

TUESDAY, December 10, 1878.

Mr. Allison, from the select committee to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential election in Louisiana, reported the following resolution which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate a copy of the testimony of one James E. Anderson relating to the Hon. Stanley Matthews, a member of the Senate from the State of Ohio, understood to have been taken before one of the committees of the House of Representatives."

MONDAY, January 27, 1879.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Adams, its Clerk:

"Mr. President, I am directed to communicate to the Senate, in compliance with its request of December 10, 1878, a copy of the testimony of James E. Anderson, given before the committee of the House of Representatives on investigation of alleged frauds in the electoral vote of the States of Louisiana and Florida."

TUESDAY, January 28, 1879.

The testimony* of James E. Anderson before a committee of the House of Representatives, yesterday received from the House of Representatives in response to a resolution of the Senate of December 10, 1878, was referred to the select committee to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential election in Louisiana, and ordered to be printed.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1879.

Mr. Allison, from the select committee who were directed by a resolution of June 5, 1878, to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential election in Louisiana, submitted a report (No. 867) thereon, with the recommendation that they be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 1, 1879.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Allison, from the Select Committee to inquire into certain matters touching the late Presidential Election in Louisiana, submitted the following report:

The committee appointed in pursuance of the following resolution adopted by the Senate on the 5th June, 1878—

"Resolved, That a select committee of seven Senators be appointed to inquire into and consider all things touching the matter stated and referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Matthews], and the events connected therewith, and particularly what connection, if any, that Senator had with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876, and with any promises of protection or reward, if any, made by any one to one James E. Anderson, or others, in consideration of or connection with any official conduct by said Anderson or others, in relation to said election or the returns thereof; and into all the circumstances of any recommendation by the said Senator of the said Anderson for appointment to office; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and have leave to sit during the recess"— submit the following report of their proceedings:

The committee held its first meeting on the 11th June, 1878, and determined, on the 13th of June, to summon James E. Anderson, named in said resolution. Mr. Anderson appeared, but was not examined, for the reason that his presence was requested before a committee of the House, known as the Potter committee, as appears from the following letter addressed to the acting chairman:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1878.

Mr. Senator ALLISON,
Chairman, &c.:

Mrs. Jenks is about to be put on the stand, and we would prefer, if entirely agreeable to the Senate committee, that Mr. Anderson should be present during her examination. This is important to the House committee. At any other time take him.

W. R. MORRISON,
Acting Chairman.

* Found in Senate Miscellaneous, 42d Cong., 3d sess., vol. 1, No. 50.

The committee again met on the 21st of June, when Anderson, the witness, again appeared and refused to testify; the circumstances of his refusal are fully set forth in the printed proceedings of the committee herewith reported. Congress having adjourned on the 20th day of June, 1878, the committee had no power to compel the witness, Anderson, to testify. On motion of Mr. Whyte, the committee adjourned to meet again when called by the chairman of the committee, it being then understood that no meeting would be called during the recess of Congress, as the committee had no power to enforce its orders in vacation. The committee again met on the 10th day of December, 1878. The chairman stated that he had received a telegram from James E. Anderson, dated Eureka, Nev., saying that he would now appear before the committee if summoned. On motion of Mr. Edmunds, it was "Ordered, That there be reported to the Senate the following:

"'Resolved, That the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate a copy of the testimony of one James E. Anderson relating to the Hon. Stanley Matthews, a member of the Senate from the State of Ohio, understood to have been taken before one of the committees of the House of Representatives.'

"Mr. Edmunds submitted a motion that James E. Anderson be reported to the Senate as in contempt of its authority for refusing to testify before this committee, and that the Senate be requested to take the proper proceedings to secure his attendance.

"The motion was not agreed to, there being three ayes: Messrs. Edmunds, Davis, and Whyte. The noes were: Messrs. Allison (chairman), Hoar, and Ingalls. Mr. Jones, absent.

"On motion of Mr. Whyte, the committee adjourned to meet at the call of the chairman"—

It being understood that the committee should await the action of the House on the resolution calling for the testimony of Anderson taken by the House committee, which resolution was reported to the Senate on the 10th of December, 1878, and agreed to. On the 28th day of January, 1879, the House of Representatives transmitted to the Senate the testimony of James E. Anderson in pursuance of the request made by resolution of the Senate heretofore referred to, passed on the 10th day of December, 1878. This testimony was on the 28th day of January, 1879, referred to this committee and ordered to be printed. On the 7th February the committee met pursuant to the call of the chairman—

"Present: the chairman (Mr. Allison), Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Whyte"—

When the following proceedings were had:

"On motion of Mr. Edmunds, Senator Matthews was directed to be notified that the committee had received a copy of the testimony of James E. Anderson before a select committee of the House of Representatives, and was ready to hear what he had to say on the subject.

"The chairman having transmitted such notification, Hon. Stanley Matthews appeared before the committee.

"The CHAIRMAN. Senator Matthews, this committee now has the testimony of James E. Anderson, which, I believe, I called your attention to some days ago and furnished you a copy of; and the committee are ready to hear anything you may wish to say in reference to that testimony.

"Mr. MATTHEWS. I am ready to be sworn.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume, also, the committee is ready to hear you in reference to whether you desire to have Mr. Anderson called for further examination by this committee.

"Mr. MATTHEWS. In regard to the inquiry in respect to my wishes as to whether the committee shall recall Mr. Anderson, I desire to say that it is a matter in which I have no wish, and desire to express none, believing that I ought to leave the matter entirely to the discretion of the committee to do in that matter, and in respect to any other witness, what they ought to do under the duty imposed upon them by the resolution of the Senate.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. We understand you to mean by that, Mr. Matthews, that in your judgment, so far as your own vindication is concerned, you do not desire us to compel him to attend.

"Mr. MATTHEWS. I do not make any request of that kind to the committee, and do not deem it necessary that I should do so for my own vindication.

"The CHAIRMAN. Then we will proceed with your examination.

"Hon. STANLEY MATTHEWS sworn and examined.

"The WITNESS. By a reading of the resolution, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it appears that the committee were appointed to 'inquire into and consider all things touching the matters stated and referred to' by myself in the personal statement which I made to the Senate on the 5th of June last, and reported in the Congressional Record, 'and particularly what connection, if any,' I had 'with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876, and with any promises of protection or reward, if any, made by any one to one James E. Anderson or others, in consideration of or in connection with any official conduct by said Anderson or others in relation to said election or the returns thereof, and into all the circumstances of any recommendation by the said Senator of the said Anderson for appointment to office.'

"In order to enable the committee to rightly understand my relation to the whole subject, and also as a necessary preliminary to any statement I may have to make in reference to the testimony of Mr. Anderson himself, it will be necessary for me to make a statement in respect to the visit that I made to New Orleans in November, 1876.

"On the 11th day of November, 1876, which was Saturday, I received a telegram at Cincinnati from the President of the United States, General Grant, requesting me to proceed to New Orleans for the purpose of witnessing, with other gentlemen, the canvass and count of the votes in that State for the Presidential electors. I replied to that telegram to the effect that I would leave Cincinnati for New Orleans in obedience to that request that night. I learned during the course of the day that General Edward F. Noyes, now the United States minister at Paris, and the Hon. Job E. Stevenson, formerly a Representative in Congress from one of the districts in Cincinnati, were also going on the same train, and I met them that night on the car.

"On arriving at Louisville and leaving there, I ascertained that a number of gentlemen prominent in public life and members of the Democratic party were also on their way to New Orleans in connection with the same matter. Among others were Senator McDonald, ex-Senator Trumbull of Illinois, General Palmer of Illinois, a gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Julian, Judge Stallo of Cincinnati, and some other gentlemen, some from Chicago, whose names I do not now recall.

"We reached New Orleans on Monday at or near noon, and proceeded to the St. Charles Hotel, where General Noyes, Mr. Stevenson, and myself took rooms. No other gentlemen of the Republican party who subsequently participated in the proceedings there arrived until the lapse of two or three days.

"In the mean time a communication in writing had been addressed by the Democratic visitors to the Republican visitors, which had been put into my hands and held until the arrival of gentlemen who were expected to act with us, and was replied to after consultation, all of which was made a matter of publication at the time. In the mean time I had seen a great many persons in New Orleans, citizens of that place and of Louisiana, of both political parties, and had heard a great deal from them in reference to the general situation of the State in regard to the recent election, and obtained certain general impressions in respect to it, but did not acquire any knowledge of the details of the matter as it was expected that they might appear.

"In the latter part of the week, not ealier than Friday and possibly on Saturday morning, for the first time I saw any of the members of the returning board. On that occasion I met General Thomas C. Anderson and ex-Governor J. Madison Wells at the custom-house in company on my part with Mr. Sherman, the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Stoughton of New York, and some other gentlemen whose names I do not recall. A general conversation ensued on the subject of the political situation in Louisiana and in reference to the general duties that were charged by law upon the returning board and its members, in which there was nothing said inconsistent with a strong expression of a general desire on the part of all the persons present that there should be a fair, open, and lawful canvass and count of the vote, and an expression on the part of those charged with that of a determination to do their duty fully in that respect without reference to the result, and no probable result was then discussed as likely to follow any course that might be adopted, no intimation that it was to come out in any specific way one way or the other.

"The fact was known and referred to that there were present in the city a considerable number of gentlemen representing both political parties, who had come there for the purpose of witnessing the proceedings of the board, and it was strongly urged by Mr. Sherman, Mr. Stoughton, and myself upon the two gentlemen who constituted members of that board that there should be an invitation from the board to representatives of these delegations to be present at their meetings and was acquiesced in immediately by General Anderson and Governor Wells, and I was requested to make a draught of a proper resolution containing such an invitation and request, which I immediately proceeded to do, and which, after some change of phraseology, was considered to be suitable, was delivered into the hands of one or the other of these gentlemen for the purpose of being offered in the board when it should hold its first meeting, and which afterward, upon an examination of their published proceedings, I found to be substantially the one which they did in fact adopt.

"In the mean time it became apparent to me that the proceedings which I had come down to witness would be prolonged beyond any expectation that I had entertained when I accepted the invitation to attend, and having left my home and business upon a few hours' notice, had not made suitable preparation for any absence such as was necessarily required for that purpose; and I accordingly made my apologies to the gentlemen with whom I was expected to be associated, and left New Orleans on Saturday evening, being November 18, for Cincinnati, where I arrived on Monday morning, the 20th, without having been present at any meeting of the returning-board, without having ever seen any of the documents which were to be presented to them containing returns of the elections or other accompanying papers, and without in any way having participated in any of their proceedings beyond what I have already stated. So that in answer to the question as to 'what connection' I had 'with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876,' as stated in the resolution of investigation, it is apparent that there was no place for any such connection, for I was not present in the State or at the place where anything of the sort was possible and knew nothing in reference to the matter.

"During that time, as I have already stated, I saw a great many persons of both political parties, citizens of New Orleans, and of course at this time I am not able to say positively whom I saw and whom I did not see. I am quite sure, so far as I can be sure of anything of the sort, that I did not see during my stay in New Orleans Mr. James E. Anderson, for when I afterward saw him it was for the first time, as it appeared to me from his appearance. I did not recognize the fact at that time that I had ever seen him before. I had heard of one Anderson as being a supervisor of registration for the election in East Feliciana Parish, in connection with the fact stated in New Orleans at the time that one of the questions that would arise before the board in reference to the returns of that election would be whether the protest ought to have accompanied the returns, or whether it was valid, although placed upon the returns subsequently, it being stated that the excuse for not putting it upon the return at the time was that it could not be safely done by the officer for fear of his life.

"I refer now to the fact that I do not believe I saw Mr. Anderson in New Orleans during that time, for the reason that in a letter which he seems to have produced before the committee of the House of Representatives, addressed to Weber, dated November 20, 1876, and contained in page 15 of his printed testimony as printed for the use of the Senate, he uses my name as if at that time he had had some communication with me or some knowledge of me in reference to the matter as to which he testified, for in that letter he says:

"'I am not satisfied, and have no more faith in Sherman, Matthews & Co. than I have in Pitt Kellogg.'

"And in order to rebut the implication arising from his use of my name in that connection, I desire to say that at that time I had no knowledge of the man other than what I have just stated. I had never seen him; I had never had any communication with him, and had never made any communication intended for him, and knew nothing of any communication that he had with anybody else.

"Mr. WHYTE. He swears he never met you until he met you in Cincinnati.

"The WITNESS. I believe that is the case. Now, the first time that I ever did see him, according to my memory, assisted by a memorandum, was the 23d day of March, 1877. I get that date not from my memory alone, for I would not be able to refer to the precise date, but upon the envelope containing the paper known as the Nash agreement, the original of which is now in the hands of the committee of the House. I made a pencil memorandum of that day as being the day of its receipt, although I did not make it on the day when I received it. I did not make that memorandum until I received subsequently a letter from Anderson of April 7, 1877, from New Orleans, in which was inclosed the other paper known as the Weber agreement.

"Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He puts the date he gave you that as the 22d.

"The WITNESS. I refer to that now because I do not wish to appear to contradict him unnecessarily and where I am not wholly sure that I am accurate.

"The CHAIRMAN. You fix it at the 23d.

"The WITNESS. The 23d is the memorandum in pencil on the back of this envelope, but having made it not at the time but subsequently to the time when I received the letter of April 7, I may have made an error in my then recollection of the day.

"Mr. Anderson, in his testimony, on page 26, undertakes to give the substance of what passed in our interview on that occasion, and I quote from it as follows. He says:

"'I went into a general history of the election in Louisiana. I told him what part I had taken, of the manner in which the election in East Feliciana had been conducted and in the State; told him they had thrown out my parish on a forged protest; that they had made me promises which they had not fulfilled and had no intention of fulfilling; in fact, told him the whole story of the whole thing right through; went into all the details, with the exception that I omitted any mention of Mr. Sherman's name.'

"That statement is entirely false. He did not go into the 'general history of the election in Louisiana.' He did not tell me 'what part' he 'had taken; of the manner in which the election in East Feliciana had been conducted and in the State.' He did not tell me 'they had thrown out' his 'parish on a forged protest.' He did not tell me 'that they had made promises which they had not fulfilled and had no intention of fulfilling.' He did not tell me what he calls 'the whole story of the whole thing right through,' or go into any of the details of the matters to which he refers. On the contrary, he introduced himself to me in my office, gave me his name, and said that he had been the supervisor of registration in East Feliciana Parish in the Presidential election; that he was a young man who had been in Louisiana for some years, had been active and zealous in the Republican cause during all the period, had labored in season and out of season, by day and by night; had assisted not only in New Orleans but throughout in different parts of the State in organizing the Republican party; that he had rendered what he believed to be valuable, efficient, but so far as he described them entirely honest and honorable services in the promotion of the cause of his party; that he had done this at great sacrifice of time, of money, of health, and at times at great peril of his life from his political opponents; that it was a dangerous service, and so far as he was concerned had been an unrequited service; that, to be sure, he had at that time a subordinate position as a clerk in the custom-house at New Orleans, the amount of the salary of which he did not mention, but he spoke of it as being insufficient to meet the necessities of his family; that he had in addition now to his other misfortunes to have incurred the enmity and hostility of the leaders of the Republican party organization in New Orleans, mentioning the names particularly of Kellogg and Packard with others, and that altogether his life in New Orleans had become intolerable, although if he could get a better and improved condition of things there in respect to salary he would be willing to remain, but that he thought under the circumstances he was entitled to something better elsewhere.

"He narrated this at considerable length and with great apparent earnestness and emotion, exhibiting great feeling and with the appearance of tears, so much so that I was, soon after his conversation commenced, very much enlisted in his interest, possibly the more so because he was appealing to me as against the men whom he said he had benefited there and to whom he naturally would have the right to look, the managers of his own political organization, and suggesting that the cause of their hostility to him was on account also of their hostility to the Republican national administration, to the President and his policy. I said to him that I sympathized with him, that I felt sorry for him, that I would be glad to serve him in any way that was proper, and if I could do so that I would endeavor to obtain for him some suitable employment in the Government, first a better place in New Orleans if it could be had, and, if not, then some other place, he suggesting that he would like to have some position abroad as consul on account of the health of his wife.

"In this matter I gave him no pledge; I brought neither myself nor any one else under any obligation further than the general expression of my good-will, my desire to serve him, and my intention to try to do so, and there was not in the whole course of the conversation the remotest hint that he had been engaged in any unlawful or dishonorable service in behalf of the party, and that he expected me to help reward him for it, nor did he claim that anybody else had made any promises to him in that respect which he had a right to have fulfilled or which he had a right to call upon me to help him in the fulfillment of. It was, so far as the conversation had proceeded up to that time, the ordinary case of an application on behalf of a person who was in great need of employment and who thought he was entitled to it as a matter of recognition for his general service in behalf of his party.

"He appeared to be very gratefully affected by the interest which I seemed to manifest in him, and was profuse in his expressions of pleasure and gratitude that I had received him so differently from the treatment that he had received from those to whom he had a better right, as he thought, to look, and he had gotten up to leave with the satisfaction which he had derived from what I had said to him, when he put his hand in his pocket and took out a paper and said there was a paper which he thought under the circumstances I ought to have, and gave me the original paper which is called the Nash agreement. What is found on page 24 of the testimony is, so far as I remember, a correct copy of it.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. What do you mean by 'original paper'; do you mean genuine paper?—A. I mean merely the original of which this print is a copy, which I furnished.

"By Mr. DAVIS:

"Q. That paper is now in the hands of the Potter committee?—A. Yes, sir. I delivered that paper, together with the other documents called the Weber agreement, into the hands of General Cox, to be produced before the committee of the House on the examination of Mr. Anderson, together with some original letters which I had from Mr. Anderson, all of which he has produced and which are referred to in the printed testimony.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. In that connection, if I do not interfere with your statement, I should like to ask whether you delivered to General Cox, a member of the House committee, the identical papers that came to you from Anderson?—A. Yes, sir; and I intended to state in reference to that, because Mr. Anderson in his testimony denounces the Weber agreement produced by General Cox as a counterfeit, that it is the precise and identical and only paper of the kind delivered to me by him and conveyed through the mail from New Orleans in a letter dated April 7, 1877. The Nash paper I read when he handed it to me. I read it casually and hastily, but with sufficient attention to observe its character, and I asked what it meant. He thereupon stated to me that it was not what it appeared to be; that he had no design in it to obtain the position of naval officer at New Orleans; that it was perfectly understood that that was so; that he had no idea that Mr. Nash could do it, or that it could be done even if Mr. Nash was willing to do it, and that he had no evidence to suppress showing that the parish of East Feliciana was fairly carried by the Democratic party at the election held in November, 1876, thereby electing the entire State ticket and Congressmen, and that there was no object on his part or design on his part or on Nash's part to suppress any evidence. And on my asking him what it was meant for then, he said it was executed simply for the purpose that he might have a hold on Mr. Nash. There may have been something said in that connection about other and similar papers. If there was, the papers were not described, and I have no recollection of what was said; nor, indeed, have I any recollection that anything was said as to the existence of any other similar paper. My belief is that there was nothing said, because (and that is the reason of my belief) when I received the subsequent letter, dated April 7, containing the Weber agreement, it was a surprise to me as a thing that I had not expected to get.

"Q. Is that in print?—A. The letter itself is in the printed testimony at page 100.

"Q. That is the letter to which you refer?—A. Yes, sir. In the interval before the receipt of that letter I had written the letters contained on page 27 or on different pages of the same leaf.

"Q. Have you now stated all that took place between you and Anderson on the 22d or 23d of March?—A. Yes, sir, further than to say to him at that time that I would give him a letter of introduction to General Harlan when I ascertained that he had arrived in New Orleans, which I did subsequently on the 29th of March, as appears by the letter on page 27.

"I had received a letter after Anderson's leaving me at Cincinnati and going to New Orleans, in which he had inquired what he should say to Nash as to where the Nash agreement was, and in my note to him giving him a note of introduction I told him to say to Nash, if inquired of, that I had the agreement, and I desired Nash should know it.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. You are now speaking of the letter dated March 27, which is found on page 104 of the printed document?—A. Yes, sir. In that he asks me in reference to Nash: 'Shall I inform him that it is in your possession?' I replied to him on the 29th: 'You should say to Nash, if inquired of, that I have the agreement.'

"The next important step in the matter was the receipt by me of the letter now referred to of April 7, 1877, in which he informed me of what he claimed to be a combination on the part of Packard and others to accomplish some purpose in respect of the title of the President, outlining their hostility to him, stating that they were trying to induce him to go with them, all of which appears by the letter itself. He refers in that letter to what he calls 'the Pitkin et al. agreement,' as to which I know nothing more than is contained in that statement, and had never heard of it before.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. Have you ever heard it since until now?—A. Nor since. The Weber agreement is the one of which I have already spoken that he refers to, and which he speaks of as 'the last piece of documentary evidence in existence.' And then adds: 'I will now have to trust entirely to you, as the ill-feeling borne me by the Republican leaders has been intensified by my refusal to aid them in their infamous scheme.' The paper referred to as the Weber agreement is the one contained on page 12 of the printed testimony.

"When I received that paper and read it I made the memorandum in pencil to which I referred on the back of the envelope which had been delivered to me in our conversation, which contained the Nash agreement. At the time I received this paper, and from that time until after Mr. Anderson commenced his testimony before the House committee,

I supposed it to be a genuine document so far as the signatures were concerned, and that, it point of fact, it had been signed and acknowledged and sworn to both by Anderson and Weber, and I had no suspicion to the contrary until——

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. You supposed, when you received it, that it was a genuine document?—A. That it was a genuine document; that is, that the signatures of Weber and Anderson were both in their own handwriting and placed there by themselves.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. Do you know in that connection at what time Weber died and of what disease?—A. I do not. I only know by report.

"Q. Of course, that is what I meant.—A. He was killed, as it was reported, subsequently to this.

"Q. Subsequently to the date of your receipt of the paper?—A. After that; I do not know precisely when.

"By Mr. WHYTE:

"Q. Subsequent to the date of the paper?—A. Yes; whether he was dead when I received the paper or not I do not remember. I do not know what date I have heard ascribed as the date of his death.

"After Anderson had commenced his testimony before the House committee, and my attention was attracted by it, and it was published in the newspapers, my suspicions were excited in regard to this paper and its signatures, and I compared them with other signatures said to be genuine ones of Weber, and it was apparent to any one from that inspection that the handwritings were not written by the same person, and I think a suggestion of that kind leaked out in the newspapers at the time; and it was after that that the paper, having been obtained from me by General Cox, was produced before the committee of the House and exhibited to Mr. Anderson, when he denied that it was the same paper which he had delivered to me. I now repeat and reiterate that if that paper which General Cox produced before the House committee as obtained from me was not the same paper which Mr. Anderson sent to me by mail, then I never received any paper from him of that kind, because the paper was the identical paper and the only paper which I did receive from him, without alteration in any respect.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Under cover of the 7th of April?—A. Under cover of the 7th of April, and accompanied by the letter on page 100 of this testimony. It is important to me, that my own conduct should be rightly estimated by the committee and the Senate, that I should state what my impressions were in regard to the character and objects of the two papers.

"The impressions produced upon my mind by the consideration of these papers, and the inferences that I drew from them, as near as I can analyze what the state of my mind was at the time and during the whole progress of the matter, were about these: In the first place, I supposed from the nature of the papers, as well as from the explanation which Mr. Anderson had attempted of the Nash agreement, that the object of their execution and preservation up to that time when they were delivered into my hands was, to use a common and strong phrase, for purposes of black-mail; that himself and Weber had expected to make use of them in some improper way, either with Republicans or Democrats, whichever he might find to be most available for such a purpose, if he could find any, as a lever with which to promote some personal schemes and benefits to themselves. I understood from the nature of the conversation between myself and Mr. Anderson in my office, the circumstances and manner of his delivery at that time of the Nash agreement, and his sending to me by the letter referred to, and from the contents of that letter itself, the Weber agreement, that his object in delivering those papers to me was to deprive himself of the opportunity of making use of them according to their original intention, and to convince me that the purpose for which they were originally executed had been finally abandoned. There were several expressions made use of at the time of the delivery of the Nash agreement which suggested that idea and were intended to convey to my mind the belief that the paper was delivered to me for any purpose that I might see fit to use it for, to be entirely at my disposal, and that the two papers when they both came into my hands were the only copies that there were, that they were originals, and that there were no copies. In other words, that he was surrendering to me all the instruments by which he had ever intended any mischief in order that no mischief might be done by them, that I might be entirely satisfied of it, and that he had done this because he had found that I was ready and willing to help him in his condition by obtaining for him recognition and employment.

"I believe that the papers were given to me in good faith for that purpose, in order that no mischief might be done, that they might not be employed for any evil purpose.

Added to this, I had the impression and belief at that time, not that the papers were evidence of any fraud or wrong committed in the election, as to which I did not believe that any did exist, but that their publication would be regarded by many as strong, if not conclusive, evidence of such, and could have no useful purpose, but, on the contrary, would only tend to promote what I regarded as a mischievous and unfounded public scandal. Therefore I considered it a matter of some importance to what I believed to be public interests that the papers should be in the custody of a person who would not employ them for any such purpose.

"With those impressions on my mind, if I have been able to make myself clearly understood by the committee, I continued to carry out the intention which I had expressed to Mr. Anderson in the interview which I had with him when I first saw him before I had any knowledge of the existence of either paper, and that was to help him to get a suitable public employment, and the letters which are contained in his testimony which passed between us were written in pursuance of that intention and for the purpose of accomplishing that result; and in respect to those letters, they are, so far as I know, all correct, with the exception of one where he has undertaken to furnish the original of a letter addressed to me, and where I have furnished the original as received by me, and they do not entirely correspond, although the difference is not perhaps substantial, but I will point it out. It is the letter of June 19, 1877, the correct and original of which furnished by me is contained on page 106, marked A L, but the copy of which produced by Mr. Anderson to the committee in his testimony is on page 34, and the committee, by comparing the two, will observe the differences.

"Q. The letter that you received from Anderson, dated June 19, 1877, is found on page 106?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And the letter which he describes as having sent you of that date is on page 34?—A. Yes, sir.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. And you mean to say you did not receive any two letters such as those?—A. I did not. My explanation in my own mind of the difference is that the letter which he produced on page 34 is the draught of a letter which he intended to send me, and in copying it he changed it so as to make the difference. The one he in fact sent is contained on page 106.

"Q. And that is the only one you received?—A. That is the only one of that date which I received. It would be impossible for me to follow up the whole course of the correspondence and all the matters in connection with it in any connected narrative now from recollection. The matter, however, went on as indicated by the correspondence until I received a letter or telegram from General T. C. H. Smith, who was then the appointment clerk in the Treasury Department. That letter is here.

"By Mr. WHYTE:

"Q. Is not that at the bottom of page 106?—A. I think not, but it may be, perhaps. I am not sure but I received either a letter or a telegram, and my answer, if this be the letter, is not here, but is contained in General Smith's testimony before the House committee. I remember the substance of my answer, which I think was by telegraph, and that was that neither I nor any other person was under any obligation to Mr. Anderson, and that if he was not willing to accept such a position as Mr. Smith was willing to offer and thought a suitable place for him, to drop him and the whole business.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Have you a copy of that?—A. I can get it from the House committee, but probably I had better get General Smith's whole testimony.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. What are you now referring to? Is it your letter mentioned in General Smith's note of June 25, 1877, 'A M,' on page 106 at the bottom?—A. No; I think not. I think the one I refer to must have been in answer to this probably, but that will appear when it is produced.

"Subsequently to that I happened to meet Mr. Anderson near Washington. He refers himself to the interview. It was on the train going from here to Baltimore. I had not seen him while we were both remaining in the city.

"By Mr. HOAR:

"Q. When was that?—A. I do not remember the date, but it was subsequent to this correspondence with General Smith, and must have been nearly about that time. It must have been just prior to his writing this letter of June 19.

"Q. Where were you then?—A. I was just leaving Washington.

"Q. At the time of the letters of June 19th and 22d?—A. When I got that letter I was in Cincinnati. Just prior to his writing that letter, and at the date of the letter, I was in Washington, and I was leaving here and was on the cars when I saw Mr. Anderson. He was on the same train, and told me he was going over to Baltimore to enter upon the duties of some position in the custom-house there that General Smith had given him, and he was very much gratified that he had received it, and was very profuse in his expressions of thankfulness to me for having procured it for him, and I supposed that he was satisfied until that letter came. Subsequent to that I understood that he had obtained employment on a newspaper, the North American, at Philadelphia, and that an arrangement had been made between himself and General Smith by which his brother was to have a place, and did have a place, perhaps the same place that he had vacated in the custom-house at Baltimore, and he expressed himself as very much satisfied with that and pleased with the arrangement, and the matter I considered as having entirely passed beyond any connection of mine with it.

"After that I saw him in Washington once or twice; I do not remember the occasions. He called at my house on more than one occasion, but it had no reference at that time to himself as to any position. He had, as he told me, no further desire for any office for himself; that he was well situated in the newspaper, and it was greatly better for him, and he did not want anything further, and was satisfied with what had been done so far as I was concerned. But he commenced talking then to me about the appointments to be made by the President in reference to New Orleans, the custom-house appointments, the appointment of marshal, but particularly the custom-house appointments; and I was called upon at or about the same time by Dr. Darrall, who had then just been unseated by the House of Representatives from the seat which he claimed from Louisiana, who also began to talk about the custom-house in New Orleans, and about being an applicant for it himself, and I was made aware that it was Mr. Anderson's desire that Dr. Darrall should be appointed, and that it was their joint desire that I should take some steps to secure Dr. Darrall's appointment.

"I said most distinctly at the time and at all times to these gentlemen, either separately or apart, wherever they happened to talk to me on the subject, that I neither could nor would take any part in the matter whatever; that it was a matter in which I had no right to interfere, and in which I had no desire to interfere; that I had been accused by the friends of Governor Packard of standing in the way as the only obstacle to his appointment as collector at New Orleans, and that so far from that I had expressly said that it was none of my business, and in order to satisfy the friends of Governor Packard, and at their desire, I had taken what seemed to me to be the unnecessary pains of going to the President to say that if he thought the public interest would be best served by the appointment of Governor Packard as collector of customs, I hoped that no personal consideration would interfere with the execution of his intentions in that respect, and certainly, so far as I was concerned, that I had no personal reasons for opposing his nomination or confirmation, and that consequently, being in that attitude and having at that time rather made up my mind that perhaps Governor Packard's nomination would be a good thing to do, I declined to have anything further to do with the matter, and in that state, that condition of things, I happened one day—I do not remember the hour of the day—to meet Mr. Anderson in one of the public places of this Capitol, between the Senate Chamber and the entrance in the hall, evidently in a state of intoxication, the first time I had ever seen him in such a condition, and with a very abrupt and insolent address to me, wanted to know what the Administration were going to do about the appointment of a collector of customs at New Orleans, and said he would give them just one week in which to make up their minds about the matter. I immediately, as soon as he had finished his notice, said to him that he was drunk and insulting, and that I should have no further communication with him, and forbade him to approach me or communicate with me in any way whatever. He afterwards called at my house, as I was informed by a servant, with his card, but I declined to see him, and have never seen him since, except publicly and in this room; and all statements made by him or by Dr. Darrall in reference to my having made any promises to use my influence or otherwise take any steps to influence the nomination of himself or anybody else as collector of customs at New Orleans are pure fabrications, without any foundation in truth; and so far as I now recall anything I have said, all that occurs to me as important in reference to this matter, with perhaps this exception, that I ought to say that on no occasion did Mr. Anderson ever, either expressly or by any implication, suggest that he had any promise from Mr. Sherman, or that he knew of any, offering him assistance in the way of public office or otherwise for anything that he did or omitted to do in reference to the election in Louisiana. I never heard of the so-called Sherman letter until it became matter of public notoriety through the newspaper press in connection with this matter; and so far as I am now advised, I submit the matter for further examination to the committee.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. In any of these interviews with Mr. Anderson, did he ever say or in any manner intimate or hint that he had been a party to, or knew of, any misdoings in respect of misrepresenting the true result of the election down there?—A. Never on any occasion in any way whatever. On the contrary, all that was said or suggested necessarily carried just the contrary meaning to my mind.

"Q. I understand you to mean, then, in the statement which you have made, that whatever interest you took in the affair, or whatever you did or said about Anderson's getting a place or anybody else getting a place, was not under any impression that you were helping him on account of any contrivance or misdeed that he had done or knew of, but on account of his having made you believe that he had done the honest and regular work that members of all political parties who are honest feel that they have a right to do?—A. That is what I mean, and that it was in his case a case of peculiar hardship, on the ground of which he made the appeal to me especially, because the persons to whom he would naturally look otherwise, by reason of their hostility to the Administration, as he claimed, had also become hostile to him.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. In handing you these papers purporting to be agreements, did he explain to you definitely that there had been a purpose at one time, either in his mind or the mind of Mr. Nash or Mr. Weber, to use these papers improperly?—A. The substance of what he said to me in delivering to me the Nash agreement was this: After rising to his feet to leave, after the substance of the conversation as I have related it had closed and I had expressed an intention to help him as far as I could, he put his hand in his pocket and took out the envelope containing the Nash agreement and said: 'Here is a paper that I think you ought to have: I give it to you without any conditions, to do with as you see proper.' I then opened the paper, read it through, observed its general character, and asked him what it meant, and he then proceeded with a statement, which I have already undertaken to give, that it did not mean what it appeared to mean; that there was no evidence to supress; that there was no fraud as to which there was any evidence; that he had no expectation of getting any such office, but that he had had the paper given in order (as I remember) to have a hold on him. That was all the intimation of any illegal purpose. And the other paper came to me inclosed with the letter of April 7, which contained all the information I had in relation to it."

The hour of the meeting of the Senate having arrived, the committee adjourned to meet again on the 11th February. On that day—

"The committee met pursuant to adjournment, all the members present.

"The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think it important that I should make more distinct and clear one matter. In my first interview with Mr. Anderson when he handed to me the Nash agreement, as I have already stated, he did not state what purpose that paper had been executed for, further than for the purpose as he stated of obtaining some hold on Nash; and took pains to explain the contents of the paper as not meaning what they would appear to mean; that in point of fact there was no evidence of any fraud that he had possession of, and none that he had agreed to suppress, and no expectation of relying as significant upon any promise made in the paper in reference to the office spoken of; and my distinct understanding, from all the circumstances, from his manner, from his conversation, and from the period of time during the conversation when this occurred, was that he delivered that paper to me in token of his surrender of the paper and of all the purposes for which the paper was originally intended to be used or for which it might be used; and what emphasizes that impression and conviction on my mind is that there had been no previous conversation between us in respect to the paper or any of the things to which the paper related, nothing to call it out, no expectation on my part that I should obtain it, no hint from him that there was any such paper until he produced it; and in doing so he said it was a paper which he thought I ought to have, as I supposed in return for the good-will which I had expressed toward him, the interest which I had manifested in his case, stating at the time that he delivered it to me to be treated in whatever way I chose.

"That impression was so strong that I supposed at the time that the object in delivering the paper to me, as he afterward also did with the subsequent paper called the Weber agreement, was for the purpose that I might destroy them. I did not do so, simply because I anticipated a possibility that on the whole it would be better that I should not, so that in case of the happening of any future contingency that I did not then contemplate it would be essential to my own protection in the matter that I should be able to produce the very papers which I had received; but I received them, the first one at that time and the other one subsequently, as evidence, by the act of his delivering them to me, that he desired to be understood as having abandoned whatever design he may have originally entertained of using them in any way whatever.

"By Mr. EDMUNDS:

"Q. If I understood you the other day, you said in that connection that he accompanied that delivery with the statement that there was no such fact in existence to his knowledge as the paper appeared to import?—A. He did distinctly, and I understand him to reiterate that in the testimony which he gave before the House committee, and that impression was corroborated and strengthened by the contents of the letter of the 7th of April, in which he referred to the alleged machinations as against the President by Mr. Packard and his friends, in which they sought to use him, and from the expressions contained in that letter I inferred that the whole matter was false; that is, that there was no foundation in truth or in fact for the things intended to be brought out by the use of him or of any of the instruments of evidence which he was supposed to have, where he says particularly in reference to one part of their plans, 'of course they commit perjury, but that is a small matter here'; and that impression was not affected by the other expression made use of in the same letter, where he speaks of this Weber agreement as being 'the last piece of documentary evidence in existence.' I of course understood it had no probative force of its own, except supposing it to have been signed by the two parties as a confession that would be admissible as against them, but not containing any evidence in itself as against others of the facts that were recited in it.

"In the note which I gave him of introduction to General Harlan on the 29th of March, I stated that the note would be presented 'by Mr. J. E. Anderson, who may desire to communicate with you confidentially,' and in my note to him, which was on the same sheet, 'you can talk to him as fully as to me.' So far as I now remember what was in my own mind at that time, my object in those expressions was simply to have Mr. Anderson converse with General Harlan in respect to himself and his own case and his own desires and his relations to this whole matter just exactly as he had done to me, so that General Harlan, being on the ground, might better judge as to the propriety of undertaking to assist in forwarding any application to be made by him for any promotion, which was the first thing he spoke of as desirable, in the custom-house office at New Orleans. There was no other matter that I remember of which I expected him to speak confidentially about, except the matters which I have testified to here, and which I remember as a part of the conversation.

"There is one other matter which I desire to make a further explanation about. On the 1st of June it appears that he telegraphed me from Washington in a very peremptory style about arranging this affair 'or you can all face the music."

"By Mr. WHYTE:

"Q. That dispatch on page 105 is dated May 1, but I presume that is a mistake?—A. I am not able now to remember what is the correct date. I remember, however, the fact of there being a discrepancy between the two.

"Q. It must be June 1, from the letters?—A. I think so. On page 32 it is June. He apologized for that by a letter written the next day, which will probably fix the date of that. That letter is on page 106. He writes a letter on the 2d of June in which he apologizes for that dispatch, but subsequently to that, on the 19th of June, after he had experienced a disappointment in the character of the position that was given him in the Baltimore custom-house, he writes the letter of that date set out on page 106, in which he says he proposes 'to wait here,' that is, at Washington, 'until Saturday, and if' his case was not settled by that day, to 'take such steps as the occasion might require.' It was subsequent to that, I believe, though I have it not here, that the correspondence between General Smith and myself took place, in which I stated to General Smith, the appointment clerk of the Treasury Department, that neither I nor any one else was under any obligation to Mr. Anderson, and if he did not see fit to accept such position as Mr. Smith thought was suitable to him, to drop him.

"What I desire more distinctly to have understood is the reasons that actuated me in continuing the correspondence with him and continuing to manifest my interest in him after this conduct on his part toward myself, which in respect to that dispatch was insulting. My first reason was my anxiety, considering his disappointment which he had expressed in reference to the treatment he had received from others, and his disappointment in not succeeding through me in getting what he thought he ought to have, to not give him any excuse in his own mind for believing that I had not acted in entire good faith in carrying out the original expressions of my desire communicated to him in my first conversation to do something for him. I had said that to him under the circumstances which I have stated. I excused his own conduct toward myself as perhaps natural to a man who had an intense desire to accomplish his object, who perhaps was very needy, as I supposed he was, and who might suppose that I, like others whom he had charged, was only giving him words of promise without seeking to do anything to make them good, and I was anxious and sensitive that he should have no excuse to charge me with any bad faith.

"My other reason was my desire that the papers which were in my custody under the circumstances which I have stated, meaning by 'the papers' the Nash agreement and the Anderson-Weber agreement, should not be made public. I confess that I thought it was best that they should not be. I saw no reason for making them public in reference to any public interest involved. I did not believe it would do any good. I could not imagine any good that they would subserve, with my opinion as to their character, and I did believe that they might be made the instruments of mischief and of harm by propagating and to some extent confirming in the popular mind a belief in what I believed to be a false and injurious scandal in reference to the whole matter to which they related, and the two considerations together induced me to tolerate with him up to the point which I have described the conduct which the correspondence manifests as displayed by him.

"I believe these are the matters to which alone I care now to make any additions.

"The committee-room was then cleared for deliberation, after which the doors were reopened, and on Mr. Matthews appearing, the following resolution, adopted by the committee during its deliberation, was read to him:

"'Resolved, That Mr. Matthews may and ought to be examined in the same manner and to the same extent as if Anderson had testified before this committee to the same matters stated in his testimony before the House committee.'

"By Mr. WHYTE:

"Q. Senator Matthews, in pursuance of the resolution which has been read to you, I should like to ask you whether at the meeting at New Orleans, which you attended in pursuance of the request of President Grant, anything was said about protests in regard to the election in East and West Feliciana?—A. Do you mean the interview that I referred to as having been held at the custom-house with General Anderson and Governor Wells?

"Q. That is the interview.—A. There was no conversation on that subject at that time nor at any time between myself and those two gentlemen, members of the returning board, or between them and others in my presence at any time.

"Q. I do not ask as between them and yourself, but between yourself and any other persons?—A. Nor between myself and any other persons.

"Q. Did you know anything about the failure to make protests by these supervisors in regard to the returns from their parishes at the time the returns were regularly made?

"Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest that that inquiry appears to imply that there was a failure to file protests, about which I know nothing and I believe the committee know nothing.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Whyte will modify the question, I suppose.

"Mr. WHYTE. The word 'failure' probably I ought not to use. I supposed everybody remembered the fact that the protests were made in New Orleans, and not made in the parishes.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not remember any such fact. I do not know anything about it.

"Mr. WHYTE. The protests are in this testimony and show that they were made in New Orleans. They were part of the document which Mr. Sherman presented to the Senate.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. I only make the suggestion because I know no such fact, know nothing about it. I only wanted to avoid the committee being committed to an implication which the question seemed to make. It may be a correct implication or it may not.

"Mr. WHYTE. I would only say that the protest to which I refer in regard to East Feliciana is dated at New Orleans, and sworn to before Judge Campbell on the 10th of November, 1876, and appears in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 2, Forty-fourth Congress, second session, page 223.

"The WITNESS. It is also in this testimony of Anderson, on pages 5 and 6.

"Mr. WHYTE. It is.

"The CHAIRMAN. The House has sent to us the entire testimony of Anderson; in other words, has sent us testimony which we did not ask for, and of course it is all printed in this volume. It may not be material in this connection, but it may become so hereafter, and therefore I call attention to the fact.

"The WITNESS. May I go on now?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

"The question of Mr. Whyte was read to the witness, as follows:

"'Do you know anything about the failure to make protests by these supervisors in regard to the returns from their parishes at the time the returns were regularly made?'

A. During the few days I was in New Orleans, between the 13th and 19th of November, 1876, I did hear as a matter of conversation in reference to one or the other, if not both of the parishes of East and West Feliciana, that it was reported that the protests required by law to be made by the officer in charge of the election, called, I believe, the supervisor of registration, was not made on the day of the election, nor at the place of the election, but was supplied subsequently, but at what time and place I do not remember to have heard; and I understood that the question would arise in reference to the validity of those protests as affecting the returns of the election at those places in regard to the jurisdiction of the returning board to go into the question of those facts, which, under the law, were thought to give them power to invalidate the election itself—such as intimidation, force, fear, riots, &c. I say I heard it as a matter of conversation, but from whom, and where, I cannot state positively, except, as heretofore stated, I did not hear anything said on that subject in the interview at which either of the members of the returning board was present.

"Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit for the consideration of the committee, as a matter of fairness towards every member of it, that the answer of this witness has no tendency to establish the fact of the protests not having been made regularly and according to the laws of Louisiana, and that it can only be received so far as it may affect his personal conduct in relation to the transaction. I do not ask the committee to decide the question now; but, in order that it should not be misunderstood hereafter, I make this suggestion.

"The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion will go in the record.

"Q. (By Mr. WHYTE.) Senator Matthews, Anderson has stated that he told you in conversation, in March, 1877, that his parish of East Feliciana had been 'thrown out on a forged protest.' Did he make any such statement to you as that?—A. He did not tell me anything of the kind.

"Q. Did he then tell you of any promises made to him by anybody in Louisiana in regard to any service that he had rendered in his capacity as a superviser of registration, and that those promises had not been kept?—A. He did not.

"Q. Did he say more to you than to appeal to your generosity to get him some position on account of his services to the Republican party, or did he explain to you that he had rendered peculiar services which ought to be rewarded?—A. His appeal to me was to my generosity and sense of justice to assist him in getting some employment in the Government, largely if not mainly on account of services which he claimed to have rendered to the Republican cause in Louisiana, the nature of which he related quite at length, giving me instances of his assisting in the organization of the party in different parts of the State, in looking to the interests of the party, and mentioned that these services were peculiar in the sense that they had been efficient, and that they had been dangerous, for he referred to the fact that they had been rendered at great sacrifice of time and of what means he had, with the exposure of his person not only to ill-health but to peril of life from his political adversaries; but there was not in the whole of this account the most distant allusion that was not, according to his description of it, entirely honorable and such as an honest man might render if he felt the degree of interest which he claimed to have done in his party and its principles and its cause.

"Q. Did he explain to you after that the nature of the Nash-Anderson agreement, which you say he delivered to you, in that conversation?—A. Yes, in the way which I have already stated.

"Q. Then did he tell you of the Weber-Anderson agreement in that same conversation?—A. My recollection is that he did not.

"Q. Did you tell him to go to New Orleans and wait for the commission known as the MacVeagh commission, which was contemplated at that time?—A. I understood him to say that he was on his way to New Orleans, or that he was going to New Orleans, and I stated to him that the first opportunity I should have to endeavor to do for him what he seemed to wish at that time would be when the commission arrived in New Orleans; that being personally acquainted with General Harlan, and as he desired an effort to be made to improve his condition in the custom-house, I would give him a letter of introduction to him when I heard of his arrival in New Orleans.

"Q. Did he speak of any penitence in regard to the exaction of such an agreement from Nash as is disclosed by this paper?—A. That I inferred from the apologies which he made in reference to it in having me understand that it never was intended to mean what it appeared to mean on its face.

"Q. Then how do you account for the language in his letter of March 27, to be found on page 104:

"'Nash will be here this week, and will demand possession of that agreement, after offering me a (possibly) clerkship. Of course I shall decline. Shall I inform him that it is in your possession?'

"What was the meaning of that?—A. I have no means of answering that. There was no statement made by Mr. Anderson to me of any understanding between him and Mr. Nash in respect to the possession of the agreement. The only explanations he made in regard to its nature were those which I have already given, and I cannot of course say what he meant by this. In reply to his question as to whether he should inform Nash that it was in my possession, I answered him that I desired him to inform Mr. Nash of that fact in my letter of introduction of March 29, in which I say, 'You should say to Nash, if inquired of, that I have the agreement,' as I desired that Mr. Nash should know that fact.

"Q. Why did you wish Mr. Nash to know that?—A. In order that Mr. Nash might be relieved in his own mind from any such coercion as might be possibly implied from his knowledge of the existence of the paper and his ignorance of its whereabouts. In other words, to relieve him from that which Mr. Anderson described as the object of taking it—that is, Anderson's hold upon him.

"Q. What had Mr. Anderson to say to General Harlan confidentially, which is the language I think you use in your letter?—A. I say in my letter of March 29, introducing Mr. Anderson to General Harlan: 'This will be presented to you by Mr. J. E. Anderson, who may desire to communicate with you confidentially.' What I referred to was the same matters which he had related to me as the foundation for his own claims to my good-will, and particularly that portion which consisted in the description of the hostility which he said he had incurred from the leaders of the Republican organization in New Orleans, described as Packard, Kellogg, and others.

"Q. Mr. Darrall says in his letter that he had talked with you about the Sherman letter; but I think you said you knew nothing about the Sherman letter?—A. Nothing in the world.

"Q. In his letter of April 7 Anderson says: 'Inclosed find Weber agreement. This is the last piece of documentary evidence in existence.' I understood you to say that you knew nothing of that agreement prior to this letter?—A. I did not, nor of the Pitkin agreement spoken of in the preceding sentence.

"Q. On page 111 of the House testimony I find this indorsement apparently on an application of Anderson to be appointed under the State Department as consul:

"'For important reasons I specially request that this request be complied with.'

"That is the request that he may be appointed to a foreign consulate, and then below it:

"'Executive Mansion. Application for appointment United States consul at Callao, Peru. Senator Matthews requests that this appointment be made for important reasons.'

"What 'important reasons' were there that a man like Anderson should be appointed to a consulate?

"Mr. HOAR. On what page is that?

"Mr. WHYTE. I do not see it in the little volume which you have printed here; but it appears in the volume printed by the House.

"The CHAIRMAN. Then the House have not sent it to us.

"Mr. WHYTE. The House have sent all of Anderson's testimony, but have not sent you these letters and papers.

"The WITNESS (after examining the document). The only reasons I had for wishing it were those that I have already explained as operating on my mind in furthering his wishes in respect to an appointment.

"Q. (By Mr. WHYTE.) You subsequently recommended him, did you not, to the collector at New Orleans for an appointment as deputy collector?—A. I did.

"Q. And he did not succeed?—A. He did not.

"Q. On his way back from New Orleans to Washington he alleges that he stopped to see you at Cincinnati in May?—A. I remember Mr. Anderson being in my office subsequently to the first interview; but at what time, either in point of time as to the month or as to the day of the month, or at what period in the history of the whole matter, I do not now remember.

"Q. Anderson states that in that interview you remarked to him—

"'You go right back in the next train; I have just to-day had a letter from the President in regard to your case, and I have written him such a letter as will secure your appointment to some position.'

"Is there any truth in that statement?—A. There is not.

"Q. After he reached Washington he alleges he sent you the dispatch of June 1, containing these words:

"'The President claims to have received no letters. I want no more correspondence and no more nonsense. Come here and settle this affair, or you can all face the music. Care nothing about documents in your possession. Answer immediately.'

"Did you receive that dispatch?—A. The telegram as set out on page 105 differs from the telegram as set out on page 32 in this printed testimony, but not substantially. The words 'answer immediately' occur in the copy on page 105; the words 'telegraph me at once' on page 32. The copy contained on page 105 is the one I received, and is the one furnished by me to General Cox, who produced it before the House committee.

"Q. But the date I think is wrong?—A. The date must be wrong. It is dated 'May 1' there, but it ought to be 'June 1,' undoubtedly.

"Q. The next day he sends you the letter, as I understand, on page 106, stating that he had sent that dispatch on the spur of the moment, which he thinks you might misconstrue?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And then remarks, 'do not understand me as threatening you.' Now, in that same letter he says that he has 'thought of a plan by which the President can get rid of me without embarrassing himself; that is, to give the appointment I ask to a gentleman whom I shall designate.' Where was the necessity of the President getting rid of a man like Anderson?—A. I have no more knowledge on that point than you—than Mr. Anderson's own statement.

"Q. Then why was the arrangement made to give his brother a place in the Baltimore custom-house?—A. All I can answer in regard to that is what I afterward ascertained, and that is that it was offered and given to Anderson, and that he tried it and became very much dissatisfied immediately with it, as he expressed himself in his letter of June 19, on page 106, where he describes what the duties of the office were, and then threw it up, refused to keep it, but succeeded, as I understood, in obtaining from General Smith the appointment to the same place, as I always understood, of his own brother.

"Q. I call your attention to the fact that in this letter of the 19th he says that place has been offered him and he has declined it?—A. I know he does say so, but he told me, as I have already stated, when I met him on the train going from Washington to Baltimore, that he was going over there to enter on the duties of it, and was then very much pleased with the idea of having the employment. The next I heard was that I received this letter of June 19, in which he expressed his disgust at the position of inspector of customs. I inferred from that that he had actually entered on the duties of the place, had found what was required of him, and found that they were duties that he was not disposed to perform, and then wrote me that letter in which he says he declined it. My information subsequently was that this arrangement was made which I have just related, that having obtained employment in the office of the North American he abandoned all desire to have any appointment of his own, and obtained from the appointment clerk, General Smith, the appointment of his brother to this place in the Baltimore custom-house, which he himself was not willing to have or to keep, whichever it was.

"Q. The letter of General Smith seems to confirm the theory that he declined altogether to consider the place?—A. I notice that it does. Nevertheless, I still say that he told me that morning on the train going to Baltimore that he was going over there for the purpose of entering on the duties of that office, and I inferred from that statement that he had in fact done it. When I got that letter I presumed that he had probably, on the experience of a day or two, found it was not what he thought it was, and had given it up. It may be, however, that he never did for a day occupy the office. I do not know personally about it.

"Q. On the 11th of February, 1878, he alleges that he addressed you a letter from Philadelphia. Without going into the whole letter—it is on page 107 of the printed testimony—there occurs in it this paragraph:

"'In May last I warned you of just such a state of affairs as has come to pass. Had you adopted my suggestions then (in two respects), it could have been avoided. It is not too late yet, if prompt measures are taken.

"'Am no applicant for nor would I accept any position under the administration, and only desire to avoid the scandal that is in prospective.'

"What did he mean could have been avoided, do you know, in that letter?—A. I do not. My answer to that letter is contained in a letter printed on page 38 of this statement, though there is still some mistake about the date. It must be 'February 12,' although printed 'February 2,' if his letter be correctly dated February 11, for I say:

"'I have your note of yesterday, and in reply beg to say that I do not recollect the suggestions heretofore made by you, to which you refer, and which you think if adopted might still prove advantageous to the public interest, and I would be glad to have you adopt them.'

"This is a misprint. It does not make any sense.

"'I have, however, been subjected to so much misrepresentation in regard to everything I have undertaken to do that I do not think it would be wise for me to go to Philadelphia or Baltimore for the purpose of meeting you. In case you should find it convenient to be in Washington, I shall be pleased to see you.'

"What he referred to I do not know and never did.

"Q. Why did you head that 'personal and confidential'; was there anything special in that?—A. No, sir; nothing more than to have it so understood that I was not writing it for publication. I am satisfied there is a misprint in the letter in the words 'and I would be glad to have you adopt them.' That phrase has no meaning there, and it must be some other term that was used; it must be either 'mention them' or 'repeat them.' Probably 'repeat' is the word.

"The CHAIRMAN. 'Repeat' is probably the word intended there, but you say you have no recollection of it?—A. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. The date is explained in the next sentence, because it says the letter is postmarked 'Washington, February 12, Congress'?—A. Yes, sir; the date must be February 12.

"Q. (By Mr. WHYTE.) You wrote to Secretary Evarts on the 14th of May, as these papers seem to show, from Cincinnati a letter recommending Anderson for a consulship. The letter is on page 30 of the printed testimony furnished to the committee, Exhibit O. This letter was written after you had received the Nash agreement and the Weber agreement?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. In this letter you say you had had a private conversation with the Secretary, and repeat that Mr. Anderson has 'been compelled to act a very difficult part,' and has 'very strong claims upon the administration in the public interests.' Did you think that that was a proper man to represent this Government abroad whom you knew to have exacted these two papers for the purpose of black-mailing the parties?—A. In the abstract I should say no. Under the circumstances I thought it was better to have even such a man put into a position such as might be found for him than to have had the scandal of a publication of these papers. That was my opinion at that time.

"The other members of the committee having declined to ask any further questions,

"The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to make any further explanation or statement?

"Mr. MATTHEWS. No, sir.

"The committee then deliberated upon the question whether further testimony should be taken or other witnesses called, and no member of the committee proposing to summon any witness, the chairman was requested to make the following statement to Mr. Matthews:

"'Mr. Matthews, the committee have decided that they do not desire to call any witnesses at present. Do you wish to submit any further testimony, or do you desire the committee to summon any witnesses?'

"Mr. MATTHEWS. I do not."

Thereupon it was unanimously agreed that no further testimony should be taken, all of which will more fully appear from the printed minutes and proceedings of the committee herewith reported.

The committe confine themselves to the foregoing narrative of the facts, and, after full consideration, they find unanimously the statements of Mr. Matthews to be true, and that he had no connection with any real or supposed frauds in the election in Louisiana, and that he has not been guilty of any corrupt conduct in any of the matters referred to in the testimony, while we cannot but regard his action in respect to James E. Anderson's effort to obtain an appointment to office, under the circumstances, as wrong and injurious to the public interest.

Proceedings of and before the select committee of the Senate appointed under the resolution of June 5, 1878.

TUESDAY, June 11, 1878.

The committee appointed in pursuance of the following resolution adopted by the Senate on the 5th instant, met:

"Resolved, That a select committee of seven Senators be appointed to inquire into and consider all things touching the matter stated and referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Matthews], and the events connected therewith, and particularly what connection, if any, that Senator had with any real or pretended frauds or other wrongs committed in the conduct and returns of the election in the State of Louisiana in 1876, and with any promises of protection or reward, if any, made by any one to one James E. Anderson, or others, in consideration of, or connection with, any official conduct by said Anderson or others in relation to said election or the returns thereof; and into all the circumstances of any recommendation by the said Senator of the said Anderson for appointment to office; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk and stenographer, and have leave to sit during the recess."

Present: Messrs. Allison, Ingalls, Hoar, Davis of Illinois, Whyte, and Jones of Florida.

After consultation it was determined to summon James E. Anderson as a witness for Thursday next.

On motion, the committee adjourned to meet on Thursday next at noon.

THURSDAY, June 13, 1878.

The committee met at 12 o'clock m., pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Messrs. Allison, Hoar, Davis, Whyte, and Jones.

James E. Anderson, who had been summoned to attend as a witness, also appeared.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Allison). The witness, Mr. Anderson, is here; but I have this moment received a note from Mr. Morrison, of the House of Representatives, which I will read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1878.

Mr. Senator ALLISON,
Chairman, &c.:

Mrs. Jenks is about to be put on the stand, and we would prefer, if entirely agreeable to the Senate committee, that Mr. Anderson should be present during her examination. This is important to the House committee. At any other time take him.

W. R. MORRISON,
Acting Chairman.

I submit that to the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, I move that Mr. Anderson be excused until the House committee shall consider him at liberty to attend here.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the chairman request Mr. Morrison to notify us when he will be ready to excuse Mr. Anderson from attendance on the House committee.

The WITNESS. I suggest that that would depend in a great measure on the length of time it will take Mrs. Jenks to testify. I will state to the committee that as soon as Mrs. Jenks is examined I shall be ready to appear here at any hour.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [A pause.] It is the sense of the committee, as I understand, that Mr. Anderson is excused, and he will report to us when Mr. Morrison is through with him.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we deem ourselves as still in session, to be notified by the chairman when the witness is ready to be examined.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding.

FRIDAY, June 21, 1878.

The committee met pursuant to call.

Present: Messrs. Allison (acting chairman), Hoar, Ingalls, Davis, Whyte, and Jones.

Hon. Stanley Matthews was present by invitation.

James E. Anderson, who had been summoned as a witness, appeared.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Will you be sworn?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will state to the committee before I take the oath that I desire to be represented here by counsel.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You desire to be represented by counsel?

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to be represented by counsel.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. A witness!

Mr. ANDERSON. A witness. I desire to be represented by counsel.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, I suppose he does not desire to have counsel present before we determine the question whether he shall be sworn.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to have the question settled before I am sworn as to whether I can have counsel or not.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a matter we can dispose of hereafter. [To the acting chairman.] You can swear him and tell him we can discuss this matter afterward. We cannot dispose of this question now, probably.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Have you arranged for your counsel, if you have counsel?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will by to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no delay about swearing the witness.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. This is a question for the committee to discuss.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You will be sworn, Mr. Anderson.

The oath was administered.

The WITNESS. Now I renew my request.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That we shall be obliged to consider.

Mr. DAVIS. With closed doors, of course.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I think we had better settle the question now.

The WITNESS. Can you excuse me for ten minutes?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. No, we cannot excuse you just at this moment.

The room was therefore cleared of all but members of the committee. After some time spent in deliberation the doors were reopened.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Mr. Anderson, the committee have decided that you are not entitled to counsel.

The WITNESS. I simply desire to say that I have no statement to make and no questions to answer.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. We will examine you when we are ready to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the room be cleared.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do I understand you to decline to answer questions?

The WITNESS. I do, emphatically.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The committee have decided that you ought to answer such questions as they desire to put to you. We are charged with an examination. All we want is the facts. I will be glad to have you state now to the committee your age, occupation, and business.

The WITNESS. I will state to the committee that I have no desire to throw any obstacle in their way, and it is my object and intention to aid them in everything in this investigation, but I see no reason, no good reason, why I should not be allowed counsel in this matter. I am here absolutely friendless. I believe Mr. Matthews is here to represent himself, and I think somebody should be here to represent me; and unless I am allowed counsel, as I said, I have no questions to answer and shall absolutely decline to answer anything that may be asked of me.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The committee have understood——

The WITNESS. That is all I have to say in regard to the matter.

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. Are you acting in this matter under the advice of counsel?—A. I am not. I am acting under my own advice. I have asked nobody's counsel. I have no counsel here at all.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. You are a witness. You are not prosecuted.—A. I understand that. I understand the question, sir.

Q. No court in the world ever allowed a witness counsel.—A. I believe the object of the committee is to get at the truth of this matter. If they are simply desirous of getting at the truth of it, I see no good reason why they should object to my having counsel present, at least somebody who will represent me in the matter.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Every gentleman of this committee is a member of the legal profession. We are charged with a duty simply of investigation, and we intend to discharge that duty impartially.

Mr. DAVIS. And protect witnesses.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. And protect witnesses and everybody.

The WITNESS. Therefore I see no good reason why you should object to my having counsel present. I am perfectly willing, if Mr. Matthews is not present himself to direct this examination, to answer all questions; but if he is present and has the privilege of directing my examination, I claim that I have the same privilege of having a gentleman here who will look after my interests in the matter.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Mr. Matthews may be a witness. You can then ask him any questions you may desire, if he should ask you questions.

The WITNESS. Mr. Matthews is a lawyer and is capable of conducting his own case. I am not.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. You decline to state your age, business, and occupation?—A. Under the circumstances I do.

Q. I will ask you another question. When did you make the acquaintance of Senator Matthews?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. Have you ever placed in Mr. Matthews's custody any papers of any character; and, if so, what papers?—A. I decline to answer.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. When did you first see Mr. Matthews?—A. I decline to answer.

Q. Have you talked with any counsel on this subject at all?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you talked with any individual who gave you this advice?—A. I have not, except that I asked a gentleman to-day if I was not entitled to counsel before the committee.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who was that?—A. I spoke to two gentlemen, Mr. Parish and Mr. Springer, of the House committee.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. What did they say to you?—A. Mr. Springer said he thought the committee would not refuse to allow me counsel.

Q. What did Mr. Parish say?—A. Mr. Parish said the same thing.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the chairman be requested to inform the witness that the questions which are put to him are put by the authority of the committee by the different members.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (to the witness). You have heard the suggestion of Mr. Hoar, a member of the committee. I have put these questions at the suggestion of the committee and every member of the committee.

The WITNESS. I understand that; it is a matter of no difference by whose authority they are put. I simply under the circumstances decline to answer.

Mr. DAVIS. I will ask you a question, unless the chairman rules it out. How do you need counsel except that when Mr. Matthews testifies you may want to cross-examine him? That is a different question altogether, whether counsel shall be allowed then.—A. Certainly. I think my counsel, if I have one, should hear my testimony as well as Mr. Matthews.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. We have reporters taking every word you say in short-hand, and it will undoubtedly be published in the newspapers.

The WITNESS. If the newspapers are taking it in short-hand and publishing it every morning, I see no objection to my having counsel. It is simply the addition of one more gentleman to be present.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. This is a question we cannot argue with you. We have decided it.

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. I understand your desire to be to employ counsel at your own expense?—A. Yes, sir; if I shall get counsel. I do not presume anybody will do it without expense; at least I have not been fortunate enough so far to get anybody who would.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the room be cleared for consultation.

The WITNESS. I will state again that I have no desire to throw any obstacle in your way, and I simply make that request.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. But you are throwing an absolute obstacle in the way.

The WITNESS. I think it is only justice to myself to allow that.

Mr. DAVIS. You are a witness to tell the truth.

The WITNESS. I propose to tell the truth.

Mr. DAVIS. To tell the truth in regard to Mr. Matthews, nothing else. We are confining it to that purpose, just to tell the truth, and if every witness in a trial should be allowed counsel, either before a court or a committee, there would be no end.

The WITNESS. I am not brought here simply as a witness, but I am put on trial myself.

Mr. DAVIS. No.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Not that.

Mr. DAVIS. So far as we are concerned you are only a witness.

By Mr. WHYTE:

Q. One single question. You then set at defiance, Mr. Anderson, the committee of the Senate, simply because you are not permitted to have counsel here at your own suggestion?—A. That is drawing it rather strongly. I simply say that I decline to answer any questions because I do not think I am allowed the privilege I claim as an American citizen. I will say further that if Mr. Matthews will say he will go before the Potter committee of the House I will testify here.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. We will not hear that.

Mr. WHYTE. We cannot have any terms about that. I only want to know if I understand you that unless you are permitted to have counsel against the wishes of the committee you decline to testify, and set at defiance the Senate of the United States?

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. One point, Mr. Anderson. I understood you to be about to say that if Mr. Matthews would go before the Potter committee you would willingly testify here.—A. I will.

Q. Did you have that conversation with Mr. Springer this morning and Mr. Parish?—A. I did not.

Q. Has that proposition been made by you to any other person?—A. It has not been, directly or indirectly.

Q. Has it been suggested to you?—A. I believe I spoke to some newspaper correspondent a few minutes ago. I said if Mr. Matthews would be willing to go before that committee I would be willing to testify over here.

Q. You say that conversation was with a newspaper correspondent?—A. Some newspaper correspondent.

Q. This morning?—A. A few minutes ago. I simply made that suggestion some time during the day. I made it of my own volition, not at his or anybody else's. I simply stated my own opinion.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. I will ask a question now, Mr. Anderson. When did you make up your mind not to testify before this committee unless you were represented by counsel?—A. I thought of it last night coming over here.

Q. Was that the first time you had that impression?—A. That was the first time.

Q. Why did you leave the city, after the committee on the other side had discharged you, without notifying this committee?—A. I called on you with my attorney twice, sent in my card, and you refused to admit us. My wife was sick, and I had other business to look after in this world besides hanging round Washington.

Q. You have never sent me your card.—A. My attorney did.

Q. Who is your attorney?—A. Mr. Sypher, of Philadelphia.

Q. I have never received any card from Mr. Sypher.—A. I was present twice when he sent in his card to the committee-room on appropriations.

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. Is he the gentleman whom you desire to have appear for you?—A. I have no knowledge whom I shall.

Q. You spoke of him as being your attorney.—A. Mr. Sypher is not in the city. He was my attorney before the House committee.

Q. Were you represented before the House committee by attorney who was present before the committee?—A. Yes, sir.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. And put questions for you?—A. No questions; but he represented my interests.

Q. By leave of the committee?—A. By leave of the committee.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. Did you ask the House committee to allow you an attorney?—A. Not specially.

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. Did they know that he was there as your attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HOAR:

Q. What is Mr. Sypher's first name?—A. J. R.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. Did he put any questions to you?—A. None at all

By Mr. INGALLS:

Q. Did he advise you what to answer or refuse to answer?—A. Not at all. Mr. Sypher knew this whole question a year or more ago, and was simply there to look after my interests.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. What are your interests in this matter?—A. My interests are considerable. I have been laboring under the impression that I was liable at any time, the last year or two, to be indicted for perjury in Louisiana in connection with these returns. I went to Mr. Sypher in connection with that matter.

Q. Do you think you are in danger of that here in Washington?—A. Not if I prove that I did not forge returns That has been charged against me.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. Did you ask the committee of the House for the privilege of having an attorney?—A. Not directly.

Q. How did you do it?—A. I believe I spoke to Mr. Gibson, of the New York Sun, and told him I should like to be represented by counsel some time ago, and my recollection is that he said he would have it arranged.

By the ACTING CHAIRMAN:

Q. And you think it was arranged?—A. Yes.

By Mr. DAVIS:

Q. You simply went in when Mr. Sypher was present with you, and he asked no questions?—A. None at all.

Q. And did not ask leave to ask any?—A. None at all.

The committee-room was cleared for deliberation; and after some time spent in consultation, Mr. Matthews was invited to attend, and he accordingly appeared.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You have heard, Mr. Matthews, what Mr. Anderson has said. Have you any suggestion to make to the committee in reference to going on without Mr. Anderson's testimony?

Mr. DAVIS. In other words, you know that the committee decided that the case, whatever it was, should be made out, and then you should be put on the stand. You have seen how this ends for the present. Have you any suggestion to make? Until the Senate meets we have no way of compelling his attendance.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I dislike very much to take the responsibility of making any suggestions to the committee on the subject. I am ready here to-day, and shall be at any future time that the convenience of the committee shall fix, for the purpose of assisting the committee and facilitating it in any way within my power in the objects and purposes for which it was originated and authorized.

The only course, other than that of waiting until the committee can have the power of the Senate to compel the attendance of the witness, is to obtain from the committee of the other House the statements which he has already made under oath before it, and which constituted the ground on the basis of which I asked the Senate for the appointment of this committee. In case the committee think that that is sufficient for the purpose of the investigation with which they are charged, and obtain that testimony, I am ready to go on as if it had been delivered again here. But whether the committee ought to take that course I think is a question which the committee ought to decide for themselves. I do not wish to be considered as giving any opinion or advice or expressing any wish in regard to that matter.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I think we can now relieve you from attendance, Mr. Matthews.

Mr. Matthews thereupon retired; and the doors were thrown open to the public generally.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Mr. Reporter, will you state what took place a moment ago when Mr. Matthews was called in.

The stenographer read the statement made by Mr. Matthews.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The reporter has stated all that took place. Stand up, Mr. Anderson. [James E. Anderson rose.] The committee have decided that we will require the testimony of Mr. Anderson; and I now wish to ask you, Mr. Anderson, if you are willing to answer such questions as may be propounded to you by the committee or any member of it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not.

Q. You still persist?—A. I still persist.

Q. In refusing to answer any question pertaining to the matter before this committee?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do.

Q. And you therefore set the committee at defiance?

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the Senate, we have no power to punish Mr. Anderson for the contempt in refusing to answer our questions. Under these circumstances, I move that this committee adjourn, subject to the call of the chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

TUESDAY, December 10, 1878.

The committee met at 10½ o'clock a. m., pursuant to call.

Present: Messrs. Edmunds, Allison, Ingalls, Hoar, Davis, and Whyte.

On motion of Mr. Allison, John W. Anderson was appointed clerk.

Mr. Edmunds asked to be excused from service as chairman of the committee, in view of his other duties; and his request was granted.

On motion of Mr. Davis, Mr. Allison was thereupon elected chairman.

On motion of Mr. Edmunds, it was Ordered, That there be reported to the Senate the following:

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate a copy of the testimony of one James E. Anderson relating to the Hon. Stanley Matthews, a member of the Senate from the State of Ohio, understood to have been taken before one of the committees of the House of Representatives."

Mr. Edmunds submitted a motion that James E. Anderson be reported to the Senate as in contempt of its authority for refusing to testify before this committee, and that the Senate be requested to take the proper proceedings to secure his attendance.

The motion was not agreed to: there being three ayes: Messrs. Edmunds, Davis, and Whyte. The noes were: Messrs. Allison (chairman), Hoar, and Ingalls.

On motion of Mr. Whyte, the committee adjourned to meet at the call of the chairman.

[The rest of the proceedings of the committee are embodied in the report.]

[Forty-sixth Congress—First and second sessions.]

JOHN J. INGALLS,

Senator from Kansas from March 4, 1873, till March 3, 1891

March 19, 1879, the Vice-President laid before the Senate a memorial of certain members of the legislature relative to the election of Mr. Ingalls to his second term of office, beginning March 4, 1879. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. March 27, certain letters transmitting a report of a committee of the house of representatives of Kansas, which had investigated said election, was referred to the committee. Certain other papers relative to the election were at other times referred to the committee. June 21, the committee were authorized to make an investigation of the election. February 17, 1880, the committee reported the testimony taken and the following resolution: "Resolved, That the testimony taken by the committee proves that bribery and other corrupt means were employed by persons favoring the election of Hon. John J. Ingalls to the Senate, to obtain for him the votes of members of the legislature of Kansas in the Senatorial election in that State. But it is not proved by the testimony that enough votes were secured by such means to determine the result of the election in his favor. Nor is it shown that Senator Ingalls authorized acts of bribery to secure his election." Views of the minority concurred in the part of the report exonerating Mr. Ingalls, but held that "when the report goes further and finds that persons favoring Mr. Ingalls's election were guilty of such practices, it should in justice state what was clearly and unquestionably proved, that such means were employed in opposition to his election." No further action was taken by the Senate. Mr. Ingalls was allowed reimbursement of the necessary expenses incurred in defense of his title to his seat.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journals, 46th Cong., and the report of the committee (without the testimony) from Senate Reports, 46th Cong., 2d sess., No. 277.

Special references to the debates of each day are inserted below.

SATURDAY, February 22, 1879.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the credentials of John J. Ingalls, elected a Senator by the legislature of Kansas for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1879; which were read.

[First session of the Forty-sixth Congress.]

TUESDAY, March 18, 1879.

The credentials of John J. Ingalls having been heretofore presented, the oaths prescribed by law were administered to him, and he took his seat in the Senate.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1879.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a memorial of certain members of the legislature of Kansas in relation to the election of John J. Ingalls as a Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, March 27, 1879.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a letter of F. S. Stumbaugh and L. F. Eggers, transmitting a copy of the report of the special committee of the house of representatives of Kansas charged with the investigation of the election of John J. Ingalls to the United States Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, April 24, 1879.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate additional papers signed by F. S. Stumbaugh and L. F. Eggers, in relation to the election of John J. Ingalls to the Senate as a Senator from the State of Kansas; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

FRIDAY, June 20, 1879.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution for consideration; which was ordered to be printed:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which has been referred memorials in relation to the election of Hon. J. J. Ingalls a Senator by the legislature of the State of Kansas, be, and said committee is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate the statements and charges contained in said memorials; and for that purpose said committee is empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, employ a stenographer, clerk, and sergeant-at-arms, and to do all such acts as are necessary and proper in the premises. And said committee may appoint a subcommittee of its members to take testimony in Kansas or elsewhere in the case, which shall report the testimony taken to the committee in December next; and such subcommittee shall have the same authority to administer oaths and to do other necessary acts as are herein conferred upon the full committee; and the said committee, and the subcommittee which it may appoint, may sit during the recess of the Senate for the purpose of making the investigation hereby authorized."

SATURDAY, June 21, 1879.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (given above) yesterday reported by Mr. Saulsbury from the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1879.

Mr. Bailey, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation ordered by the Senate to be made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to certain matters connected with the election of Hon. J. J. Ingalls, a Senator from the State of Kansas, be paid out of the 'miscellaneous items' of the contingent fund of the Senate, to be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of the subcommittee that may be designated by said committee to take testimony in the case."

[Second session of the Forty-sixth Congress.]

MONDAY, December 15, 1879.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to have printed for its use the testimony taken in Kansas relative to the charges contained in the memorials relative to the election of John J. Ingalls as Senator from the State of Kansas, and such other testimony as may be taken in the said case."

THURSDAY, December 18, 1879.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Whereas J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson, citizens and residents of the State of Kansas, were duly served with subpœnas in the months of September and October, 1879, issued by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, then sitting in Topeka, in said State of Kansas, commanding each of them to appear before said subcommittee and then and there testify in reference to the subject-matters then under consideration by said subcommittee, to wit, charges relating to the election of John J. Ingalls a Senator from said State of Kansas; and

"Whereas said Admire, Purcell, Anthony, Smith, and Wilson refused to appear and testify before said subcommittee as required by said subpœnas: Therefore,

"Resolved, That an attachment issue forthwith directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate commanding him to bring said J. V. Admire, E. B. Purcell, George T. Anthony, Len. T. Smith, and Levi Wilson forthwith to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt of a process of this body."

THURSDAY, January 8, 1880.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the Senate having in custody Leonard T. Smith, Levi Wilson, and E. B. Purcell, arrested by order of the Senate and brought to its bar to answer for a contempt of a process of the Senate.

Whereupon

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the return of the writ of attachment issued to the Sergeant-at-Arms commanding him to bring J. V. Admire, George T. Anthony, Leonard T. Smith, Levi Wilson, and E. B. Purcell to answer for a contempt of a process of the Senate.

The return having been made,

Leonard T. Smith, one of the witnesses, advanced and made statement of his reasons for failure to answer to the summons of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. McMillan that the witness be discharged;

On motion by Mr. Garland to amend the motion as follows, viz: "That the witness, having purged himself of contempt, be discharged from the rule,"

After debate, it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Saulsbury submitted the following resolution as an amendment to the motion of Mr. McMillan as amended:

"Whereas Leonard T. Smith, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms on an attachment for contempt for refusing obedience to a summons to appear before a committee of the Senate, has purged himself of contempt, and expressed his willingness to appear before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and answer such proper questions as may be put to him: Therefore,

"Resolved, That said Leonard T. Smith be discharged from arrest and that he appear before said Committee on Privileges and Elections and testify under the subpœna served upon him."

It was determined in the negative.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. McMillan, as amended, it was determined in the affirmative.

Levi Wilson, another of the witnesses, having made statement of his reasons for failure to answer the summons of the Senate,

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury that the witness be discharged from the rule, it was determined in the affirmative.

E. B. Purcell, another of the witnesses, having made statement of his reasons for failure to answer to the summons of the Senate,

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury that the witness be discharged from the rule, it was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury,

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms have further time to make return concerning the failure of J. V. Admire and George T. Anthony, the other witnesses named in the writ of attachment of December 18, 1879, to answer for a contempt of a process of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. Davis, of Illinois, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

[The debate is found on pages 234–241 of the Congressional Record, vol. x, part 1.]

TUESDAY, January 20, 1880.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the Senate, having in custody J. V. Admire, to answer for contempt in refusing obedience to a summons of the Senate.

Whereupon

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the return of the writ of attachment issued to the Sergeant-at-Arms December 18, 1879, commanding him to bring J. V. Admire, G. T. Anthony, L. T. Smith, Levi Wilson, and E. B. Purcell to answer for a contempt of a process of the Senate.

The return was read.

The witness having made statement of his reasons for failure to answer to the summons of the Senate,

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury that the witness be discharged from the rule, it was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury,

Ordered, That George T. Anthony, the other witness named in the writ of attachment of December 18, 1879, be discharged as from contempt without appearing before the Senate.

On motion by Mr. Davis, of West Virginia, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1880.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorials in relation to the election of John J. Ingalls, a Senator from the State of Kansas, submitted a report (No. 277) thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the testimony taken by the committee proves that bribery and other corrupt means were employed by persons favoring the election of Hon. John J. Ingalls in the Senatorial election to the Senate to obtain for him the votes of members of the legislature of Kansas in that State. But it is not proved by the testimony that enough votes were secured by such means to determine the result of the election in his favor, nor is it shown that Senator Ingalls authorized acts of bribery to secure his election."

Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, asked and obtained leave to submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; which were ordered to be printed to accompany the foregoing report.

On motion by Mr. Saulsbury,

Ordered, That the testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the investigation of the election of John J. Ingalls to the United States Senate from the State of Kansas be printed, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorials in relation thereto.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Saulsbury (chairman), Hill of Georgia, Kernan, Bailey, Pryor, Vance, Cameron of Wisconsin, Hoar, and Logan.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 17, 1880.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Saulsbury, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred memorials relating to the election of Hon. John J. Ingalls a Senator from the State of Kansas by the legislature of that State, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The committee, under the authority of a resolution adopted by the Senate, appointed a subcommittee of its members with instructions to investigate the charges and statements contained in said memorials. In discharge of the duty assigned them the members of the subcommittee met during the recess of the Senate in the city of Topeka, in said State, and examined a large number of witnesses, whose testimony, together with the testimony of witnesses examined before the whole committee during the present session, is herewith submitted to the Senate.

The views entertained by the committee render it unnecessary to refer more particularly to the testimony, which will be found to sustain the conclusions of the committee expressed in the following resolution:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the committee proves that bribery and other corrupt means were employed by persons favoring the election of Hon. John J. Ingalls to the Senate to obtain for him the votes of members of the legislature of Kansas in the Senatorial election in that State. But it is not proved by the testimony that enough votes were secured by such means to determine the result of the election in his favor. Nor is it shown that Senator Ingalls authorized acts of bribery to secure his election.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were directed to investigate certain statements and charges concerning the recent election of a Senator in the State of Kansas, respectfully submit our views as follows:

We concur in part of the report. We exonerate Mr. Ingalls from any complicity with improper practices. We also find that the result of the election was not accomplished by such practices. We think that when the report goes further and finds that persons favoring Mr. Ingalls's election were guilty of such practices, it should in justice state what was clearly and unquestionably proved, that such means were employed in opposition to his election.

ANGUS CAMERON.
JOHN A. LOGAN.
GEO. F. HOAR.

[Third session of the Forty-sixth Congress.]

FRIDAY, January 21, 1881.

Mr. Plumb submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That there be paid to J. V. Admire, L. T. Smith, E. B. Purcell, and George T. Anthony, out of the contingent fund of the United States Senate, the mileage for attending as witnesses from the State of Kansas in the investigation of the election of Hon. J. J. Ingalls the same as the other witnesses received."

[The debate is found on pages 814, 815 of the Congressional Record, vol. xi, part 1.]

FRIDAY, January 28, 1881.

On motion by Mr. Hill, of Georgia,

Ordered, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Plumb January 21, 1881, directing the payment of certain witnesses in the investigation of the election of the Hon. J. J. Ingalls, and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. INGALLS'S EXPENSES.

FRIDAY, March 31, 1882.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

"Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $8,195 to John J. Ingalls, a Senator from the State of Kansas, in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat."

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

Ordered, That it be engrossed and read a third time.

The said resolution was read a third time by unanimous consent.

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[Special session of Senate, October, 1881, and first session of the Forty-seventh Congress.]

ELBRIDGE G. LAPHAM AND WARNER MILLER, of New York.

October 11, 1881, the day on which Messrs. Lapham and Miller took their seats, a memorial was presented remonstrating against their admission until certain allegations affecting their elections had been investigated. October 21, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. December 12, the committee reported back the memorial and asked that it lie on the table, and that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. It was so ordered December 13. The statement of Mr. Hill, in the nature of an oral report, given below, will show the nature of the allegations of the memorial, and the reasons for the action of the committee.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from Senate Journal, 47th Cong., 1st sess., and the remarks of Mr. Hill from the Congressional Record, vol. xiii, part 1, pages 70, 71.

There were no debates.

[Special session of Senate, October, 1881.]

MONDAY, October 10, 1881.

Mr. Edmunds presented the credentials of Elbridge G. Lapham, elected a Senator by the legislature of New York to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. Roscoe Conkling; which were read.

Mr. Edmunds presented the credentials of Warner Miller, elected a Senator by the legislature of New York to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. Thomas C. Platt; which were read.

TUESDAY, October 11, 1881.

On motion by Mr. Edmunds that the oath prescribed by law be now administered to Elbridge G. Lapham and Warner Miller, Senators-elect from the State of New York;

Pending which,

Mr. McPherson presented a memorial of certain members of the legislature of New York, remonstrating against the admission of Mr. Lapham and Mr. Miller to seats in the Senate until certain allegations affecting their elections have been investigated.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. Edmunds that the oath prescribed by law be now administered to the Senators-elect from the State of New York, it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Lapham and Mr. Miller then appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them by the President pro tempore, they took their seats in the Senate.

FRIDAY, October 21, 1881.

Mr. McPherson presented a memorial of Miner Gallop and E. H. Pinney, of New York, remonstrating against the admission of Warner Miller and Elbridge G. Lapham to seats in the Senate until certain allegations affecting their election shall have been investigated; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and,

On motion by Mr. McPherson,

Ordered, That the memorial of certain members of the legislature of New York relating to the same subject, heretofore presented, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[First session of the Forty-seventh Congress.]

THURSDAY, December 8, 1881.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That the petitions of the citizens and members of the legislature of New York concerning the elections of Senators Miller and Lapham be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, December 12, 1881.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of certain members of the legislature of the State of New York affecting the right of the present Senators from that State to occupy seats on the floor of the Senate, reported it back, with the recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.*

[Remarks of Mr. Hill, of Georgia, in the nature of an oral report, delivered December 12, 1881, and found on pages 70, 71 of the Congressional Record, vol. xiii, part 1.]

"I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report back to the Senate certain memorials from members of the legislature of New York affecting the right of the present Senators from that State to occupy seats in this Chamber, and to ask that the memorials lie on the table and the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

"In deference to the memorialists, and at the special request of some of them, it is proper that I should state briefly and generally the reasons which authorize this conclusion.

"The memorials set forth five reasons as grounds why these gentlemen should not be allowed to sit here. The first alleges that the legislature did not proceed in separate bodies to vote upon the question until the third Tuesday after notice of the vacancy was communicated by the governor. The facts are such as to create some controversy as to whether they did proceed on the second Tuesday or the third Tuesday after the notice; but, in any view, the committee are unanimously of the opinion that the legislature was not deprived of its constitutional right to elect Senators to this body.

"The second allegation is that at one of the joint sessions of the general assembly a quorum of the State senators was not present. It is not alleged that there was not a quorum present of each body on the days the respective elections took place, but it is alleged or claimed that under the act of 1866 the failure of either body to be present with a quorum on any day deprives the legislature of the right to elect. The committee differ with the memorialists in that view. We think that one body of the legislature could not deprive the legislature of the right to elect by such absence, if unquestionably on the day of the election a quorum of each body of the legislature was present and voting. We think the reason alleged in this ground is not sufficient to invalidate the election.

"The third ground alleged is that there was not a majority of the whole legislature actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that is not necessary. There was a quorum of each house present in the joint assembly; there was a majority of that quorum actually voting for the members chosen. In our opinion that was a valid election.

"It is alleged specifically in the memorial that the Stockton case is a precedent to the contrary. On examination it will be found that the Stockton case is not a precedent to the contrary. Mr. Stockton, of New Jersey, in the celebrated case so well known, was chosen, not by a majority, but he was chosen by a plurality vote, the legislature in joint session having declared before the election that a plurality should elect. The Senators now occupying the seats in question, from New York, were not chosen by a plurality vote; they were each chosen by a majority, a quorum of each body being present, and a majority of the joint assembly voting. I will state that if the cases from New York were like the case from New Jersey, I do not think at this day any gentleman would regard the Stockton case as a precedent. Unquestionably the body that elects has a right to prescribe that a plurality may elect, and I think the report made by Senator Trumbull on that occasion is not only correct, but conclusive of the law of the case. The committee, therefore, are of the opinion that that ground is not sufficient to invalidate the election.

"The fourth ground relates to Hon. W. Miller, and alleges that he is guilty of certain conduct in violation of section 1781 and section 1782 of the Revised Statutes which disqualify a member from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States Government. It is sufficient to say that the Senator from New York has never been convicted of a violation of those sections of the Revised Statutes, and a simple inspection of the sections shows that it is conviction that disqualifies, and not allegations by outsiders or third persons who do not prosecute. Therefore the committee overrule that ground, and think it insufficient, conceding the facts alleged to be true for argument; we do not know anything about them.

"The last ground is one of fact. Before I have alluded to what are called legal grounds or allegations that by legal operation the election is void. The last ground alleges that there were rumors of bribery in procuring the election of these gentlemen. The allegation of mere rumors of bribery is not sufficient, unaccompanied with evidence, to require investigation at the hands of the Senate or of its committees. It is alleged in this memorial that one State senator of New York is under indictment in that State for offering a bribe to a member of the house to vote in the Senatorial election. It is due to the Senators holding the seats that the committee should say that that indictment is not for a bribe offered to vote for either one of the present Senators. It is due also to state that while we find by reports that have been sent to us and investigations had that there were a great many scandals in connection with the Senatorial election in New York during the late session of the legislature, most of these scandals occurred before the two gentlemen now holding seats became even candidates before that body.

*It appears from the Congressional Record, vol. xiii, part 1, page 76, that the motion that the committee be discharged was agreed to December 13, 1881.

"Therefore, sir, the committee, without going further into details, hold that the respective grounds alleged and all of them together are not sufficient to authorize further investigation, and do not make a case invalidating the election of the Senators from New York. We believe from all that is before us that the elections were valid and ought to be so declared. We ask, therefore, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject."

[Forty-ninth Congress—First Session.]

HENRY B. PAYNE, of Ohio.

March 4, 1885, Henry B. Payne qualified and took his seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Ohio. April 26, 1886, the report of a special committee of the house of representatives of Ohio, appointed to investigate charges of bribery against four of its members, together with the evidence taken by that committee, was presented in the Senate, and on May 11 referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. May 20, a memorial of the Republican State central committee of Ohio, charging that Mr. Payne's election was secured by bribery and fraud, and urging that the Senate investigate these charges, was referred to the same committee, and on the 25th of May memorials were received from the two branches of the legislature of Ohio to the same effect. A similar memorial from a convention of Republican editors of Ohio was presented July 13, together with a petition of citizens of Ohio on the same subject. All these petitions and memorials were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections as presented. While the case was pending in committee, Messrs. Little and Butterworth, members of Congress from Ohio, appeared before the committee and offered to produce certain additional evidence of bribery. July 15, three reports were submitted by the members of the committee. Two of these, signed respectively by four and three of the Senators composing the committee, reached the conclusion that there was not sufficient evidence offered to warrant the Senate in proceeding with an investigation, while the third, signed by two of the committee, held that an investigation should be made.

It was not questioned by any member of the committee that to deprive a member of his seat it must be shown by legal evidence that he was personally guilty of the corrupt practices charged or that the corruption took place with his sanction and encouragement, or else that a sufficient number of votes was changed by the fraud or corruption charged to affect the result and to secure an election which otherwise would not have been obtained.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings of the Senate relating to it from the Journal of the Senate, 1st sess. 49th Cong., and the report of the Committee, Sen. Rep. No. 1490, 1st sess. 49th Cong. The reports of the committee of the Ohio legislature, with the testimony on which they were founded, are to be found in Sen. Mis. Doc. 106, 1st sess. 49th Cong. The reports are printed below.

[Special session of the Senate, March 4, 1885.]

MARCH 4, 1885.

The credentials of the following named Senators having been heretofore presented to the Senate, the oath prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice-President, and they took their seats in the Senate.

[Among those named]

Henry B. Payne, from the State of Ohio.

[First session, Forty-ninth Congress.]

TUESDAY, April 27, 1886.

The president pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the clerk of the house of representatives of the legislature of Ohio, transmitting a report of a special committee of said house of representatives appointed to investigate certain charges touching the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne to the United States Senate; which, together with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[At the same time Mr. Payne made a personal statement, which will be found at page 3861, Congressional Record, first session, Forty-ninth Congress.]

TUESDAY, May 4, 1886.

Mr. Hoar presented a letter of the secretary of the investigating committee of the house of representatives of the legislature of Ohio, calling attention to certain matter interpolated in the report of the investigation by said committee touching the election of Hon. H. B. Payne to the United States Senate and printed by order of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and Ordered, That the further distribution of the said report be discontinued, and that the same be reprinted under the direction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[The letter is printed at page 4118, Congressional Record, first session, Forty-ninth Congress.]

TUESDAY, May 11, 1886.

Mr. Hoar presented a memorial of the Republican central committee of Ohio, praying an investigation into the charges touching the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne to the Senate; referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, May 20, 1886.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of the house of representatives of the legislature of Ohio, in relation to the election of the Hon. Henry B. Payne to a seat in the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

TUESDAY, May 25, 1886.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a memorial of the legislature of Ohio in favor of an investigation by the Senate of the United States into the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne to that body; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MONDAY, June 7, 1886.

Mr. Hoar submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred sundry memorials from the State of Ohio in regard to the recent election of a Senator in that State, be authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

TUESDAY, July 13, 1886.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a memorial of the convention of Republican editors, held at Columbus, Ohio, July 8, 1886, praying an investigation into the charges touching the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne to the United States Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

[Printed as Sen. Mis. Doc. No. 141, 1st sess., 49th Cong.]

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate two petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying an investigation into the charges touching the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne to the United States Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, July 15, 1886.

Mr. Pugh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred several memorials praying an investigation into the election of Henry B. Payne as United States Senator from the State of Ohio, submitted a report (No. 1490) thereon.

Mr. Evarts asked and obtained leave to submit the views of a minority of three members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing subject; which were ordered to be printed as Part 2 of the Report No. 1490.

Mr. Hoar asked and obtained leave to submit the views of a minority of two of the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing subject; which were ordered to be printed as Part 3 of the Report No. 1490, accompanied by the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of Hon. Henry B. Payne, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

JULY 15, 1886.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Pugh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

(1) On April 27, 1886, the Senate referred to your committee—

"The testimony taken from the select committee of the house of representatives of Ohio, and the report of said committee as to charges against the official integrity and character of certain members of said house of representatives in connection with the election of Hon. Henry B. Payne as United States Senator."

(2) On May 20, 1886, the Senate also referred to your committee the following copy of the resolutions of the house of representatives of the State of Ohio in respect to the election of the Hon. Henry B. Payne as a Senator from that State, viz:

"Whereas it is the precedent in the United States Senate that charges of bribery must be directly made to warrant a committee of said body in proceeding to investigate the title of any United States Senator to his seat: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the house of representatives of Ohio, That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28 ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio are true, to wit, that the seat of Henry B. Payne in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money; and

"Further resolved, That the honor of Ohio demands, and this house of representatives requests, that the said title of Henry B. Payne to a seat in the United States Senate be rigidly investigated by said Senate."

(3) The Senate also referred to your committee the following resolution of the Senate of Ohio:

"Whereas by common report, suggested and corroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party, and by a recent investigation of the house of representatives, the title of Henry B. Payne to a seat in the United States Senate is vitiated by corrupt practices and the corrupt use of money in procuriug his election; and

"Whereas it is deemed expedient, in order to secure a thorough investigation of his said election as Senator by the United Senate, that the belief of the general assembly in this regard be formulated in a specific charge: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That in the opinion of the general assembly, and it so charges, the election of Henry B. Payne as Senator of the United States from Ohio in January, 1884, was procured and brought about by the corrupt use of money paid to or for the benefit of divers and sundry members of the sixty-sixth general assemby of Ohio, and by other corrupt means and practices, a more particular statement of which can not now be given.

"Resolved, That the Senate of the United States be, and the same is hereby, requested to make a full investigation into the facts of such election, so far as pertains to corrupt means used in that behalf."

(4) The Senate also referred to your committee the following resolutions of the Republican State central committee of Ohio:

"REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE ROOMS,
"Columbus, Ohio, May 5, 1886.

"Whereas it has been shown to our satisfaction by the testimony taken by the committee of the Ohio house of representatives, under house resolution No. 28, and from other sources, so strongly as to induce us to believe and charge that the election of Henry B. Payne to the Senate of the United States was secured by bribery, fraud, and corruption; and

"Whereas the testimony so taken has been by the house of representatives reported to the Senate of the United States, for such action as that body may see fit to take on account thereof; and

"Whereas the facts so established reflect upon the good name of the State of Ohio, and affect in morals, as well as in law, the validity of the title of Mr. Payne to his seat in the Senate: Now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Republican central committee of Ohio, That in the name of all honest people in the State of Ohio, and for the credit of the hitherto-unsullied name and reputation of our State, the Senate of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully requested to prosecute such investigation into the matters suggested by said report and the charges herein preferred, and to take such action thereon as may be necessary to relieve our State from the disgrace which it now rests under, and to do equity and justice to all concerned; and

"Resolved further, That the chairman of this committee is directed to forward an authenticated copy of this resolution to Hon. George F. Hoar, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate.

"We hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the preamble and resolution adopted by the Republican State central committee of Ohio at a regular meeting held in the city of Columbus, Ohio, this 5th day of May, 1886.

"JAS. E. LOWRY,
"Chairman.

"JOSHUA K. BROWN,
"Secretary."

The testimony given before the select committee of the house of representatives of Ohio was taken under the authority of the following resolution, adopted by the house January 13, 1886:

"Whereas the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette of January 12, 1886, contains a printed statement, on the authority of S. W. Donavin, alleging grave charges against the official integrity and characters of members of this house, namely, Hon. D. Baker, Hon. P. Hunt, Hon. W. A. Schultz, and Hon. Mr. Ziegler, so definite and precise in statement as to call for immediate action in order to vindicate the reputation of members of this house: Therefore,

"Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to inquire into all the facts of the charges so alleged, and report their conclusions to this house at as early a date as possible; and in the prosecution of this inquiry said select committee are empowered to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses under oath."

The extent and character of the investigation made by the select committee, under the above house resolution, is described by the select committee in their report as follows:

"Although but four persons, and they members of the present house, are named in the resolution, and the committee is required by its terms to investigate and report concerning them only, it was found necessary to extend the inquiry beyond this limit, in order to gain something like a comprehensive view of the situation pertaining to said election.

* * * * * * *

"Whenever our attention was called to anything which indicated the probable employment of improper means to gain support, we followed the clews presented, on the theory that we were not only authorized, but in duty bound, to pursue any matter that promised, even remotely, to show the use of such means in connection with the election, because the discovery of one important fact, although having no immediate bearing upon the charge against the person named in the resolution, might lead to the discovery of facts having such bearing. And furthermore, and upon the same theory, our inquiries were not confined to the technical rules of legal proof, but the committee availed itself of any source of information—admitted hearsay statements, and even the opinions of witnesses. But we consider in making this report no facts should be stated which are not sustained by testimony upon which a legislative body might base further action."

* * * * * * *

The conclusion reached by the select committee, after the examination of the fifty-five witnesses, is also stated in their report, as follows:

"Although, as stated in the outset, the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry, we believe that circumstances surrounding the election of Henry B. Payne as one of the Senators to represent the State of Ohio in the Congress of the United States, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant us in recommending that an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, for the information of the body of which Senator Payne is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable."

Upon the presentation of the above report the house of representatives of Ohio adopted the following resolution, on the 16th of April, 1886:

"Resolved by the house of representatives of the sixty-seventh general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit a copy, duly authenticated, of the testimony taken by the select committee appointed in pursuance of house resolution No. 28, and of the report of said committee, to the President of the United States Senate, to be by him presented to that body."

The testimony taken by the select committee is contained in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 106. It is not denied that the investigation was had, and the testimony taken in secret session of the select committee with closed doors, and that the house of representatives refused to print the testimony. If any examination was made of the testimony by the members of the house, except those on the select committee, no expression of any opinion, conclusion, or judgment thereon was made by the house, by resolution or otherwise, and it was resolved by the house, in accordance with the recommendations of the select committee, to transmit the testimony to the senate for its consideration and action without the formulation of any charge.

On May 18, 1886, over a month after the adoption of the resolution directing the transmission of the testimony without any conclusions thereon, and requesting nothing but the consideration of the senate and such action as it thought proper, the same house of representatives, composed of the same members, after reciting that—

"Whereas it is the precedent in the United States Senate that charges of bribery must be directly made to warrant a committee of said body in proceeding to investigate the title of any United States Senator to his seat:

"Resolved, That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28 ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio, that the seat of Henry B. Payne in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money, are true."

The select committee who had confronted and examined the fifty-five witnesses failed to discover that the testimony was "ample" or strong enough to create the "belief" that any such charges were true; and all the committee could say, and all the house could concur in saying, on the testimony when it was fresh in their recollection (if it had ever been read by any member), was, "we believe that circumstances surrounding the election of Henry B. Payne as United States Senator, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant us in transmitting to the Senate an authenticated copy of the testimony, without recommendation, or the expression of any opinion or belief as to what the testimony established.

The charge made by the house for the first time on the 18th of May, 1886, nearly two years and a half after the election of Senator Payne, that his seat was purchased by the corrupt use of money, is founded expressly and solely on the testimony taken under house resolution No. 28.

The resolution of the senate of Ohio adopted on May 14, 1886, states:

"That in the opinion of the general assembly, and it [the general assembly] so charges, the election of Henry B. Payne as Senator of the United States from Ohio, in January, 1884, was procured and brought about by the corrupt use of money paid to or for the benefit of divers and sundry members of the sixty-sixth general assembly of Ohio, and by other corrupt means and practices, a more particular statement of which can not now be given."

The above resolution was not a "joint," but a "senate," resolution, although it undertakes to express the opinion of the general assembly of Ohio four days prior to the passage by the house of its own resolution on the same subject. The resolution of the Ohio senate is based expressly and solely on "common report suggested and corroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party, and by a recent investigation of the house of representatives." It nowhere appears that the testimony taken by the select committee of the House was ever reported to the Senate, or otherwise subjected to its examination.

The Republican State central committee of Ohio, at a regular meeting held in the city of Columbus on the 5th day of May, 1886, preferred the charge "that the election of Henry B. Payne to the Senate of the United States was secured by bribery, fraud, and corruption," and such charge is made on "the testimony taken by the committee of the Ohio house of representatives under house resolution No. 28, and from other sources."

Your committee are fully aware of the transcendent importance of throwing around the Senate of the United States the highest safeguards against seating or allowing any man to occupy a seat in that body whose title thereto was procured by bribery, fraud, or corruption. It is an undeniable public fact, causing general and serious apprehension among patriotic and thoughtful people, that in all representative governments founded on popular suffrage the indiscriminate and frequently the corrupt use of money by political parties, without exception, and their candidates, has become one of the most powerful and dangerous instrumentalities in elections. In the United States especially the power inseparable from great wealth in the hands of individuals and corporations has been, and we fear will always be, improperly and often corruptly exerted to produce successful results in elections. All parties invite, and as a rule demand, the contribution of money to control elections, and its influence has been found to be so potential that its use is generally accepted by public opinion as being indispensable and permissible to insure the success of parties and their candidates.

The charge in the case before us is made by the two houses of the general assembly of Ohio, acting separately, and by the Republican State central committee of Ohio, that Henry B. Payne obtained the seat he now occupies in the Senate of the United States by the corrupt use of money, or, to be more specific, by bribery of members of the legislature. The gravity of the charge and the respectability and responsibility of those who make it are conceded, and your committee are deeply sensible of the obligation they are under to examine and decide the question referred to them as one of momentous public importance.

It is manifest that the charge as it comes to the Senate has its origin and support in the testimony taken by the Ohio house, under resolution No. 28, and forwarded to the Senate and printed in Mis. Doc. No. 106.

It is equally manifest to a majority of your committee that no consideration of duty, law, justice, public policy, or propriety requires the Senate to authorize an examination into the title of a Senator to his seat upon the naked charge of the legislature of his State that his election was procured by bribery of the members by whom he was elected, without informing the Senate of any fact or evidence or witness to establish or create reasonable ground to support the charge.

It would be unprecedented and inexplicable if any legislature were to make such a grave charge without any preliminary examination into its truth or justification, and your committee feel constrained to believe that it is absolutely certain that no such charge will ever be made by any legislature without an investigation and without evidence to verify the charge; and that it is equally certain that no legislature would request the Senate to enter upon such examination without furnishing the facts and witnesses to create a reasonable belief that the charge could be established by legal evidence if the Senate were to order an investigation. The sitting member was seated on credentials under the seal of his State showing that he had been legally and regularly elected by the legislature of his State. These credentials were read in the hearing of the Senate and remained on the files of the Senate sufficient time to allow those who now assail the validity of the election to make their charges and ask for an investigation by the Senate.

The main facts and circumstances to which so much importance has been attached to create belief and excite suspicion that money was corruptly used in the election, and that the Senate should make the investigation, were as public and well known when Senator Payne was seated as they are to-day. Why were two years and over allowed to pass without question or action by those who seem now to be so confident and persistent in charging foul play in the election of Senator Payne? The legislature of Ohio exercised its constitutional power of electing Henry B. Payne to the Senate of the United States. The legislature that elected him had unquestioned jurisdiction of that subject, and when the evidence of that election in the manner prescribed by the law and the Constitution is presented in the credentials under the seal of the State every presumption in favor of the validity of the election must be indulged by the Senate.

But it may be, and has been, urged that the two houses, acting separately, of another legislature of Ohio, send us resolutions, passed in due form, in which the specific charge is made that the members of the legislature that elected Mr. Payne, or some of them, were bribed with money by his friends, and that his election was procured by the corrupt use of money. It must be conceded that the two houses of the sixty-seventh general assembly of Ohio had no power or authority over the election or the title of Henry B. Payne as United States Senator. The two houses having no jurisdiction over the subject, it is manifest that as a matter of right or authority they had no more claim upon the consideration of the Senate as to the charge contained in their resolutions than the State Republican central committee. The only difference is in the number and position of the members of the several bodies who present the charge and request an investigation. The sixty-sixth general assembly of Ohio had power and jurisdiction to confer upon Henry B. Payne his title as a United States Senator. The only power that exists anywhere to try the validity of that title and to annul it is vested in the Senate of the United States. Would the Senate order an investigation of the title of a Senator to his seat on a charge made by any body of men, whatever might be their dignity or respectability, wholly unsupported and unaccompanied by any fact, evidence, or reason to make out the charge or to create a reasonable belief that the charge can be established and the sitting member deprived of his seat by an investigation?

A majority of your committee are constrained to believe that if such naked, unsupported charges by one man or any number of men could involve the Senate and any Senator in a trial of his right to his seat, such a precedent and practice would become an agency of persecution by the political and personal enemies of any Senator, and seriously impair the independence and standing of the Senate. No expectation was entertained by those who make the chargee in the present case that they would receive a moment's consideration if presented without being accompanied by the testimony upon which the charge is founded. Then the question is, has enough proof been adduced to justify the Senate in going into a trial of the right of Senator Payne to his seat?

In the case before your committee an investigation was ordered as to charges against four members of the Ohio house of representatives, and although the authority of the select committee was limited to the four inculpated members, yet the select committee enlarged the scope of its examination and explored the whole field of inquiry the Senate is now requested to enter for the discovery of evidence of which your committee has no information upon which they can act, as having any real existence or legality, to make out reasonable ground for belief that the charge can be sustained by authorizing another investigation.

Your committee are of the opinion that to deprive a sitting member of the Senate of his seat, the Senate must be satisfied by legal evidence that he was personally guilty of bribery, or that he was personally connected with the bribery or the corrupt use of money to procure his election, or that he had personal knowledge of such corrupt use of money and personally sanctioned or encouraged such use thereof to insure his election. The legal effect of such personal guilt of the sitting member on his election your committee do not decide, some members being of opinion that whether it extended to the corruption of the majority of the nominating caucus or the majority of the legislature of the State which secured his election is immaterial on the trial of the validity of his title or on the question of his expulsion, as the single personal act of bribery or other corrupt use of money by the sitting member as stated, to procure his election, would be sufficient in the opinion of some of us to invalidate the title he claims to have acquired, and would justify his expulsion from the Senate.

Your committee are also of the opinion that, if the evidence fails to show that the sitting member was guilty of the bribery of any member of the caucus or the legislature, or had any personal knowledge or agency in the bribery, or the corrupt use of money to secure his election, then the Senate must be satisfied by legal evidence that a sufficient number of the members of the legislature were bribed by the friends of the sitting member to secure the votes of enough members of the legislature to insure his election, and that without the votes thus corruptly obtained the sitting member would not have been declared elected.

It is conceded that the Democrats had a majority in the sixty-sixth general assembly of Ohio of thirty-six members, and that Henry B. Payne was the only Democrat voted for by the members of the legislature when he was elected to the Senate.

The charge was preferred against Henry B. Payne by the senate and house acting separately in the sixty-seventh legislature of Ohio, which was a different legislature from that which elected Henry B. Payne, and was composed at the time the charges were made of a majority of Republicans in each house.

It is also conceded that prior to the day when the law required the sixty-sixth general assembly of Ohio to vote for the election of a United States Senator a caucus of the Democratic members of the legislature was held to nominate some person for whom the Democratic members were to vote in the general assembly, and that in such caucus Henry B. Payne received 46 votes, Durbin Ward received 17, and George H. Pendleton received 15 votes; and that, Mr. Payne having received over a majority of the 79 Democrats in the caucus, he was declared nominated. The charge is that money was corruptly used by being paid to or for the use of divers members of the caucus to secure their votes, in the caucus, for Mr. Payne's nomination.

When your committee met to consider the matter referred to them, the first act of the committee was to comply fully with the first request of the Ohio house, and that was to make an examination of all the testimony taken by the select committee of the Ohio house of representatives under its resolution No. 28, the report of that select committee being all that was then before your committee. After several days' examination of the testimony the chairman of your committee, at our next meeting, made his report as copied in the minority report, which is, in effect that after careful reading of the testimony contained in Mis. Doc. No. 106, no evidence, opinion, or statement whatever was found personally inculpating Henry B. Payne in anyway in any bribery or the corrupt use of money in his election to the Senate. Neither did such examination show that enough had been found in the testimony to justify the charge that the election of Mr. Payne was procured by the corrupt use of money, or that there was anything in the testimony taken under the Ohio house resolution No. 28 to justify your committee in reporting in favor of a further investigation by the Senate. On the contrary, it was agreed that the testimony was insufficient to support the charge, and insufficient to justify the committee in reporting to the Senate that the title of Senator Payne to his seat ought to be investigated. This action met the entire demand first made by the Ohio house of representatives. About the time that your committee considered its labors terminated the supplemental resolutions of the two houses of the Ohio legislature and of the Republican State central committee made their appearance in the Senate and were referred to your committee, and soon after this last reference a request was made by the Hon. Mr. Little, an able and distinguished lawyer and representative of Ohio in Congress, that he be permitted to appear in person before your committee in behalf of the State Republican central committee to make known to your committee by argument and evidence that the title of Senator Payne to his seat in the Senate ought to be investigated. Permission was granted and full time allowed for the hearing of Mr. Little. Then came another request, from the Hon. Mr. Butterworth, another able and distinguished lawyer and representative from Ohio in Congress, that he be permitted to appear before your committee for the same purpose, which was granted, and full time given for the hearing of Mr. Butterworth. These distinguished Representatives explored all the sources of information that promised any supply of fact, argument, or speculation, whether the evidence was legal or mere rumor or hearsay, found in the report of the special committee or elsewhere, to convince your committee that another investigation of the right of Senator Payne to his seat should be authorized by the Senate.

The able and plausible arguments of Mr. Little and Mr. Butterworth were founded confessedly and almost entirely upon the evidence taken by the select committee of the Ohio house of representatives, which had been pronounced by the select committee itself as wholly insufficient to establish in the least degree any charge that had been made against the four members of the Ohio house named by the correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, and which your committee had also decided was insufficient to support the charges preferred by the two houses of the Ohio legislature on that testimony, notwithstanding the confident opinion expressed in their supplemental resolution that the testimony taken by their select committee was "ample" to establish the charge as to how Senator Payne's election was procured.

A majority of your committee report that the testimony taken by the select committee under resolution No. 28 was not supplemented or strengthened by any additional legal evidence, and no new information, not contained in Mis. Doc. No. 106, was brought to the attention of your committee that any court would not hold to be merely cumulative and speculative and of like character with that taken by the select committee of the Ohio house, and insufficient by itself, or in connection with the other testimony, and all treated as true, just as it might be shown to be if another investigation were ordered by the Senate, to justify your committee in reporting in favor of directing a trial by the Senate of the right of Mr. Payne to his seat.

Your committee, having made a protracted and exhaustive examination of the matters referred to them, report:

First. That Henry B. Payne has not been charged with having anything to do personally, or with having any personal knowledge of, connection with, or participation in, any act, or anything that may have been done, or charged as having been done, that was wrong, criminal, immoral, or reprehensible in his election; that no member of your committee, and no witness, Representative, or other person, has expressed the opinion or intimated any belief or suspicion that Henry B. Payne is or was connected in the remotest degree, by act or knowledge, with anything that was or may have been wrong, or criminal, or immoral in his election.

Second. A majority of your committee report that on the whole case as presented to them they recommend that the Senate make no further investigation of the charge involving the right of Henry B. Payne to his seat.

Your committee ask to be discharged from further consideration of the matters referred to them, and that the whole subject be indefinitely postposed.

VIEWS OF MR. TELLER, MR. EVARTS, AND MR. LOGAN.

Upon undisputed facts it appears that of the general assembly of Ohio, as in session and constituted in January, 1884, each house contained a majority of members of the Democratic party; that at a joint caucus of that party held on Tuesday, January 8, upon the first ballot, votes were cast—for Mr. Booth, 1 vote; for Mr. Pendleton, 15 votes; for Mr. Ward, 17 votes; and for Mr. Payne, 46 votes; thus showing a majority in the caucus of 13 for Mr. Payne over the united vote of all the other candidates. In regular conduct of the election of Senator by the legislature Mr. Payne was elected, and his credentials were received by the Senate of the United States at the session of March, 1885, and Mr. Payne since then has held, and now holds, a seat as Senator from Ohio in this body. No action was taken by or before the legislature which elected Mr. Payne calling in question the validity of his election or the conduct of the same in the canvass, the caucus, or the legislature itself.

A new legislature, as in session and constituted in January in the present year, showed a majority of the general assembly of the Republican party, and on the 13th day of January the house of representatives adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette of January 12, 1886, contains a printed statement, on the authority of S. K. Donavin, alleging grave charges against the official integrity and characters of members of this house, namely, Hon. D. Baker, Hon. P. Hunt, Hon. W. A. Schultz, and Hon. Mr. Zeigler, so definite and precise in statements as to call for immediate action in order to vindicate the reputation of members of this house: Therefore,

"Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to inquire into all the facts of the charges so alleged, and report their conclusions to this house at as early a date as possible; and in the prosecution of this inquiry said select committee are empowered to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses under oath."

The select committee commenced the taking of testimony under this inquiry on the 20th January, and concluded the same on the 6th April last. Two reports were made to the house, one presented by a majority of three, and the other by the minority of two. On April 16 the house adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved by the house of representatives of the sixty-seventh general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit a copy, duly authenticated, of the testimony taken by the select committee appointed in pursuance of house resolution No. 28, and the report of said committee, to the President of the United States Senate, to be by him presented to that body."

The President pro tempore of the Senate laid before the Senate the testimony and reports, and the same were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The majority report of the committee of the Ohio house presented as their "conclusion" the following statement:

"Although, as stated in the outset, the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry, we believe that circumstances surrounding the election of Henry B. Payne as one of the Senators to represent the State of Ohio in the Congress of the United States, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant us in recommending that an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate for the information of the body of which Senator Payne is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable."

The minority report presented as their conclusion the following statement:

"The minority of your committee, therefore, find, in conclusion, that there has been no testimony going to show that any unusual or improper methods were resorted to by any person with any member of the Sixty-sixth general assembly to induce them to support, or that any member was unduly influenced to support, Hon. Henry B. Payne for either his nomination or election to the United States Senate."

It appears that when the select committee of the Ohio house of representatives was entering upon the inquiry before them the following correspondence took place between Mr. Payne and Mr. Cowgill, the chairman of the select committee, and that Mr. Payne was never advised by the committee that "any testimony tending to inculpate him in any degree with any questionable transaction" had been received, or any opportunity was afforded him of appearing before the committee:

"UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1886.

"Hon. THOMAS A. COWGILL,
"Chairman, Columbus, Ohio:

"SIR: As one branch of the general assembly has appointed a special committee, of which you are the chairman, to investigate the conduct of the Democratic caucus which in January, 1884, nominated a candidate for United States Senator, and as the matter is thus raised to the plane of respectability and placed in charge of intelligent and honorable gentlemen, I propose to give it appropriate attention. For myself, I invite and challenge the most thorough and rigid scrutiny. My private correspondence and books of account will be cheerfully submitted to your inspection if you desire it. I only insist, in case any testimony is given which in the slightest degree inculpates me, I may be afforded an opportunity of appearing before the committee.

"I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"H. B. PAYNE."

"COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1886.

"Hon. H. B. PAYNE,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

"SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 22d instant, wherein you note the fact that a special committee of the Ohio house of representatives has been appointed to investigate the conduct of the Democratic caucus which in January, 1884, nominated a candidate for United States Senator, and you also declare that you propose to give the investigation appropriate attention.

"In reply, I have to say that the resolution to which you refer recites the fact that allegations of bribery, published on authority of S. K. Donavin, are of so grave and positive character as to call for immediate action in order to vindicate the reputation of members of the present general assembly. It directs the special committee to 'inquire into all the facts of the alleged bribery, and report their conclusions thereon to the house.'

"If in the prosecution of this inquiry any testimony tending to inculpate you in any degree with any questionable transaction be received, I assure you that your request to appear before the committee in such event will be most cordially and fully acceded to.

"Very respectfully,

"THOMAS A. COWGILL,
Chairman.

Instead of attempting a selection or summary of the testimony transmitted to the Senate by the Ohio house of representatives, for the illustration or support of our views and conclusions as to the proper disposition of the matter referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we have thought it eminently just to accept as the basis of our observations the two careful and intelligent presentations of the testimony to the Ohio house of representatives by the majority and minority reports of the select committee.

Your committee were addressed by two honorable members of the house of representatives from Ohio, Mr. Little and Mr. Butterworth, in exposition and enforcement of the testimony and of the just rules and principles which should govern your committee in their disposition of the matter before them. Subsequently, and while the committee was deliberating upon the case as submitted to them, these honorable gentlemen placed before your committee certain suggestions in the nature of corroborative or cumulative evidence, which we append, with the majority and minority reports to which we have referred, to accompany our report. These supplementary suggestions we have justly given this prominence to, as indicating in nature, if not in substance, what might be shown in testimony if an investigation should be entered upon by the Senate.

The only constitutional rights, powers, and duties which can sustain, or properly induce, an investigation such as is presented for the consideration of the Senate by the honorable house of representatives of the State of Ohio, arise from two separate and independent clauses of the Constitution:

By the first clause of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution, each House of Congress is made "the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members."

By the second clause of the same section each House may, "with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

As these two ends alone limit the basis and object of any investigation proposed, either for invalidating the election of a Senator or expelling from the Senate a duly elected and qualified member of it, a scrutiny of the grounds, in fact, upon which such action is demanded, in any case arising, from the Senate, requires an ascertainment whether the scope of the proposition and the testimony presented, or reasonably assured, would justify the ultimate action of the Senate under one or the other of these clauses of the Constitution. We do not understand that the house of representatives of Ohio presents any case upon the testimony taken or imagined to be accessible to any investigation by the Senate, or upon any allegation of the existence of facts suspected, though not probable, as would affect Mr. Payne with such personal delinquency or turpitude as would invite or tolerate his expulsion from the Senate for his participation in the transaction which resulted in his election. The examination of the testimony suggests no support for such an imputation, and the course of the select committee in not giving Mr. Payne an opportunity to be heard before them precludes any intimation that such a notion was entertained for a moment by that committee or the Ohio house of representatives.

We do not understand that any member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections has harbored or expressed the idea that the testimony taken, or suggested as accessible or possible, touches the subject of this personal inculpation of Mr. Payne. We shall, therefore, confine our further discussion of the matter, as presented for the investigation or action of the Senate, to the question arising upon the validity of Mr. Payne's election, and the declaration of his seat in the Senate vacant for such cause.

It is, no doubt, supposable that an election may be vitiated by fraud, corruption, and bribery without the member unseated being accused even of personal participation in the fraud, corruption, or bribery by which his election was compassed. If the election is thus vitiated, the member's seat cannot be saved by his personal exculpation and vindication. The integrity of the election, and not of the member, is in question under this clause of the Constitution.

But, on the same reason, the investigation, which now deals with the election as vitiated, and not the member as innocent, must reach the proof that the fraud, corruption, or bribery embraces enough in number of the voting electors to have changed, by these methods, the result of the election. If these corrupted votes gave the innocent member his seat, the deprivation of these corrupted votes vacates his seat, however innocent he is. But, if the uncorrupted votes were adequate to his election, and he is purged from complicity in the fraud, corruption, or bribery, his seat is not exposed to any question of validity in the election.

Upon a reference to the testimony presented by the Ohio house of representatives, and sifted and emphasized by the select committee's majority and minority reports, we are able to ascertain the number of members of the general assembly of Ohio that have been brought into inculpation, the degree and weight of evidence affecting each of them, and the conclusions of these two committees as to what had been proved, or could be expected to be proved, as bearing upon each of these members.

As to four members, viz, Messrs. Baker, Hunt, Schultz, and Ziegler, being the members of the house of representatives of 1886 upon charges against whom the general investigations were set on foot, we find the committee, by the majority report, declare that "the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry." The minority report express their conclusions to the same effect, as follows:

"That there has been absolutely nothing found in any way compromising the four members charged, and they are wholly exonerated from the charges made, and stand to-day without the shadow of a suspicion attaching to them in regard to conduct unbecoming members of this house."

As to two members of the house, viz, Mr. Kahle and Mr. Hull, the majority report names them as "two instances in which attempted bribery in the Senatorial canvass was reported by members of the sixty-sixth general assembly," and sets forth, as the report expresses it, "the testimony taken as to what those members reported" "in brief." Both Mr. Kahle and Mr. Hull were active and earnest supporters of Mr. Pendleton in the canvass, and so continued to the end, voting for Mr. Pendleton in the caucus and in the legislature. The evidence respecting these two members, as given or commented upon by the majority and minority reports, we refer to, conformably to our declared purpose, without attempting any observations of our own upon the testimony. For the immediate consideration now presented, it is sufficient to say that no diversion from Mr. Pendleton's support to Mr. Payne's was effected as to these two electors.

The select committee names in the majority report two senators and two representatives, and speaks of them as follows:

"Rumors as to suspected bribery with which were connected the names of Messrs. Mooney and Roche, members of the house, and Messrs. White and Ramey, members of the senate, of the sixty-sixth general assembly, all of whom voted in caucus for Henry B. Payne for United States Senator, were traced by the committee until developments, which were regarded as important, were reached, as follows"— giving the testimony bearing upon each, as viewed by the majority of the committee. The minority report takes up the case of each of these members, and comments upon the evidence which it adduces from the testimony, and declares as to each of them that the testimony justifies no imputation upon any one of them. We again, without any observations of our own on the evidence, refer to the majority and minority reports on this topic.

It is proper that we should call the attention of the Senate to the very explicit and candid statement of the majority report as to the reach and scope which were given to the investigation, and of the distinction drawn between the testimony at large and the report itself, as the latter containing "no facts" "which are not sustained by testimony upon which a legislative body might base further action." This report says:

"Whenever our attention was called to anything which indicated the probable employment of improper means to gain support, we followed the clews presented, on the theory that we were not only authorized, but in duty bound, to pursue any matter that promised, even remotely, to show the use of such means in connection with the election, because the discovery of one important fact, although having no immediate bearing upon the charge against the persons named in the resolution, might lead to the discovery of facts having such bearing. And furthermore, and upon the same theory, our inquiries were not confined to the technical rules of legal proof, but the committee availed itself of any source of information—admitted hearsay statements, and even the opinions of witnesses. But we consider that in making this report no facts should be stated which are not sustained by testimony upon which a legislative body might base further action."

The minority report thus speaks of the completeness of the investigation instituted by the committee:

"Your committee, in its anxiety that nothing, however trivial and remote, that might have, either directly or indirectly, any possible bearing on the matter under consideration, have exercised the greatest liberality possible in the taking of testimony, which has extended the scope of its inquiry far beyond the limits that could be given the most liberal construction of the resolution."

As the result of this wide investigation it does not appear that the select committee recommended any action by the legislature looking to a further investigation, or to the incrimination or punishment in the courts of law of any persons named in the report, nor that the legislature itself has proposed any action in such directions, or either of them. Indeed, the whole recommendation of the committee to the house of representatives is in these words:

"That an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate for the information of the body of which Senator Payne is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable."

In pursuance of this recommendation the house of representativs communicated to the senate the testimony taken and the reports of the committee, which are before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The only action taken by either house of the general assembly of Ohio since, that has been brought to the attention of the Senate or of its committee, is shown in a resolution of the senate of Ohio and one of the house of representatives, as follows:

"Senatorial election in Ohio.

"[Senate resolution—Mr. Hardacre—No. 58.]

"Whereas by common report, suggested and corroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party, and by a recent investigation of the house of representatives, the title of Henry B. "Whereas it is deemed expedient, in order to secure a thorough investigation of his said election as Senator by the United States Senate, that the belief of the general assembly in this regard be formulated in a specific charge: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the general assembly, and it so charges, the election of Henry B. "DAVID LANNING,
"Clerk."

Upon the whole matter as presented, in evidence and argument, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we are of opinion that there is no evidence which purports to prove that fraud, corruption, or bribery was employed in the election of Mr. Payne affecting the votes, given either in the caucus or in the legislature, whereby the election was carried by corrupt votes to the effect of his election. Nor, in our opinion, is there any allegation that proof exists or would be forthcoming to the extent that would vitiate the election of Mr. Payne by reason of the necessary votes, in caucus or in the legislature, for his election, having been obtained by fraud, corruption, or bribery.

We are of opinion, therefore, that under the first clause of the fifth section of Article I of the Constitution the testimony and other considerations placed before the Senate do not warrant the Senate in instituting by itself an investigation looking to the unseating of Mr. Payne as a member of the Senate.

We have, in our conclusions, made no distinction between the use of fraud, corruption, or bribery in a caucus vote or in the legislative vote, for a Senator. Although a caucus, or what proceeds in it, has no constitutional or legal relation to the election of a Senator, yet, by the habit of political parties, the stage of determination as to who is to be elected Senator, and the influences, proper or improper, that produce that determination, is that which precedes and is concluded in the caucus. So far as the question of personal delinquency or turpitude is concerned, no moral distinction should be taken between corrupt proceedings in caucus and those in the legislature. How far any such distinction would need to be insisted upon in any case, on the question of unseating a Senator, where he himself was not affected with any personal misconduct, or complicity with the misconduct of others, we have no occasion, in the immediate case or attitude of the subject, to consider or suggest.

At the outset of our observations we stated the limits which properly should control the action of the Senate under the applicable clauses of the Constitution, and by the same reason the ends which should be proposed in its investigations and to which they should be confined. It is obvious that the province and duty of a State in its investigations of fraud, corruption, and bribery in an election of Senator are much more extensive. A State is not confined at all to the question whether the actual election brought in question involves the Senator personally in misconduct, or whether enough votes for him were effected by fraud, corruption, or bribery that would require his seat to be vacated, although himself free from imputation.

The State should execute its laws respecting the purity of Senatorial elections by the indictment and conviction of a single person who bribes or is bribed, whether the election is affected or not. The State should investigate as well to the end of better laws and surer execution of the laws. The State, too, is charged with the maintenance of "the honor of Ohio," and its vindication rests with its own legislation, its own judiciary, and its own people; but it can not demand this vindication at the hands of the United States Senate, except as that may flow from investigations by that body within the limits of its constitutional powers and duties.

That State has conducted and concluded its investigations into the election of Mr. Payne, and has placed the result before the Senate of the United States. It has attempted no further investigations either by the plenary power of its legisture or through the functions of the courts of law. If, upon further examinations made by the State, through its legislature or its courts, a case should be presented for renewed consideration by the Senate, within the rules and principles we have stated as governing the action of the Senate, the further action of the Senate will be governed by what may then appear. As the whole matter now stands before the committee, we concur in its judgment that an investigation should not be instituted by the Senate, and the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and for the reasons which we have thus given.

[The report of the select committee appointed by the house of representatives of the sixty-seventh general assembly of Ohio to investigate the charges of bribery in connection with the election of Mr. Payne and the views of the minority of that committee, together with a letter from Senator Thurman and the letter of Messrs. Little and Butterworth offering evidence, which follow in the report, are omitted. These documents may be found in Senate Reports, 1st sess., 49th Cong., vol. 11, No. 1490, pp. 16–32. The letter of Messrs. Little and Butterworth is printed below, p. 619.]

VIEWS OF MR. HOAR AND MR. FRYE.

The undersigned cannot concur with the report of the majority.

The senate and house of representatives of the State of Ohio, and the Republican State committee, representing the political party which for much the larger portion of the last thirty years has contained a majority of the voters of that State, have each addressed a memorial to the Senate charging that the election of the sitting member was procured by bribery and corruption, and praying the Senate to cause an investigation into said charges. Two gentlemen of high character and position, Messrs. Little and Butterworth, both now members of the other House from the State of Ohio, the former lately attorney-general of that State, appeared before the committee, declared their personal belief in the truth of the charge, asserted that in their opinion the belief is entertained by a large majority of the people of Ohio of both political parties, and asked to be permitted to lay before the committee evidence to support it. Besides Messrs. Little and Rutterworth eight of the Ohio delegation in the House add their earnest request to the same effect, affirm that the investigation is demanded by a large majority in number and influence of the press of the State, say that additional testimony is in the possession of Messrs. Little and Butterworth, and express their belief that "if opportunity is offered, the charges of the Ohio senate will be sustained by testimony to your full satisfaction."

Before the memorials above referred to were presented, there had been presented to the Senate for its information the evidence taken by a committee of the house of representatives of Ohio, who were directed to investigate charges of corruption in said election against four members of the present house of representatives of Ohio, being the only members of the legislature who made the election against whom allegations of bribery were made who have been continued in the public service, and the conclusions of the committee upon said evidence. Messrs. Little and Butterworth also produced certain affidavits and letters stating confessions of persons implicated, and pointing out other sources where evidence would probably be obtained if lawful authority should be given by the Senate to procure it.

We think this presents a case where it is the duty of the Senate to permit the petitioners to present their evidence and to authorize the issue of proper process to aid them in procuring the attendance of witnesses.

The Constitution declares that "each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members." The Senate is the only court which has, or under the Constitution possibly can have, jurisdiction of this question. There can be no trial, inquiry, or adjudication anywhere else to which this inquiry is not totally foreign and immaterial." The courts in Ohio may exercise jurisdiction of the offense of bribery of or by an individual. But the question whether the result of an election of Senator was thereby changed can never be before those courts. Either house of the legislature may inquire as to the personal turpitude of its own members. But the action which may result from such investigation must be precisely the same, whether other persons also were or were not corrupted, and whether the choice of Senator were or were not affected.

As the Senate is the only court that can properly try this question, so the change is made, if not in the only way it can be made, yet certainly in the way beyond all others in which it can be made with most authority. The legislature of Ohio is the representative of the dignity, interest, and honor of the State. It appoints the Senators of the United States, and if a vacancy in the office exist, it must fill it. It is supported in this charge by the committee who are, under our political customs, the organ of more than half the voters of the State concerned.

For the Senate to refuse to listen to this complaint, so made, would, it seems to us, be, and be everywhere taken to be, a declaration that it is indifferent to the question whether its seats are to be in the future the subject of bargain and sale, or may be presented by a few millionaires as a compliment to a friend. No more fatal blow can be struck at the Senate or at the purity and permanence of republican government itself than the establishment of this precedent.

But the case does not rest alone upon the charge and character of the parties who make it, and who ask to be permitted to produce evidence in its support. If it did, it, in our judgment, would be enough. It is surely a strange answer to be given by a court to a suitor to say that it has already considered the question and decided the case before it is presented.

But the petitioners adduce strong reasons to show probable cause that they can establish their case. The testimony taken by the committee in Ohio has been referred to us. Our attention has also been called to evidence pointing to a large mass of additional testimony. The committee of the Ohio house has power only to inquire into the conduct of four members of that body. They report that—

"A number of clews furnished were not followed, because we were convinced that they could lead only to points at which further pursuit would become necessary, but which could not be passed without authority to reach beyond the limits of the State for witnesses, and much anonymous information was ignored by the committee chiefly for the same reason."

We have examined the evidence taken by that committee. It does not support the charges as to the four members implicated; it does not connect Mr. Payne with the transactions; it does not show that the result was changed or effected by corrupt means. But it does show that Mr. Payne's name was not publicly suggested as a candidate for Senator until after the State election; that it was not very prominently suggested until shortly before his election in January; that many persons who had been supposed to favor Pendleton voted for Payne; that there was a widespread belief that corrupt means were used to procure the result; that one member was offered a large sum of money by another member to vote for Payne; that there were hearsay statements charging corruption as to several others; that two members of the legislature received large sums of money about the time of the election, of which they, being called as witnesses, gave no satisfactory account; that the prominent managers of Mr. Payne's canvass, viz, Paige, McLean, Huntington, and Oliver H. Payne, did not testify before the committee. There was no evidence tending to show the bribery of any particular member, except as above stated.

When we say it was not shown that the result was changed or effected by corrupt means, we are speaking of direct testimony. But the consideration should not be forgotten that where persons familiar with the whole case would be quite sure to know whether such means were needful to change the result, or whether their candidates would be elected without it, if they are found expending large sums of money corruptly the fact alone affords strong reason for the inference that the result was thereby controlled. But the result of the investigation in Ohio seems to the undersigned absolutely unimportant. That committee, while they took a wider range of inquiry than the matter committed to them, neither had, nor conceived they had, any power to inquire into Mr. Payne's title to his seat. They issued no process extending beyond the limits of Ohio. They report no conclusion, except as to the four members. When witnesses refused to answer, they did not press them. They went beyond the scope of the resolution appointing them only, as they say, "to gain something like a comprehensive view of the situation."

The Ohio senate of 1883-'84 contained 33 members. Of these 22 were Democrats and 11 Republicans. The house contained 105 members, of which 60 were Democrats and 45 Republicans. The members entitled to vote on joint ballot were 138 in all, 82 Democrats and 56 Republicans. Eighty-two persons were entitled to vote in the Democratic caucus, of whom 42 were a majority. Seventy-nine persons actually attended that caucus, of which 40 were a majority. Is there fair reason for instituting an inquiry whether the result of the election was procured by bribery? We think that the character of the persons making the charge is of itself sufficient to require the Senate to listen to it. But they produce a great body of evidence all pointing in the same direction.

We are not now to consider whether the case is proved, or even whether there be a prima facie case. There has as yet been no evidence laid before us addressed to either of these considerations. That can not be done without the issue of process for the attendance of witnesses. Messrs. Little and Butterworth now offer, on their personal responsibility, to establish to the satisfaction of the Senate, largely by witnesses who were not within the reach of the Ohio committee, and partly by evidence which strengthens, supplements, and confirms that which was before that committee, the following among other propositions:

First. That of the Democratic members elected to the sixty-sixth general assembly more than three-fourths were positively pledged to Mr. Pendleton and General Ward, and more than a majority pledged to Mr. Pendleton. This they offer to prove by Mr. Pendleton himself, by Col. W. A. Taylor, and others.

Second. That in these pledges these members represented the opinion and desire of their constituents.

Third. That Mr. Payne was nowhere spoken of or known as a candidate during the popular election, or until a very short time before the appointment of Senator.

Fourth. That just before the legislative caucus, where the nomination was made, which was one week before the election, large sums of money were placed by Mr. Payne's son and other near friends of his at the control of the active managers of his canvass in Columbus. This they allege can be shown by the books of one or more banks.

Fifth. Mr. Payne's near friends declared that his election has cost very large sums. A gentleman whose name is offered to be given will testify that David R. Paige declared to him that he had handled $65,000.

Oliver B. Payne stated to the same person that it had cost him $100,000 to elect his father.

Sixth. That the members of the legislature who changed from Pendleton to Payne did so after secret and confidential interviews with the agents who had the disbursement of these moneys.

Seventh. That members of the legislature who so suddenly changed their attitude can be proved to have, at about the time of the change, acquired large sums of money, of which they give no satisfactory account.

Eighth. Respectable Ohio Democrats affirm that just before the caucus the room of Mr. Payne's manager, Paige, "was like a banking house;" that the "evidence of large sums of money there was abundant and conclusive;" that Paige's clerk declared in the presence of a gentleman of integrity that "he had never seen so much money handled in his life."

Ninth. That the public belief that the choice of Senator was procured by the corrupt use of money prevails almost universally in Ohio among persons of both parties, which finds very general expression in the press.

Tenth. That there is specific proof leading with great force to the conclusion that each of ten members will be shown to have changed their votes corruptly, and thereby that the result was changed.

The Senate has also recently referred to the committee certain resolutions adopted by a convention of the Republican editors of Ohio, held at Columbus, July 8, 1886, praying the Senate to investigate these charges. The newspaper reports of the convention show that the governor of the State was present at the convention, and declared his concurrence in said prayer. There have also been communicated to us extracts from the Democratic newspapers of Ohio, showing that a majority of those papers have declared their opinion that the election was procured by corruption. Copies of these extracts are appended.

What is the effect upon an election of Senator of bribery of voters in a caucus of the legislators who are to make the choice is a question upon which we prefer not to form an opinion until the evidence is before us. The members of a caucus ordinarily deem themselves bound in honor to vote in the election for the person whom it nominates, by the vote of a majority, on condition that such person belong to their party, and is fit for the office in point of character and ability. Bribery, therefore, which changes the result in the caucus, would ordinarily determine the election.

If B, C, and D have promised to vote as A shall vote, if A be corrupted four votes are gained by the process, although B, C, and D be innocent. In looking, therefore, to see whether an election by the legislature was procured or effected by bribery, it may be very important to discover whether that bribery procured the nomination of a caucus whose action a majority of the legislature were bound in honor to support. Seventy-nine persons attended the Senatorial caucus and voted on the first ballot. Of these Mr. Payne had the votes of 46, Ward 17, Pendleton 15, Booth 1. If 6 only of Mr. Payne's votes in the caucus were procured by bribery, the result of the election of Senator was clearly brought about by that means. Now, Messrs. Little and Butterworth tender specific proof, part of which was before the Ohio committee and part here offered for the first time, directly and very strongly tending to create the belief as to each of 10 of the members of the Ohio legislature that his vote for Mr. Payne was purchased, and that proper process and inquiry will establish the fact by competent and sufficient evidence.

One member, after the caucus, deposited $2,500 in two amounts, and being charged that it was the price of his vote, did not persist in a denial.

Another, who changed to Payne, just before the caucus stated to a colleague that he was offered $5,000 to vote for Payne, and intended to accept it, and tried to induce his colleague to do the same. That person's wife just afterwards deposited $2,500 in a bank in Toledo, took a certificate therefor, which she transferred to her husband.

Another who is claimed to have changed suddenly from Pendleton to Payne is found making, soon after, expenditures amounting to $1,600 with his own money on land, the title to which was taken in the name of his father, who paid $2,000 for it about the same time. The father and son lived together in the same house. The son testified that he did not know where the father got the money to pay the $2,000. The father refused to state where he got his $2,000, and said he did not know where the son got the $1,600, and if he did he would not tell. The same member also made other large payments of money about the same time.

Another, who had to borrow money when he went to Columbus, and changed suddenly from Pendleton to Payne, was shown just after the election to be in possession of money to purchase property, refurnish his house, etc. He was denounced by another member as having sold his vote. He turned exceedingly sick, made no denial, and was taken away. Two others, elected as antimonopolists, became supporters of Mr. Payne and were heard discussing together the amount of money each had received. Another, who had before been for another candidate, but voted for Mr. Payne, received from Oliver B. Payne $3,500, which he said was a loan. Another, according to affidavits produced by Mr. Little, was declared by a fellow member to be claiming $3,500 for his vote. Another, who had been very earnest in support of Pendleton, visited the room of Mr. Payne's managers, where the large sums of money are alleged to have been seen, and immediately afterwards voted for Mr. Payne.

The committee received this communication from Messrs. Little and Butterworth in addition to the statements made by them at the hearing:

"Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
"Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, United States Senate:

"DEAR SIR: Since our appearance before your committee the last time, we have received information, deemed by us important, bearing upon the question of investigation, and desire to indicate its general character.

"First. We have information, regarded as trustworthy, that a member of the sixty-sixth general assembly, one of the sudden converts to Payne, with meager means and without financial credit prior to January, 1884, was able to and did deposit in bank to his own credit shortly after the election, to wit, February 13, 1884, $1,350, besides showing other signs of prosperity not accountable for in ordinary ways.

"Second. We can show by witnesses, whose credibility will not be questioned, that just prior to the meeting of the caucus at which Mr. Payne was nominated he (witness) was, in the interest of Payne, summoned by telegraph to Columbus. He went, and was asked by Payne's managers what sum of money would be required to withdraw the vote of the representative of his (witness's) county from Pendleton and give it to Payne. The question was squarely and seriously addressed to witness: 'How much money does he (the representative) want?'

"Third. We have from reliable sources additional information of a convincing nature pointing to bribery, consisting of conversation, statements, and admissions of implicated members and others, which we are not at liberty to state more explicitly in this communication, owing to the conditions under which the information is imparted, but which, with the other matters referred to, we can verbally communicate to you in more particular form if desired.

"In the line of matter heretofore submitted we deem it worth while to give this additional instance:

"Fourth. We quote from a letter in our possession from a reponsible person in Ohio, omitting names:

'"Our representative, ———, had been elected as a Pendléton man, and had agreed ——— to support Pendleton. A few days before the caucus it was whispered that '——— had been seen,' and that he would vote for Payne. A telegram was at once sent from here to ——— (the member) by leading Democrats, warning him against such a course, and ——— and others at once went to Columbus and saw the member. He hooted at the idea that he would vote for Payne. ——— assured Pendleton that the member would support him. ——— then came home feeling confident that the member would not disappoint him."'

"This member was interviewed in the presence of a friend of Mr. Pendleton, and asserted his devotion to him, but was suspected and watched. As the hour of the caucus approached it was noticed that he was not present. The friend of Mr. Pendleton went to his room for him. We quote further:

'"He found him in company with one of the men who handled the 'boodle,' and he was much embarrassed by ———'s presence. But he went to the caucus with ———, and on the way again asserted his allegiance to Pendleton. If I remember correctly, ——— said they had printed ballots for both candidates, and that he gave ——— (the member) a Pendleton ticket. But when the vote was taken, ——— (Pendleton's friend) observed that ——— (the member) wrote something on a piece of legal cap and then tore it off. He afterwards discovered that ——— (the member) put in the hat the same piece of paper; and then ——— (Pendleton's friend) went to ———'s (the member's) desk and tore off a piece of the legal cap large enough to include the small piece torn off by ——— (the member). I think ——— (Pendleton's friend) was one of the tellers. At any rate, he got the ballot which fitted the piece of legal cap, and which ——— had voted, and found that Payne's name was on the ballot."'

"This member was thereupon charged by the Democratic county paper of his county with betrayal, etc.

"We do not question that the facts can be shown substantially as indicated with repect to the member referred to.

"Should this information not be used, names and means of identity placed on record would or might lead to annoyances for no purpose. They are, therefore, not here given.

"Your committee, we will venture to add in conclusion, will not overlook the fact that our showing, made in the face of a most persistent and powerful opposition, of unlimited means and expedients, has been one for an investigation, and not final action following an investigation.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN LITTLE,
"BENJ. BUTTERWORTH."

It is said that much of this is hearsay and that taken together it is insufficient to establish a case which will overcome the presumption arising from the certificate of election. We are not now dealing with that question. The Senate is to determine whether there is probable cause for an inquiry. Any man who lays a claim to any property, real or personal, may institute his process at pleasure, and compel the courts to hear and try the cause. Even a criminal accusation requires only the oath of the accuser, who is justified, if he have probable cause.

It will not be questioned that in every one of these cases there is abundant probable cause which would justify a complaint and compel a grand jury or magistrate to issue process and make an investigation. Is the Senate to deny to the people of a great State, speaking through their legislature and their representative citizens, the only opportunity for a hearing of this momentous case which can exist under the Constitution? We have not prejudged the case, nor do we mean to prejudge it. We sincerely trust that the investigation, which is as much demanded for the honor of the sitting member as for that of the Senate or the State of Ohio, may result in vindicating his title to his seat and the good name of the legislature that elected him.

But we can not consent to be accomplices in denying justice to either. We do not believe the American people will be satisfied that the Senate should refuse to hear this case either on the ground that some other tribunal has tried some other case, or on the ground that it has already been decided without hearing or evidence, or on the ground that a bribe paid for a vote in a legislative caucus is not understood by both parties to include a vote in the legislature for the candidate of that caucus.

How can a question of bribery ever be raised or ever be investigated if the arguments against this investigation prevail? You do not suppose that the men who bribe or the men who are bribed will volunteer to furnish evidence against themselves? You do not expect that impartial and unimpeachable witnesses will be present at the transaction. Ordinarily, of course, if a claim like this be brought to the attention of the Senate from a respectable quarter that a title to a seat here was obtained by corrupt means the Senator concerned will hasten to demand an investigation. But that is wholly within his own discretion, and does not affect the due mode of procedure by the Senate. From the nature of the case the process of the Senate must compel the persons who conducted the canvass and the persons who made the election to appear and disclose what they know; and until that process issue you must act upon such information only as is enough to cause inquiry in the ordinary affairs of life.

The question now is not whether the case is proved—it is only whether it shall be inquired into. That has never yet been done. It can not be done until the Senate issues its process. No unwilling witness has ever yet been compelled to testify; no process has gone out which could cross State lines. The Senate is now to determine, as the law of the present case and as the precedent for all future cases, as to the great crime of bribery—a crime which poisons the waters of republican liberty in the fountain—that the circumstances which here appear are not enough to demand its attention.

It will hardly be doubted that cases of purchase of seats in the Senate will multiply rapidly under the decision proposed by the majority of the committee. The first great precedent to constitute the rule under this branch of law is to be this:

Held, by the Senate of the United States, that a charge made by the legislature of a State, and by the committee of the political party to which the larger number of its citizens belong, and by ten of its representatives in Congress, that an election of Senator was procured by bribery, accompanied by the offer to prove the fact, does not deserve the attention of the Senate, and this, although it also appear—

That there is a general and widespread public belief in the truth of the charge; that there was a sudden and unexpected and unaccounted-for change to the sitting member from another candidate, to whom a majority of the electing body had been previously pledged; that large sums of money were brought to the place of election just before the choice by the managers of the canvass for the person elected; that there is evidence tending to show the bribery of several members, and the acquisition by others, who so changed their support, of considerable sums of money, immediately after such change, affect at least 10 members of said legislature; that a change by corrupt means of the votes of 6 persons would have changed the result in a legislative caucus, and thereby bound and committed the vote in the legislature of 82 persons, who were a large majority of such legislature;

Provided it also appear that one branch of a subsequent legislature of the same State have, in investigating charges against four of their members, incidentally inquired into charges against other persons, so far as they could without compelling unwilling witnesses to answer, without use of process extending beyond their State, and "without following out many clews, which they did not follow because they were convinced that they would lead only to points of which further pursuit would become necessary."

We recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of the Hon. Henry B. Payne, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

[Forty-ninth Congress—second session. Fiftieth Congress—first session.]

DAVID TURPIE, of Indiana.

February 10, 1887, the Vice-President presented a memorial of the legislature of Indiana contesting the validity of the election of David Turpie as Senator, and on the 16th Mr. Turpie's credentials for the term beginning March 3, 1887, were presented. Both papers were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which, on May 14 was discharged from further consideration of them. December 5, 1887, Mr. Turpie appeared and was sworn and took his seat in the Senate. On the same day Mr. Turpie's credentials, together with a memorial from a committee appointed by the joint convention of the legislature of Indiana and the papers in relation to the matter on the files of the Senate, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. May 14, 1888, the committee reported that the remonstrants offered to show that Alonzo G. Smith usurped the office of presiding officer of the senate of Indiana, and was supported in the usurpation by the majority of that body; that after this usurpation the senate, without debate or hearing, declared two duly-elected members not entitled to their seats, and seated in their stead two other persons not duly elected; and that the senate, under this presiding officer and with these two members in joint convention with the house, elected Mr. Turpie, and the votes of the two members wrongfully seated were necessary for his election. The committee held that these facts, if proved, would not justify a declaration that the sitting member was not entitled to his seat; that the presiding officer was recognized as such by the senate, and the senate recognized as the lawful senate by the house and by the governor, and that these facts required the Senate of the United States to consider it the lawful senate so far as concerned its right to take part in the election of a United States Senator; that as to the two members seated by the senate so organized, the judgment of the senate of Indiana was conclusive on the Senate of the United States, and that the latter body could not inquire into the motive of the former. The committee therefore asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the case. May 15 the committee were discharged in accordance with their recommendation.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the proceedings in relation to it from the Journal of the Senate, 2d sess., 49th Cong. and 1st sess., 50th Cong., together with the report of the committee, Sen. Rep. No. 1291, 1st sess., 50th Cong.

[Second session, Forty-ninth Congress.]

THURSDAY, February 10, 1887.

Petitions, memorials, etc., were presented and referred as follows:

By the President pro tempore: Resolutions of a joint convention of the legislature of Indiana, contesting the validity of the election of David Turpie as United States Senator from that State—to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

[The resolutions are printed in full on p. 1564, Cong. Record, 2d sess., 49th Cong.]

WEDNESDAY, February 16, 1887.

The president pro tempore laid before the Senate a paper purporting to be the credentials of David Turpie, certifying to his election as a senator by the legislature of Indiana for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1887; which was read.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, March 1, 1887.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of Francis B. Stockbridge, a paper purporting to be the credentials of David Turpie, and a resolution of the joint convention of the legislature of Indiana contesting the validity of the election of David Turpie, as United States Senator from that State.

In response to a question from Mr. Platt as to the effect of the foregoing order, Mr. Hoar made the following statement:

Mr. HOAR. Under the rules of the Senate all papers committed to any committee are to be returned to the files of the Senate at the expiration of the Congress, and the function of the committee itself expires with the Congress. If the credentials of Mr. Turpie had been retained by the Committee on Privileges and Elections without action until noon on the 4th day of March, under the operation of that general rule precisely the thing would have happened then that has happened this morning; that is, the paper would have gone back to the files of the Senate and the committee would have been discharged from its consideration. The only alternative to that course would have been an assumption by the committee or by the Senate at the present session to deal with the credentials of a gentleman claiming to be a Senator-elect before the time had arrived for the beginning of his term, and before he had presented himself to be heard upon the subject.

The Senate is a continuing body which was organized at the beginning of the Government in 1789, and that organization is to continue, as we fondly hope, until time shall be no more, certainly until the destruction of the American Constitution. It is therefore possible that it might be within the constitutional power of the Senate to determine in advance the right of a Senator to a seat upon this floor, and it would be a violation of all constitutional precedent, and it would be, in my judgment, a violation of the sense of justice and propriety of the Senate and of the American people.

The effect, therefore, of this report is simply to remand to the action of the Senate to be taken after the 4th of March without prejudice—without being in the least affected by any action now (on) any question which any person may see fit to raise, and that is all. No prejudice, for no prejudice against any person who may conceive himself entitled to a seat on this floor hereafter will arise or has arisen in consequence of the report of the committee or of the Senate in accepting it. (Congressional Record, second session Forty-ninth Congress, p. 2474.)

THURSDAY, March 3, 1887.

Mr. Harrison presented a memorial of the members of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Indiana protesting against the alleged election of David Turpie as a Senator from that State.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

[First session—Fiftieth Congress.]

TUESDAY, December 6, 1887.

The credentials of the following-named Senators having been presented to the Senate, the oaths prescribed by law were administered to them by the President pro tempore, and they took their seats in the Senate:

* * * * * * *

Mr. David Turpie, from the State of Indiana.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Hoar presented a memorial of the committee appointed by the joint convention of the general assembly of the State of Indiana in relation to the election of Hon. David Turpie as United States Senator from that State; which, together with the papers touching said matter on the files of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when appointed.

MONDAY, May 14, 1888.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred sundry resolutions, memorials, etc., in relation to the election of Hon. David Turpie as United States Senator from the State of Indiana, submitted a report (No. 1291), with the recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

TUESDAY, May 15, 1888.

On motion by Mr. Hoar that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the several resolutions and memorials concerning the election of Hon. David Turpie as United States Senator,

After debate,

It was determined in the affirmative.

[The debate will be found on pp. 4145 to 4147 Cong. Record, 1st sess. 50th Cong.]

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MAY 14, 1888.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred certain resolutions of the joint convention of the two houses of the State of Indiana concerning the election of Hon. David Turpie as United States Senator, and a memorial signed by F. Winter and 17 others, members of the legislature of said State, protesting and remonstrating against the admission of Mr. Turpie as a member of the Senate of the United States from the State of Indiana, and a communication signed by F. Winter and John M. Griffiths in behalf of a committee appointed by the joint convention of said assembly of said State for the purpose of presenting to the Senate of the United States the facts attending the election of David Turpie as aforesaid, have considered the same and respectfully report:

Mr. Turpie received a certificate of his election from the governor of Indiana, which constitutes a prima facie title to his seat, and has been admitted thereupon to take the oath.

The two houses of the legislature of Indiana, having failed to concur in the appointment of a Senator, met in joint convention, and after sundry ballotings, in which no person had a majority of the votes cast, a ballot was had in which Mr. Turpie received 2 more votes than all others. A quorum of said joint convention and a quorum of each house was present and voted. The proceedings were in all respects regular, and resulted in a valid election of Mr. Turpie, unless the facts which the remonstrants offer to prove constitute a valid objection.

They offer to show, first, that, there being a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor, the Hon. Robert S. Robertson was duly elected to fill such vacancy, and thereby became entitled by the constitution and laws of Indiana to preside over the senate; but that, on the meeting of the senate on the 6th day of January, 1887, being the first day of the session of the legislature at which said alleged election of Mr. Turpie took place, one Alonzo G. Smith usurped the office and function of such presiding officer, was supported and maintained in such usurpation by a majority of said body, excluded Mr. Robertson from said office and function, and continued so to preside and so to exclude Mr. Robertson during all the sessions of said senate, including its attendance on said joint convention, until after the said alleged election of Mr. Turpie.

Second. That before said alleged election the senate wrongfully, and for the purpose of obtaining a majority for said Turpie in said joint convention, declared two members, who had been duly and lawfully elected members thereof, not entitled to their seats, and declared two other persons, who had not been duly and lawfully elected, to be entitled to such seats, and thereupon seated such persons, and that this was done without right, without evidence, and without hearing or debate; and that said persons so seated thereafter were present and voted for Mr. Turpie in said convention, and that without such votes said Turpie would not have received a majority.

The committee are of opinion that the facts offered, if proved, will not warrant the Senate in declaring the sitting member not entitled to his seat. There can be no doubt that the body in question was the constitutional senate of Indiana. The journals of both houses of the legislature of the State have been submitted to us. It appears that the body was recognized as the senate by the governor and by the house of representatives. Statutes, to which its constitutional assent was necessary, were enacted and have become part of the law of the State.

It seems to us that, without entering upon the question whether there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor which Mr. Robertson was duly elected to fill, the recognition of Mr. Smith by a majority of the senate as its lawful presiding officer, and the recognition of the senate as a lawfully-organized body by the other house as well as by all its own members who remained and took part in its legislative proceedings, and by the executive department, require us to consider it as the lawful senate, lawfully organized so far as to be entitled to take part in the joint convention which elected a Senator of the United States.

We also think that the judgment of the senate of Indiana as to the title of Messrs. Branahan and McDonald, the two members in question, to their seats is binding upon the Senate of the United States. This body is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members. The senate of Indiana is likewise the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members. We must determine all questions arising out of the proceeding of the electors. But who sustain the character of electors is to be determined by the legislative body of the State. We can not inquire into the motive which controlled its judgment. In rendering that judgment, whether it shall give a hearing to parties, permit debate, examine witnesses, act upon evidence or without evidence, are matters within its own discretion. If that discretion were exercised in the manner charged by the remonstrants, a majority of the committee think that a great public crime was committed, for which the offenders are responsible to the people of Indiana. But we can not try the question.

A majority of the committee do not mean to be understood as now committing ourselves to an opinion upon the question whether the Senate can not refuse to admit to a seat a claimant who owes his election to a legislative body which is itself the result of fraud or crime, which has overcome the true will of the people, even if it have possessed itself of legislative authority, and of the technical evidence of a rightful character, or whether the judgments of such a body as to the title to seats of its individual members are entitled to any respect whatever. If that question shall hereafter unhappily arise it will be dealt with on its own merits. The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the several memorials.

[Fiftieth Congress—First session.]

DANIEL B. LUCAS vs. CHARLES J. FAULKNER, of West Virginia.

December 5, 1887, papers purporting to be the credentials of Daniel B. Lucas, appointed a Senator by the governor of West Virginia, and of Charles J. Faulkner, elected Senator by the legislature of West Virginia, in special session, and also the protest of Mr. Lucas against the administration of the oath to Mr. Faulkner, were presented to the Senate. Objection was made to the admission of the oath to Mr. Faulkner, and the question of his admission was postponed. December 12 the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported on the 14th.

The committee found the following facts: The legislature of West Virginia, whose duty it was to elect a Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1887, adjourned without making a choice. The governor was by the State constitution empowered to convene the legislature in special session to transact business mentioned in the call, and no other. March 5 the governor appointed Mr. Lucas in the recess of the legislature, and on the same day issued his proclamation convening the legislature in special session to consider and act upon eight subjects named in the call, no one of which was the election of a United States Senator. The legislature met and duly elected Mr. Faulkner, if it had power to do so. The committee held that the constitution required the legislature to fill the vacancy at its next meeting; that the body convened by the governor's proclamation was the "legislature," and this its next meeting, and that the prohibition of the State constitution must be taken to apply to business transacted under that constitution and not to "duties imposed upon [the legislature] by the supreme authority of the Constitution of the United States." The committee further held that the fact that Mr. Faulkner held a judicial office at the time of his election, and that the State constitution made him, "during his continuance therein, ineligible to any political office," did not invalidate his election, because "no State can prescribe any qualification to the office of United States Senator in addition to those declared in the Constitution of the United States." The committee therefore reported that Mr. Faulkner was entitled to the seat. The resolution reported by the committee was agreed to on the same day, the 14th, and Mr. Faulkner appeared, took the oath of office, and took his seat in the Senate. December 20 Mr Faulkner offered a resolution for the compensation of Mr. Lucas for all expenses, etc., as contestant, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That committee reported on the 12th of January, 1888, a resolution to pay Mr. Lucas $1,000 in full of all claims. This resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control Contingent Expenses, which reported it without amendment on the 25th, and on the same day it was agreed to by the Senate.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the Journal of the Senate (1st sess. 50th Cong.) relating to this subject and the report of the committee.

MONDAY, December 5, 1887.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of Daniel B. Lucas, appointed a Senator by the governor of the State of West Virginia to fill the vacancy occasioned by the expiration of the term of Johnson M. Camden, March 4, 1887, the legislature of said State having adjourned sine die without having chosen a Senator to fill said vacancy as prescribed by law; which were read.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of Charles J. Faulkner, elected a Senator by the legislature of West Virginia, in special session, for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1887; which were read.

* * * * * * *

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a protest of Daniel B. Lucas against the administration of the oath to Charles J. Faulkner, claiming to be elected Senator from the State of West Virginia.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

[A copy of the credentials of Mr. Faulkner, which embody the proclamation of the governor convening the legislature in special session and a transcript of the proceedings of the legislature in relation to the election, are printed on pp. 1 to 3 Cong. Record, 1st sess. 50th Cong. The protest of Mr. Lucas may be found ibid., p. 3, as well as Mr. Faulkner's resignation of the office of judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit.]

Mr. Charles J. Faulkner, whose credentials were this day presented, having appeared,

Mr. Hoar objected to the administration of the oath to him at present; and

The question of his admission was postponed to to-morrow.

MONDAY, December 12, 1887.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That the credentials of Mr. Faulkner as a Senator from the State of West Virginia, the memorial of Mr. Lucas, and all other papers on the files of the Senate relating to the title to the seat from the State of West Virginia, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1892.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Charles J. Faulkner, the credentials of Daniel B. Lucas, and the protest of Daniel B. Lucas against administering the oath to Charles J. Faulkner as Senator from the State of West Virginia, submitted a report (No. 1), accompanied by the following resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Daniel B. Lucas is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That Charles J. Faulkner has been duly elected Senator from the State of West Virginia for six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1887, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

Mr. Faulkner appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Hoar (chairman), Frye, Teller, Evarts, Spooner, Saulsbury, Vance, Pugh, Eustis.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

DECEMBER 14, 1887.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Charles J. Faulkner, the credentials of Daniel B. Lucas, and the protest of Daniel B. Lucas against administering the oath to Charles J. Faulkner as Senator from the State of West Virginia, submitted the following report:

The Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 3, provides:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; * * * if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

"SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

The Revised Statutes of the United States, Title II, section 14, provide:

"The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress."

Section 15 prescribes the manner of such election. Section 16 is as follows:

"Whenever, on the meeting of the legislature of any State, a vacancy exists in the representation of such State in the Senate, the legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization, to elect a person to fill such vacancy, in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a Senator for a full term."

The Constitution further provides, Article I, section 5:

"Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Of course the opinion of any other tribunal can have no weigh as an authority in determining any question as to the validity of the election of a Senator. But it may be proper to note that the constitutional authority of Congress to prescribe the time and manner of electing Senators, although it may not exhaust the whole subject, but still leaves in force the regulations of a State, in regard to the same subject, not in conflict with its own, is expressly affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Ex parte Seibold, 100 U. S., 371.

The constitution of West Virginia provides that—

"The legislature shall assemble at the seat of government biennially, and not oftener, unless convened by the governor. The first session of the legislature, after the adoption of this constitution, shall commence on the third Tuesday of November, 1872; and the regular biennial session of the legislature shall commence on the second Wednesday of January, 1875, and every two years thereafter on the same day. (Article VI, section 7.)"

Article VII, section 7, is as follows:

"The governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene, at his own instance, the legislature; but, when so convened, it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together."

The term of Mr. Camden as a Senator from West Virginia expired on the 4th day of March, 1887. The regular biennial session of the legislature began on the second Wednesday of January in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution cited.

At that session the legislature proceeded to ballot for a successor to Mr. Camden, but no person obtained a majority of the ballots and it adjourned without making a choice. Thereafter, on the 5th day of March, the governor appointed Mr. Lucas, in the recess of the legislature, and issued to him a certificate declaring his appointment as Senator in the Senate of the United States "until the next meeting of the legislature having authority to fill such vacancy." Mr. Lucas accepted the appointment.

On the same 5th day of March the governor issued the following proclamation:

"PROCLAMATION.

"STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
"EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
"Charleston, March 5, 1887.

"I, E. W. Wilson, governor of the State of West Virginia, under and by virtue of section 7 of article VII of the constitution of said State, which provides that—

"'The governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene, at his own instance, the legislature; but, when so convened, it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together'—

"Do issue this, my proclamation, to convene the legislature of said State, at the seat of government, at Charleston, on the third Wednesday in April, A. D. 1887, to consider and act upon the following subjects of legislative business, to wit:

"I. To make appropriations of public money to pay general charges upon the treasury.

"II. To make appropriations of public money to pay members of the legislature, and for salaries of the officers of the government, in pursuance of the forty-second section of the sixth article of the constitution.

"To protect the public treasury against unnecessary expenditures by—

"1. Regulating the costs, charges, and proceedings in criminal cases before justices of the peace and circuit courts.

"2. Providing for and limiting the allowances for the maintenance of lunatics in jail.

"IV. To carry into effect section nine of article XI of the constitution, which provides that—

"'Railroads heretofore constructed, or that may hereafter be constructed, in this State, are hereby declared public highways, and shall be free to all persons for the transportation of their persons and property thereon, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by law, and the legislature shall, from time to time, pass laws applicable to all railroad corporations in the State, establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights, and providing for the correction of abuses, the prevention of unjust discriminations between through and local or way freights and passenger tariffs, and the protection of the just rights of the public, and shall enforce such laws by adequate penalties.'

"And to provide for securing such relief to the people of this State as may be had from the act recently passed by Congress entitled 'An act to regulate commerce.'

"V. To prohibit railroad companies from carrying or conveying public officers over their roads free of charge, or at a less charge than the usual rate for other persons, and to abolish, absolutely, the free-pass system.

"VI. To prohibit railroad companies from carrying or conveying delegates to political conventions over their roads free of charge, or at a less charge than is made for all other such delegates to such conventions, and to define what shall constitute a political convention.

"VII. To prohibit the use of money and all other improper, fraudulent, and corrupt means to secure nominations, by political parties, or election to public office.

"VIII. To provide for the acceptance and confirmation of the reports of the joint boundary commission on the boundary lines between West Virginia and Pennsylvania."

The legislature met in special session, pursuant to said call, and duly elected Mr. Faulkner to fill the existing vacancy in the Senate of the United States, if it had authority so to do.

The Constitution of the United States is the supreme authority, and all provisions of the constitution or statutes of any State are void and of no effect unless they can be so construed as not to conflict with its provisions.

The Constitution of the United States expressly provides that the vacancy which happens during the recess of the legislature of any State shall be filled by the legislature at its next meeting. The statute of the United States merely prescribes the time and manner in which, at such meeting, the constitutional mandate shall be obeyed. The only question, therefore, which can possibly arise, is whether the body which sat in pursuance of the call of the governor was a legislature in the constitutional sense.

It is claimed by Mr. Lucas, that, as this body was not permitted to enter upon any legislative business, except such as related to the eight matters set forth in the call, it was not a legislature, but was a body deriving its power from the will of the executive, and so was exerting a certain executive or quasi executive function, something like that which is exercised by the Senate in giving its assent to the nominations of public officers.

But it seems to us that this view can not be supported. In the first place, the body is expressly declared by the constitution of West Virginia itself to be a legislature. In the next place, the function which it exercised in making enactments upon the eight great subjects mentioned in the call of the governor is clearly a legislative function. Among them, under Articles I and II, is the making appropriations of public money; under Article III, the regulating of procedure in criminal cases; under Articles V, VI, and VII would exist the power to declare certain high crimes and misdemeanors; and under Article VIII, to give the assent of the State to the establishment and confirmation of its boundary lines.

It is difficult to conceive of any definition of the word "legislature" which would not include a body capable of passing and actually passing such enactments as these. They can be binding on the people of the Commonwealth only as legislation. They would be subject to be construed and enforced by the courts of that State only in their character as laws.

But it seems to the committee that the construction of the State constitution of West Virginia, upon which the above argument is based, is one which will not bear examination. When that constitution provided that the legislature so convened in extraordinary occasions "should enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together," the people must be presumed to have had in mind business to be transacted under authority of the State constitution, and not to have intended to prohibit the performance of duties imposed upon it by the supreme authority of the Constitution of the United States.

If the argument be sound that a legislative body which is prohibited from entering upon certain classes of business, or which is confined to certain classes of business clearly legislative in their character, is no legislature in the constitutional sense, its logic would require us to declare that the legislature of every State whose bill of rights excludes it from large domains of legislation is no legislative body. If, under the same provision of the Constitution of the United States, the act of Congress had fixed a day for holding elections for Representatives to Congress, and the State constitution or laws should prohibit the assembling of the people for such elections on the day so fixed, it would, we suppose, be held clear that the act of the State would be void and the authority of the act of Congress would prevail.

We can not see any difference between such prohibition of a State constitution applicable to the constitutional electors of Senators, who are members of the State legislature, and the constitutional electors of representatives, who are a body of electors authorized to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

We are therefore clearly of opinion that the election of Mr. Faulkner at the special session of the legislature of West Virginia was valid.

It is insisted that Mr. Faulkner was ineligible to the office of Senator by reason of the provision of the constitution of West Virginia:

"No judge during his term of office shall practice the profession of law or hold any other office, appointment, or public trust, under this or any other government, and the acceptance thereof shall vacate his judicial office. Nor shall he, during his continuance therein, be eligible to any political office. (Article VIII, section 16.)"

But we are of opinion that no State can prescribe any qualification to the office of United States Senator in addition to those declared in the Constitution of the United States. (See the debates on the case of Mr. Trumbull, supra p. 148.)

This provision, according to the settled rule of construction, must be so construed as to attribute to it a meaning not inconsistent with the constitution of West Virginia. This can well and properly be done by holding it to mean "eligible to office under the constitution of West Virginia."

We therefore find that Mr. Faulkner has been constitutionally elected to the seat in the Senate made vacant by the expiration of the term of Mr. Camden and that he is entitled to take the oath.

We report the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Daniel B. Lucas is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That Charles J. Faulkner has been duly elected Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1887, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

EXPENSES OF MR. LUCAS.

TUESDAY, December 20, 1887.

Mr. Faulkner submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the sum of dollars be paid out of the contingent fund of the United States Senate to D. B. Lucas in full of all expenses, etc., incurred by him as a contestant for a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1888.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be paid to Daniel B. Lucas, of West Virginia, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as compensation for expenses incurred in contesting the seat of Hon. Charles J. Faulkner in the United States Senate, $1,000, the same to be in full for all claims for such expenses, and also for any claim for salary as Senator.

WEDNESDAY, January 25, 1888.

Mr. Jones, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Hoar on the 12th instant, to pay Daniel B. Lucas $1,000 for expenses incurred by him in contesting for a seat in the Senate, reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution; and

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

[Fifty-first Congress—First session.]

CLARK AND MAGINNIS vs. SANDERS and POWER, of Montana.

January 16, 1890, papers purporting to be the credentials of Messrs. Sanders and Power as Senators from the State of Montana, were presented and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. January 23, papers purporting to be the credentials of Messrs. Clark and Maginnis were also presented, and were referred to the same committee. March 24 the committee reported and on the next day the views of the minority were submitteed. The reports agree in finding the facts to be as follows: Messrs. Sanders and Power were elected by a joint assembly composed of one-half of the senate of Montana and a body calling itself the house of representatives made up of twenty-five persons of whose right to sit and act in the house there was no question, and five persons claiming the right to sit and act as members from the county of Silver Bow. Messrs. Clark and Maginnis were elected by a joint assembly composed of one-half of the senate, and a body claiming to be the house of representatives and made up of twenty-four persons whose title to seats was undisputed, and five persons claiming to be members from Silver Bow County.

The question which of these two bodies was the lawful house depended upon the question which of the two delegations of five members from the county of Silver Bow was entitled to sit in the house of representatives until their title was adjudicated by the house. The decision as to which delegation was so entitled to sit depended upon the question who was lawfully entitled to give credentials to the representatives elect, and the decision of the body entitled to give the credentials depended upon the question whether the vote of precinct 34 of Silver Bow County should be admitted or rejected. The majority of the committee held that, under the law applicable to this election, it was the duty of the State canvassing board to receive the returns, declare the result, and give the credentials in accordance with such declaration, and that as that board had given the lawful certificates of election to the first-named five persons, they were lawfully entitled to take part in the organization of the house and to sit until the house adjudicated the title to their seats and to take part in its proceedings and in the joint convention for the election of Senators of the United States.

The minority of the committee contended that the county commissioners were the proper canvassing board, the clerk of the county the proper authority to issue certificates of election, and that, as the county commissioners had counted the vote of precinct 34, under mandamus from the district court of the Territory, and the clerk of the county had issued certificates accordingly to the second five persons above mentioned as claiming to represent Silver Bow, the body in which they sat, was the lawful joint assembly of the senate and house of representatives of Montana, and Messrs. Clark and Maginnis the lawfully elected Senators from that State. The minority further contended that in any event the powers of the State or county canvassing board were merely ministerial, and that, therefore, the vote of precinct 34 must be counted and the persons certified by county clerk accepted as members of the house until the house itself had passed on their title.

April 16 the case was decided in accordance with the majority report and Messrs. Sanders and Power were seated.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the Journal of the Senate, 1st sess., 51st Cong., in relation to it and the reports of the committees from Sen. Rep No. 538, 1st sess., 51st Cong.

The provisions of the constitution of Montana and of the acts of Congress and of the Territory upon which the decision depended appear in the report of the committee below.

THURSDAY, January 16, 1890.

Mr. Teller presented a paper purporting to be the credentials of Wilbur F. Sanders, chosen a Senator by the legislature of Montana, and also a paper purporting to be the credentials of Thomas C. Power, chosen a Senator by the legislature of the same State; which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THURSDAY, January 23, 1890.

Mr. Vest presented a paper purporting to be the credentials of William A. Clark, and also a paper purporting to be the credentials of Martin Maginnis, elected Senators by the legislature of the State of Montana; which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

On motion by Mr. Vest, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That pending the settlement of the contested-election cases of Senators from the State of Montana, Messrs. Wilbur F. Sanders, Thomas E. Power, William A. Clark, and Martin Maginnis be admitted to the privileges of the floor of the Senate

[The motion was agreed to without objection and without discussion.]

MONDAY, March 24, 1890.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the papers purporting to be credentials of Wilbur F. Sanders, Thomas C. Power, William A. Clark, and Martin Maginnis, severally claiming seats in the Senate from the State of Montana, submitted a report (No. 538) accompanied by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Martin Maginnis is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Wilbur F. Sanders is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Mr. Gray asked and obtained leave to submit at some future day the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the foregoing cases.

TUESDAY, March 25, 1890.

Mr. Gray, in pursuance of leave granted, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested seats in the Senate from the State of Montana, accompanied by the following resolutions intended to be proposed as amendments to the resolutions reported by the committee; which were ordered to be printed, to accompany the report No. 538:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Martin Maginnis is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Wilbur F. Sanders is not entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is not entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

FRIDAY, March 28, 1890.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That 1,500 additional copies of the reports of the majority and minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Montana contested-election case be printed for the use of the Senate.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Hoar (chairman), Frye, Teller, Evarts, Spooner, Vance, Pugh, Gray, Turpie.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MARCH 24, 1890.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred sundry documents purporting to be, respectively, the credentials of Messrs. Wilbur F. Sanders, Thomas C. Power, William A. Clark, and Martin Maginnis, each claiming to be entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana, have considered the same and respectfully report:

No distinction exists between the cases of Messrs. Sanders and Power, and no distinction exists between the cases of Messrs. Clark and Maginnis. The cases on each side have been presented and argued upon the merits of the title, and not merely upon the question presented by the certificate of the governor or of the secretary of the State. The committee, therefore, have considered and report upon the whole case upon its merits.

The claimants on both sides seem to be agreed that a lawful joint convention was held in Montana by the members of the two houses of the legislature, and elected Senators by due proceedings. The dispute is which of two bodies claiming to be the lawfully-organized house of representatives of Montana was entitled to that character.

There was no election of Senator by concurrent vote on the Tuesday appointed for that purpose by the statute of the United States (Rev. Stat., sections 14, 15). On the following day one-half the members of the senate met in joint assembly with a body which had assembled and organized in a room called the Iron Hall, which body was known as the Iron Hall or Republican house, whereupon, a ballot for Senator being had, Mr. Sanders had a majority of all the votes cast, and was declared duly elected. No other person having such majority, the convention was adjourned until the day following, when, a ballot for Senator being held, Mr. Power had a majority of all the votes cast and was declared duly elected. If this body were the lawful house of representatives of Montana, these two gentlemen were duly chosen Senators.

On the same day the other half of the members of the senate met in joint assembly with a body which had assembled and organized in the court-house, which body was known as the court-house or Democratic house, voted for Senators by separate ballotings, adjourned from day to day, and continued balloting until Messrs. Clark and Maginnis had a majority of all the votes cast and were declared duly elected. If this body were the lawful house of representatives of Montana these two gentlemen were duly chosen Senators.

These two bodies were composed as follows: By the constitution of Montana the house of representatives consists of fifty-five members, of whom twenty-eight are a quorum. Twenty-five persons of whose title to sit in the house of representatives and take part in its proceedings no question is made, together with five persons claiming to be entitled to sit and take part as representatives from the county of Silver Bow, met, as above stated, at the Iron Hall, at the time fixed by the constitution for the meeting of the legislature, and organized there. The auditor, who is required by the constitution to preside at the organization of the house, called them to order and presided till a speaker was chosen. Twenty-four other persons of whose title to sit in the house of representatives and take part in its proceedings no question is made, together with five other persons claiming to be entitled so to sit and take part as representatives from the county of Silver Bow, met, as above stated, at the court-house, at the time fixed by the constitution for the meeting of the legislature, and organized there.

The whole case, therefore turns upon the question which of these two sets of five persons was entitled to sit in the house of representatives from the county of Silver Bow, take part in the organization and other proceedings down to and including the time of the election of Senators. It is not claimed that there was any adjudication of the house itself affirming or denying such title.

To determine this question the committee have been led to consider three others, the decision of which, in our judgment, disposes of the whole case.

First. Which of the two sets or groups of five members claiming to sit for the county of Silver Bow had credentials from the officer or board entitled to canvass the vote and declare the result?

Second. If one group of five had the lawful credentials, but the other group were in fact elected, which was legally entitled to sit in the house at its original organization, and remain and take part in all subsequent proceedings until the house itself had adjudicated their title, there being in existence two bodies each claiming to be the true house?

Third. Is there evidence which warrants the Senate in finding that the persons who had the credentials were not, in fact, duly elected?

There was another view of the case which in the opinion of one or two only of the committee rendered the foregoing questions immaterial. We will refer to it before closing the report. But the foregoing statement presents the whole matter to be inquired into, as understood by the large majority of the committee.

First. Who had the lawful credentials? It appears from the record of the body which met at the Iron Hall that "the roll of the members elected and holding certificates of the State canvassing board was called," and that thirty members answered to their names, including Messrs. A. F. Bray, P. R. Dolman, F. H. Hoffman, J. H. Monteath, and William Thompson, claiming to be members from Silver Bow; that these persons took the oath of office, took part in the organization, and remained members of said body until after the election of Messrs. Sanders and Power, in which they took part. The certificate of the State canvassing board will be found in the appendix, marked A.

It appears from the records of the body which met at the court-house that the roll of the members elected was called and twenty-eight persons, holding certificates of election from the clerks of their respective counties, appeared and answered to their names, including Messrs. Thomas F. Courtney, A. H. Day, A. M. Dusseault, John W. Gilligan, and Joseph Hogan, claiming to be members from Silver Bow; that these persons took the oath of office, took part in the organization, and remained members of said body until after the election of Messrs. Clark and Maginnis, in which they took part. As our decision does not depend upon any question as to the form of the certificate of the county clerk, it is not necessary to annex a copy of his certificate.

The enabling act, which authorized a constitutional convention for Montana, was approved by the President February 22, 1889. It provided (section 24)—

"The constitutional convention may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the legislature."

It is also provided (section 8):

"And the constitutional conventions which may assemble in North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall provide, in like manner, for submitting the constitutions formed by them to the people of said proposed States, respectively, for ratification or rejection, at elections to be held in said proposed States on the said first Tuesday in October. At the elections provided for in this section the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, and for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said Territories, who, with the governor, and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon separate articles or propositions, and a constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances."

The constitutional convention of Montana passed the following ordinance:

"[Ordinance 2—Elections].

"Be it ordained by the convention assembled to form a Constitution for the State of Montana:

"First. That an election shall be held throughout the Territory of Montana on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, for the ratification or rejection of the constitution framed and adopted by this convention.

"Second. At said election the constitution framed and adopted by this convention shall be submitted to the people of the Territory for their ratification or rejection, and all persons who are then qualified under the laws of this Territory shall be qualified to vote for the ratification or rejection thereof.

"Third. Said elections shall be held at the several polling places and precincts throughout the Territory appointed for the holding of elections under the laws of this Territory, and shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory regulating elections. The boards of county commissioners of the several counties of the Territory shall appoint judges and clerks of such elections in each of said polling places and precincts in the same manner as is now required by law for the appointment of judges and clerks of general elections in the Territory.

"Fourth. Each elector voting at said election shall have written or printed upon the ticket he may deposit in the ballot box, the words 'For the constitution,' or 'Against the constitution.'

"Fifth. The votes cast at said election for the adoption or rejection of said constitution shall be canvassed by the canvassing boards of the respective counties not later than fifteen days after said election, or sooner if the returns from all the precincts shall have been received, and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory of Montana for canvassing the votes at general elections in said Territory, and the returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who, with the governor and the chief justice of the Territory, or any two of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers, who shall meet at the office of the secretary of the Territory on or before the thirtieth day after the election and canvass the votes so cast and declare the result.

"Sixth. That on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, there shall be elected by the qualified electors of Montana a governor, a lieutenant-governor, a secretary of state, an attorney-general, a State treasurer, a State auditor, a State superintendent of public instruction, one chief justice and two associate justices of the supreme court, a judge for each of the judicial districts established by this constitution, a clerk of the supreme court, and a clerk of the district court in and for each county of the State, and the members of the legislative assembly provided for in this constitution. The terms of officers so elected shall begin when the State shall be admitted into the Union and shall end on the first Monday in January, 1893, except as otherwise provided.

"Seventh. There shall be elected at the same time one Representative in the Fifty-first Congress of the United States.

"Eighth. The votes for the above officers shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law, and returns shall be made to the secretary of the Territory and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, except as to clerk of the district court.

"Ninth. There shall also be elected at the same time the following county and township officers: Three county commissioners, one clerk of the board of commissioners and ex officio recorder, one sheriff, one county treasurer, one county superintendent of common schools, one county surveyor, one county assessor, one coroner, one public administrator, one county attorney, two justices of the peace, and two constables for each township. The terms of office for the above-named officers shall begin upon the admission of the State and end upon the first Monday in January, A. D. 1893, except as to county treasurer, whose term shall begin on the first Monday in March succeeding his election and end on the first Monday of March, A. D. 1893, and also as to county commissioners, whose terms are otherwise provided for in this constitution.

"Tenth. The votes for the above county and township officers and for clerk of the district court shall be returned and canvassed, and certificates of election to said officers issued as is now provided by law.

"Eleventh. Notice of the election for the adoption or rejection of this constitution, and for State, district, county, and township officers shall be given by the clerks of the several boards of county commissioners, in the same manner as notice of general elections for Delegate to Congress and county officers is required to be given by the existing laws of the Territory.

"Twelfth. That the provisions of this ordinance shall apply only to the election and to the officers elected on the first Tuesday of October, 1889."

The provisions of the general laws of the Territory of Montana in reference to elections will be found in Appendix B, as also the provisions of statute (1889) requiring five judges of elections instead of three.

It will be seen that by the Territorial law there were to be at each precinct three judges of elections; this number afterwards was required to be five by statute of 1889, and two clerks.

As each voter presented himself, his name and number were to be entered on the poll book, his ballot delivered to one of the judges, who, without inspecting it, was to deposit it in the box. When the polls closed, the judges were to canvass the vote, as follows: First, the several poll lists to be compared, and mistakes, if any, corrected, till they were found to agree. Next, the ballot box was to be opened, the ballots counted, and if they were found to exceed the number on the poll lists, they were to be placed again in the box and the excess drawn out. Then the board was to ascertain the whole number of votes cast, and the clerks to set down in their poll books the name of every person voted for, the office for which he received votes, and the number of votes he received. This result being certified by the clerks and attested by the judges, one of the two poll books was to be sent by mail to the clerk of the board of county commissioners.

After the fifteenth day from the election, or sooner if all the returns were received, the chairman of the board of county commissioners was to open the returns and make abstracts of the votes. It was then the duty of the clerk of said board to issue certificates of election to the persons having the highest number of votes for members of the legislature, county and township officers, and to send to the auditor of the Territory a copy of such abstracts. The marshal and treasurer of the Territory were then to canvass the votes for Delegate to Congress, and the governor to give the person elected his certificate. The constitution provides that—

"All laws enacted by the legislative assemby of the Territory of Montana and in force at the time the State shall be admitted into the Union, and not inconsistent with this constitution or the Constitution or laws of the United States of America, shall be and remain in full force till altered or repealed."

We are then to see whether the Territorial law providing that the county board shall make abstracts of the results and the county clerk issue certificates of election in the case of representatives was still in force, or superseded by the provisions of the ordinance in respect to the election in question.

Article 5 of such ordinance is as follows:

"Fifth. The votes cast at said election for the adoption or rejection of said constitution shall be canvassed by the canvassing boards of the respective counties not later than fifteen days after said election, or sooner if the returns from all of the precincts shall have been received and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory of Montana for canvassing the votes at general elections in said Territory, and the returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who with the governor and the chief justice of the Territory, or any two of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers, who shall meet at the office of the secretary of the Territory on or before the thirtieth day after the election, and canvass the votes so cast and declare the result."

The sixth article of the ordinance enumerates all of the State officers and fixes the time of their election. Within this list is included representatives, and clerks of district courts, who, though chosen for each county, are officers of a court whose jurisdiction extends over several counties.

The seventh article fixes the same time for the election of Representatives in Congress.

The eighth article then provides that the votes for the above officers, except clerks of the district courts, shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law; that returns shall then be made to the secretary of the Territory, "and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, except as to clerk of the district court."

The ninth article provides for the election of county and township officers.

The tenth declares that the votes for these officers and the clerk of the district court shall be returned and canvassed, and certificates of election to said officers issued as is now provided by law.

Here is an explicit enumeration, first, of the officers, votes for whom are to be canvassed by the same board as the votes on the constitution in which representatives are included, and an explicit enumeration of the officers, votes for whom are to be returned to and canvassed by the county board, and to whom certificates are to be issued by the county clerk, from which the representatives are excluded.

It seems to us that this is an express enactment that the votes for representatives are to be canvassed by the State board and a clear implication that they are to declare and certify the result. It could not have been intended that the returns should be made to the State board by a tribunal who had already ascertained and declared the result, and given an official certificate which should clothe the person found elected with the title to the seat feasible only by the judgment of the house itself, and that the State board should be required thereafter to make a new canvass, the result of which they had no authority to declare or certify, and which could serve no lawful purpose whatever. It is suggested that there is no express direction in the ordinance that the State board shall ascertain or certify the result, but we think this is included in the duty to make the final canvass.

The provisions of the Territorial law, so far as they might otherwise have been applicable, are repealed by the ordinance which makes an entire provision for the whole subject.

It is further suggested that effect may be given to all the language of the ordinance, by supposing that the Territorial board are required to canvass and ascertain the result, but that the county clerk is still to give the certificate of the result. But this officer is the officer of another and inferior tribunal. The State board has no authority over him. He has no custody of their records, and, unless by implication, no right of access to them. His duties are performed at a distance from the place where those records are kept, in some cases, we are told, a distance of more than 400 miles, a distance which the clerk must travel to get at these records without compensation for his service or his expense. He is "immediately" to forward the returns to the State board. The board whose action he has so certified will before that have performed its entire duty and become functus officio.

But further, and more decisive. The State officers mentioned in section 6, except representatives, are officers whose election was not provided for in the Territorial election law at all. Some of them did not exist in the Territory. The others were appointed by the President or governor. Now, if the claim under discussion be sound, there is no provision in the ordinance whatever for declaring the result and giving certificates in the case of these officers. The old law did not apply to them, for they did not then exist. The ordinance does not apply to them unless the final canvass, which is to be made by the State board, involves ascertaining and certifying the result. If it involve this in their case it involves it in the case of the representatives, who are comprehended with them in the same provision. How can it be said that when articles 6 and 8 of the ordinance enact that the returns for members of the legislative assembly "shall be canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as the vote upon the constitution," it means one thing as to one branch of that assembly, the senate, a body then provided for the first time, and another thing as to the house of representatives?

We hold, then, that Mr. Bray and his four associates who went to the Iron Hall with the certificate of the State board that they were duly elected from Silver Bow, had the lawful credentials. By the universal law governing the organization of parliamentary bodies, these persons were clothed with the right to sit in the house, and perform all the functions of membership, until it had passed its own judgment upon their title. And this is conceded to be the general rule. But it is said, that this rule does not apply to the case of a contest between two bodies which is the rightful house, and the quorum in one is made up partly of persons who have lawful credentials, and the quorum in the other is made up partly of persons who have no credentials but were really elected. This raises the question:

Second. Does the rule hold when there are two rival bodies, each claiming to be the true house, one made up of a number less than a quorum, of persons unquestionably elected, with the addition of enough who have proper certificates, but are found by the senate not to have been elected, to make with them a quorum, the other made up of a number less than a quorum of persons unquestionably elected, with the addition of enough who have no certificates, but are found by the senate to have been elected to make with them a quorum?

It will hereafter appear that it is unnecessary to decide this question for the purposes of the present case. We believe, for reasons hereafter stated, that the certificates of the State board declared the true will and choice of the people, as expressed by a majority of the votes actually and lawfully cast. But, as the matter has been discussed, it is proper to say that we are unable to see any distinction in principle between the case of a person claiming title to a seat in an assembly whose character is disputed by some other body, and in an assembly whose character is undisputed. The majority of persons having a right to seats in the house of representatives have a right to organize that house and to transact all its lawful business, including the enactment of laws and the election of Senators. Persons who have the certificates of election have such right to seats. Every act of the assembly in which they take part, and to which their consent is necessary, has as absolute validity as if their title had been affirmed by an adjudication of the house itself. Their title is not, as is sometimes carelessly said, a prima facie title. It is an absolute title, continuing until the house itself has adjudicated that some other person be admitted to their place. This adjudication is only operative for the future, and has no retroactive effect whatever. When the house makes the inquiry on the merits, it may treat the credentials as prima facia evidence upon that question. But until the house tries the case, the credential is conclusive as to all the world.

If this be true, how can an attempted usurpation by another body of the functions of the house, to which they belong, in the least affect their right? If four certified members had come over from the court-house to the Iron Hall, according to this argument, these men, who had no title to their seats before, would at once become entitled to them. If the men who went to the court-house had never gone there or made any claim to the seats, in that case, according to this theory, the five certified members from Silver Bow would have been all right. It seems to us impossible to believe that the right of these gentlemen to sit and vote, the validity of any laws they might have helped to enact, or of the choice of any officer they might help to elect, should depend on the acts of other persons.

This question may be raised at the beginning of any session of Congress. If the certificate of the proper officer of the State give no title, surely the act of the clerk in placing the claimant's name on a roll can give none. It would be competent, if the claim we are dealing with be sound, to organize the House of Representatives of the United States with a quorum partly made up of persons having credentials and partly of persons having none, and thereby put upon the Senate, when called upon to determine whether it will recognize such a body, the necessity of going into evidence of what occurred at the popular elections and of trying the right of the members of the House to their seats. The President must make for himself a like inquiry, and perhaps the courts a third. It might be that these bodies would come to different conclusions upon the voluminous and conflicting evidence in a contested election case, and thus the whole Government would be thrown into confusion. We suppose that there has been more than one occasion in recent years when a majority of the Senate firmly believed that enough of the members of the House who held credentials were not duly elected to change the political majority. If this doctrine be accepted, the party in the minority in the House may at any time associate with themselves persons enough claiming to have been chosen to make a quorum, and disregard the certificates of the executives of the States and the Clerk's roll. The Senate may then take evidence of what occurred at the polls, thereby determine who were lawfully elected, recognize the body so organized, and thereby give the persons it finds so elected the seats to which neither credentials nor judgment of the House have ever given a title.

The report in Sykes v. Spencer, decided by the Senate in 1873, is relied upon as supporting an opinion contrary to that which we have stated. If so, we dissent from it. But it is to be remarked that in that case, which was upon an election held less than seven years after the close of the war, the doctrine of the report is not relied upon in the debate. It is further to be observed that that case is to be distinguished from this by the fact that there it was conceded that the persons who had not certificates were duly elected. The distinction from the general rule is expressly put by Mr. Carpenter, in his report, upon this concession. When the fact there conceded is, as in the present case, disputed, and to be proved, we think there are but two ways in which it can be proved to the Senate. One is the possession of lawful credentials. The other is the judgment of the House itself, not only the final, but the sole judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members.

But we think the credentials of the five Republican members from Silver Bow are fully supported by the facts of the election as they are disclosed to us by the admissions of both sides, and by the undisputed and uncontrolled evidence taken in judicial proceedings in Montana and laid before us by Messrs. Clark and Maginnis.

The whole inquiry turns upon the honesty and fairness of the election at precinct No. 34 in the county of Silver Bow. If the vote of that precinct be rejected, the five Republicans were chosen. If it be counted, the five Democrats were chosen.

This precinct was a camp on the line of a railroad in process of construction, known as the Butte and Gallatin Railroad.

The returns of the precinct officers were required by the fifth article of the ordinance to be canvassed by the canvassing boards in the respective counties not later than fifteen days after the election, and their returns to be made immediately to the State board, who were required to meet and canvass them on or before the thirtieth day after the election.

What purported to be returns from precinct 34 were, on the 11th of October, 1889, forwarded to the county board of Silver Bow, who excluded said returns for the alleged reason that all the votes therein reported as there cast and counted were false, fraudulent, and void. They originally made a table of the votes of the county of Silver Bow, including the precinct 34. During the progress of their canvass objections were made, on the ground of alleged fraud and irregularity, to the reception and counting of the returns of the votes cast at various precincts, including precinct 34. On the following day, after the table had been completed, the board met to hear arguments from opposing counsel upon the exceptions taken during the progress of the canvass. After consideration of the evidence and arguments the board decided by a majority vote, 14th October, to sustain the objections to receiving the vote of precinct 34, and directed the clerk to draw a line through the vote of that precinct upon the abstract sheet, which was done.

At once an alternative writ of mandamus issued from the district court of the second judicial district, directing the county canvassers to count the votes of precinct 34 and issue certificates to the persons who appeared to be elected, or show cause why they should not. November 7 a peremptory mandamus issued from said court, directing them to count said precinct, to which exceptions were saved. The court consisted of a single judge, who put his decision on the ground that the county commissioners had no authority but to tabulate the documents sent them as returns, declare the result, and issue certificates accordingly.

Meantime, the 31st of October, the State canvassing board, having received no certified returns from Silver Bow, sent a messenger to demand of the county clerk a properly certified copy of the abstract of the votes cast at said election as canvassed by the county canvassing board. This the clerk refused to give. But he gave them a statement dated October 31, 1889, signed by him, with the seal of the county, stating the number of votes cast at the different precincts, including No. 34, the decision of the county board to strike out that precinct, and the pendency of the proceedings in court. They took this statement into consideration, declared the result, and issued their certificate, which appears in Appendix A.*

We think that in this respect the State board did their duty as required by law, but we also think that the election held at precinct 34 was in fact irregular, illegal, and fraudulent, and that this appears from the records and from the undisputed facts furnished us by Messrs. Clark and Maginnis.

Some of the irregularities would not alone have warranted the house of representatives of Montana, when exercising its jurisdiction to judge of the election of its members, to set aside the real will of the duly qualified voters. But the whole history shows that the proceeding at precinct 34 had no relation whatever to the real will of duly qualified voters, but was fictitious, pretended, and without validity either in form or substance.

The statute required five judges of the election; there were but three. The statute required the clerks to perform certain important duties, deemed essential to secure the integrity of the election; among these were to keep the poll lists, enter upon them the name and number of each voter as he voted, and compare them when the voting was over and before the ballot box is opened. One of the clerks did not perform these duties at all. Only part of them, if any, were performed by the other. But they were performed in the clerks' stead by one of the judges.

The statute required that, as each voter cast his ballot, his name and number should be entered on the poll books, of which there are two. At the close of the poll these lists are to be compared with each other. If there be a mistake in either it is to be corrected and the books made to agree. When that is done the ballot box is to be opened and the ballots counted. If the number of ballots exceed the number of voters entered on the poll lists, one of the judges is to draw out ballots enough to remove the excess. The names of persons voted for and the number cast for each are then to be ascertained. One of the poll books is then to be forwarded to the county board and the other preserved with the ballots by one of the judges designated for that purpose, to be inspected by any person who desires. This preserves a record not only of the persons voting, but of the order in which they voted, so that any false or fraudulent voter can be identified by the persons who preceded and followed him, and better remembered by election officers and bystanders. Now, from the copy of the poll list furnished us the miraculous circumstance is disclosed that the 174 voters of precinct 34 voted in alphabetical order. The names on the poll list proceed regularly from A to Z, except that the election officers head the list. There are five election officers. No. 6 is John A. Anderson, and No. 174 is Robert Youngberg. The intermediate names, though numbered in regular progression, follow each other alphabetically. This seems to us conclusive evidence that the whole proceeding was manufactured.

* The appendices are to be found in Sen. Rep. No. 538, 1st sess. 51st Cong.

It is suggested that this document, though it shows that the law was not complied with, does not necessarily indicate a fraudulent return; that the election officers may have copied these names in advance from the registration, where they are entered alphabetically; and that this would only show a failure to understand the law. But if this were true the election officers would appear in their places in the list, and would not be found at the beginning. But the decisive answer to this suggestion is, that there were 182 persons on the registration and but 174 votes. If the suggestion were true, the names of those persons registered who did not vote would appear in their places on the list. They do not so appear, and there is not even a space where they should come in. In the registry, of which there is a copy, the Christian name follows the surname. In the poll list the Christian names come first. In some names in the registry the initial only of the Christian name is given, while in the same name in the poll list the Christian name is given in full. In other cases this is exactly reversed. The names are different in some cases where the same name is meant, e. g., Bonison in the registry is Borjesson in the poll list. These instances of variation between the two, either in the Christian name or surname, are quite numerous. So that it seems clear that the poll list is not a transcript or copy of the registration.

We have also the extremely suspicious and unusual circumstance that while there were twenty-five different officers voted for, and also a vote for or against the constitution, every one of the 174 persons voted for every one of the officers and for or against the constitution.

We have the further remarkable and suspicious circumstance that while the proposed constitution was supported by both parties in Montana, the vote against the constitution was the same, within one, as the Republican vote on the officers, where the vote was on party lines.

It is also singular, and to us incredible, that while there were in the county of Silver Bow about 7,000 votes so evenly divided between the two political parties, that in the case of every one of the candidates a change of less than 80 votes would have changed the majority from one side to the other, the voters of this new community at precinct 34, who must have assembled from various parts of the country, whose names as they appear upon the poll list indicate their descent from various nationalities, should have divided, in any fair election, between the two political parties, in the proportion of 171 to 3.

Further, the statute requires the canvass to be public. Section 1027 is as follows:

"As soon as the polls of the election shall be finally closed, the judges shall immediately proceed to canvass the vote given at such election, and the canvass shall be public, and shall continue until completed."

An application was made to the district court for the second judicial district of Montana to test the title to the office of sheriff of the county of Silver Bow, which title depends on precisely the same facts as the election of representatives. The findings of the judge and the evidence before him are submitted to us by Messrs. Clark and Maginnis. It appears that from these findings that the election at 34 was held in a tent; that the officers adjourned for the canvass to a one-room house near by; that "at times" during the canvass the door of this room was locked; "that during a large part of the time no count was being made, some of the judges having gone to supper, and at the other times it was kept closed and locked to prevent drunken and semidrunken and boisterous individuals, who were searching for liquor, from obtrusively entering." There were two windows in this room. One had a shade or cover over it. The lower sash of the other was covered with paper. Persons could readily look into the latter, by looking through the upper sash, which was uncovered. This had been the condition of the windows for a good while before the election.

This was not, in our judgment, a public canvass within the meaning of the law.

There is another matter which, if it were alone to decide the case, would require further examination and, perhaps, the taking of further testimony, but which, as it is left on the finding of the judge of the second district and the evidence which accompanies it, is fatal to the claim of Democratic claimants to the disputed seats for Silver Bow. If the 171 votes from No. 34, Silver Bow, be counted for these claimants, and 3 votes from Silver Bow be counted for their competitors, the former would have majorities, comparing in each case the highest Democrat with the lowest Republican, respectively, of 120, 95, 83, 70, and 11. So that to subtract these numbers from the vote of each would defeat them all. But it seems by the judge's report, and the evidence therewith submitted, that 48 unnaturalized aliens voted at No. 34, Silver Bow, and that 126 such persons voted at precinct 26. At said latter precinct the Democratic candidates for representative received about 135 votes and the Republican received about 32 votes, varying slightly in the cases of different candidates, but not enough to affect the result. Now, supposing all the Republican votes to have been cast by unnaturalized persons, there would be left at least 94 votes of that class which were cast for the Democrats at No. 26, in addition to the 45 cast at

No. 34. This makes 139 such Democratic votes in all, or more than enough to change the result in all the disputed cases.

The ordinance, section 6, provides that these officers shall be elected by "the qualified electors" of the Territory. Now, it appears that these voters declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. But it does not appear that they ever took an oath to support the Constitution and Government of the United States. When it was sought to establish their title to vote before the district court, in the above-named case, the former fact was shown, but there was no offer to show the latter. The contestant offered to show that no such oath was taken before the clerk who received their declaration, but the judge excluded the evidence. In fact, we presume nobody seriously believed such an oath was taken. If the case were to turn on this point we might give a further opportunity to show the fact if either party desired it.

The Revised Statutes of the United States, section 1860, is as follows:

"At all subsequent elections, however, in any Territory hereafter organized by Congress, as well as at all elections in Territories already organized, the qualification of voters and of holding office shall be such as may be prescribed by the legislative assembly of each Territory; subject, nevertheless, to the following restrictions on the power of the legislative assembly, namely:

"First, the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, and by those above that age who have declared on oath before a competent court of record their intentions to become such, and have taken an oath to support the Constitution and Government of the United States."

The enabling act, Statutes 1889, chapter 180, sections 3, 8, 9, provides:

"SEC. 3. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the legislative assemblies thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed States.

"SEC. 8. And the constitutional conventions which may assemble in North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall provide in like manner for submitting the constitutions formed by them to the people of said proposed States, respectively, for ratification or rejection at elections to be held in said proposed States on the said first Tuesday in October.

"At the elections provided for in this section the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, and for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said Territories, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances.

"SEC. 9. And the Representatives to the Fifty-first Congress, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution and the States, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories."

The revised statutes of Montana, passed in 1888, reënacting the provision of the Montana statute of 1883, declares that all male persons of the age of twenty-one years who have declared their intention of becoming citizens, having other prescribed qualifications as to residence, etc., shall be entitled to vote. The constitution of Montana provides that no person but citizens of the United States shall vote, but that no person who has the right at the time of the adoption of the constitution shall be deprived of it.

It seems to us clear that the above-cited law of the United States, which provides that the right of suffrage shall only be enjoyed by aliens who have taken the oath to support the Constitution, was the law of Montana, and governed the election of State officers and the vote for or against the constitution. The opposing view is stated by the judge of the district court as follows:

"Counsel for contestant seems to think that the court was perhaps misled in making its ruling; that the oath provided by the laws of the United States relating to suffrage in the Territories, to be taken by an alien, in addition to his declaration, to make him a qualified elector, did not apply at the election held the first day of October, 1889. The court reiterates the opinion that Congress having delegated to the constitutional convention of Montana the right to provide for said election, and had prescribed the qualifications of voters thereat, that when such convention provided by ordinance for said election and "that the persons who are then qualified electors, under the laws of this Territory, shall be qualified to vote at said election," it referred to the qualifications prescribed by the Territorial legislature, and not to those prescribed by any laws of the United States relating to the Territory."

We can not adopt this view, or suppose that the convention of Montana in its ordinance, when it speaks of the "laws of this Territory," refers to an act which the Territorial legislature had no authority to pass and which never took effect.

The suggestion has been made that, to elect a Senator, there must be in existence a legislature exercising, or at least capable of exercising, the law-making function; and that when this function is interrupted or abdicated, or has never been set in motion because either house refuses to recognize and act in concert with the other, or because the governor refuses to treat either as possessed of legislative authority, there is, in fact, no legislature in the constitutional sense, and, therefore, no body competent to appoint a Senator. In Montana, the governor declined to recognize the Iron Hall house, and the senate, which was evenly divided politically, did not recognize either Iron Hall or Court House.

The suggestion is ingenious, but we do not think it will bear examination. The governor is no part of the law-making power. The legislature may pass laws, if he do not assent to them. He has only the power to require the legislature to reconsider a bill or resolve they have once passed. On such reconsideration a two-thirds vote, instead of a bare majority, is essential to the enactment. (Constitution of Montana, Art. 5, Sec. 29.)

It would be a strange condition of things if the governor of a State, or the President of the United States, could, by a simple refusal of recognition, suspend all legislative functions, so that bills presented to him should not become laws through his inaction, or be passed over his veto. Such a theory, which rests wholly on implication, would, if adopted, neutralize plain provisions of the Constitution.

Neither house of the legislature, when once lawfully constituted, can abandon its own authority. Much less can it take away the authority of the other. Neither House of Congress can even adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other. A like provision is in the constitution of Montana. This theory enables one house, or the executive, to overthrow at once all the constitutional securities for the preservation of the legislative power. It is utterly opposed to the act of Congress prescribing the manner of the election of Senators (Revised Statutes, sections 14 to 19). If no concurrent election be had, "the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly."

This is intended to put it out of the power of a majority of either house to prevent a choice of Senator. This provision we think clearly constitutional. It is in accordance with the legislative usage in the matter of electing officers whose choice may be prevented altogether if two distinct bodies must concur to produce a valid result.

It is said that the strife in Montana between these two rival bodies, and the conduct of some of the elected members in abandoning their seats is to be deplored and disapproved; and that it will be a useful lesson to the people of that State to refuse them representation in the Senate until it be claimed by persons whose election is not attended by such proceedings. We do not conceive that we have the right to deny their seats to persons lawfully chosen for the sake of teaching lessons to anybody, or for the sake of showing our disapprobation of the conduct of anybody. But we also think it would encourage such proceedings in future and hold out the prospect of reward to those who engage in them, if the lawful will of the majority could be defeated by the lawless and revolutionary methods which seem to have been resorted to by the minority.

We report the accompanying resolves:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Martin Maginnis is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Wilbur F. Sanders is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, do not concur in the result arrived at by the majority of the committee in the case of the disputed election of Senators from the State of Montana, as embodied in the resolution reported by them to the Senate, and they respectfully submit the following report:

The admitted or established facts of the case, and pertinent to its correct determination, are believed by the undersigned to be:

(1) That the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, commonly called "an enabling act," prescribing the conditions for the formation and admission of certain States into the Union, and applicable to the people of the Territory and State of Montana, provided, among other things, as follows:

"SEC. 24. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the legislature and Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress; but said State governments shall remain in abeyance until the State shall be admitted into the Union respectively as provided in this act. In case the constitutions of any of said proposed States shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States; and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed States shall certify the election of the Senators and Representatives in the manner required by law; and when such State is admitted into the Union the Senators and Representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the State governments formed in pursuance of said constitution, as provided by the constitutional convention, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territories at the time of their admission into the Union shall be in force in said States, except as modified or changed by this act, or by the constitution of the States respectively."

Section 9 of the same act provides:

"SEC. 9. That until the next general census or until otherwise provided by law, said States shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, except South Dakota, which shall be entitled to two; and the Representatives to the Fifty-first Congress, together with the governors and other State officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution, and the States respectively are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories."

And in section 8 of the same act, among other things, it is provided that:

"At the elections provided for in this section"— that is the elections for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions proposed by the conventions of the several Territories embraced in the act—

"the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of each of the said Territories, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same."

(2) That the constitutional convention of the proposed State of Montana, which was elected and convened pursuant to the provisions of said "enabling act," passed an ordinance as it was authorized to do, called "Ordinance 2," in which it provided for an election to be held throughout the Territory of Montana on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, for the ratification or rejection of the proposed constitution by the qualified electors under the laws of the Territory, and to be conducted by the same judges, and in the same manner and at the same polling places, as was provided by the laws of the Territory regulating elections, the fifth, sixth, and eighth sections of said ordinance being as follows:

"Fifth. The votes cast at said election for the adoption or rejection of said constitution shall be canvassed by the canvassing boards of the respective counties not later than fifteen days after said election, or sooner if the returns from all of the precincts shall have been received and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the Territory of Montana for canvassing the votes at general elections in said Territory, and the returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who with the governor and the chief justice of the Territory, or any two of them, shall constitute a board of canvassers who shall meet at the office of the Secretary of the Territory on or before the thirtieth day after the election, and canvass the votes so cast and declare the result.

"Sixth. That on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, there shall be elected by the qualified electors of Montana a governor, a lieutenant governor, a secretary of state, an attorney-general, a State treasurer, a State auditor, a State superintendent of public instruction, one chief justice and two associate justices of the supreme court, a judge for each of the judicial districts established by this constitution, a clerk of the supreme court, and a clerk of the district court in and for each county of the State, and the members of the legislative assembly provided for in this constitution. The terms of officers so elected shall begin when the State shall be admitted into the Union and shall end on the first Monday in January, 1893, except as otherwise provided.

"Eighth. The votes for the above officers shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law, and returns shall be made to the secretary of the Territory and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution, except as to clerk of the district court."

(3) That the general laws of the Territory of Montana in regard to elections provide as to the qualifications of electors as follows:

"SEC. 1007. All male citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, and all male persons of the same age who shall have declared their intention of becoming citizens, and who, under existing laws of the United States, may ultimately become citizens thereof, shall be deemed electors of this Territory, and be entitled to vote for Delegate to Congress and for Territorial, district, county, precinct, and municipal officers, provided they shall have resided in the Territory six months, and in the county where they may offer to vote, thirty days next preceding the day of election."

The judicial function of the judges of election is prescribed by section 1019 of the same laws, as follows:

"SEC. 1019. The judges to whom any ticket may be delivered shall, upon the receipt thereof, pronounce with an audible voice the name of the elector, and if no objections be made to him and the judges shall be satisfied that the elector is legally entitled to vote, he shall immediately put the ballot in the box, without inspecting the name thereon. The clerk of the election shall enter the name of the elector and number in the poll book."

The general election laws further provide:

"SEC. 1027. As soon as the polls of the election shall be finally closed, the judges shall immediately proceed to canvass the vote given at such election, and the canvass shall be public, and shall continue until completed.

"SEC. 1028. The canvass shall commence by a comparison of the poll lists from the commencement and the correction of any mistakes that may be found therein, until they shall be found to agree; the box shall then be opened and the ballots found therein counted by the judges, unopened, except to ascertain whether each ballot is single; and if two or more shall be found so folded together as to present the appearance of a single ballot, they shall be laid aside until the count of the ballot is completed, and if, on a comparison of the count with the poll lists and the appearance of such ballots, a majority of the judges shall be of the opinion that the ballots thus folded together were voted by one elector, they shall be rejected.

"SEC. 1029. If the ballots in the box should be found to exceed in number the whole number of votes in the poll lists, they shall be placed in the box (after being purged after the manner above stated), and one of the judges shall publicly draw out and destroy therefrom so many ballots unopened as shall be equal to such excess.

"SEC. 1030. The ballots and the poll lists agreeing, or being made to agree, the board shall then proceed to count and ascertain the number of votes cast, and the clerks shall set down in their poll books the names of every person voted for, and at full length, the office for which such person received such votes, and the number he did receive, the number being expressed at full length, such entry to be made, as near as circumstances will admit, in the following form, to wit:

"At an election held at the house of A B, in the township or precinct of ———, in the county of ——— and the Territory of Montana, on the ——— day of ———, A. D. 18—, the following-named persons received the number of votes annexed to their respective names for the following described offices, to wit:

"A B had —— votes for Delegate to Congress.

"J D had —— votes for member of the legislative council.

"R L had —— votes for member of the house of representatives.

"(And in like manner for any other person voted for.)

"Certified by us. Attest:

"A B		M N
"and	Clerks of election.	O P	Judges of election.
"C D		Q R

"SEC. 1031. The judges of election shall then inclose and seal one of the poll books, under cover, directed to the clerk of the board of county commissioners of the county in which such election was held, and the packet thus sealed shall within three days from the closing of the polls, be conveyed by one of the judges or clerks of election, to be determined by lot, to the post-office nearest the house in which said election for such precinct was held, and register and mail the same to the clerk of the board of county commissioners, and the other poll books, together with the ballot box, shall be deposited with one of the judges of election, to be determined by lot, if not otherwise agreed upon, and the said poll book shall be open to the inspection of any elector at any time thereafter who may desire to examine the same.

"SEC. 1032. If any judge or clerk, after being selected by the judges of election to convey the poll books of such election to the post-office nearest the house in which said election was held, and mail the same, as provided for in section 1031 of this chapter, shall fail, refuse, or neglect to convey and mail the said poll books, safe with seal unbroken, he shall for every such offense, when convicted thereof, pay the sum of $500, and be imprisoned in the county jail for a period not exceeding three years, said fine to be recovered in a civil action in the district court in the name of the county commissioners.

"SEC. 1033. After the fifteenth day after the close of any election held under the provisions of this chapter, or sooner, if all the returns shall be received, the chairman of the board of county commissioners, or in his absence any other member of the board, shall, taking to his assistance the probate judge or a justice of the peace, and one other officer of the county, or any county officer, proceed to open the returns and make abstracts of the votes. Such abstracts of votes for Delegate to Congress shall be on one sheet; the abstract of votes for members of the legislative assembly shall be on another sheet; and the abstract of votes for Territorial and district officers shall be on another sheet; and the abstracts of votes for county and township officers shall be on another sheet. And it shall be the duty of the clerk of said board of county commissioners immediately to make up a certificate of election to each of the persons having the highest number of votes for members of the legislative assembly, county, and township officers, respectively, and to deliver such certificate to the persons entitled to them by mailing the same in 'registered' letters to the address of such persons, respectively: Provided, That when a tie vote shall exist between two or more persons for any district or county office, the clerk of the board of county commissioners shall immediately give notice of another election, giving at least ten days' notice. And it shall be the duty of the clerk of the board of county commissioners of such county, on receipt of the returns of any general or special election, to make out his certificate, stating therein the compensation to which the judges and clerks of the election shall be entitled for their services, and lay the same before the county commissioners at their next session, and the board of county commissioners shall order the compensation aforesaid to be paid out of the county treasury.

NOTE.—Last section preceding is from act of February 15, 1877.

"SEC. 1034. The clerk of the board of county commissioners, immediately after making out the abstract of votes given in his county, shall make a copy of each of said abstracts, and transmit the same by mail as a registered package to the auditor of the Territory at the seat of government, and it shall be the duty of the United States marshal and treasurer of the Territory, in the presence of the governor, to proceed within thirty days after the election, and sooner if the returns be received, to canvass the votes given for Delegates to Congress: Provided, That in case the United States marshal and treasurer can not agree as to the number of votes that two or more persons are entitled to for Delegate to Congress, then in that event the governor shall decide who has the highest number of votes, and shall issue a certificate of election to such person, under his hand and the seal of the Territory, countersigned by the secretary. In case there shall be no choice by reason of two or more persons having an equal and highest number of votes, then the governor shall by proclamation order a new election."

The following provision is also important in this connection:

"SEC. 1325. The certificate of election from the clerk of the proper county shall be held and considered as prima facie evidence of the right to membership of the person certified therein to be elected for all purposes of organization of either branch of the legislative assembly."

That these laws were in force in the Territory of Montana, on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, unless repealed or superseded by the act of Congress or by the ordinances of the convention. That there was also a statute of said Territory then in force of March 8, 1889, to provide for registration of voters and prevent fraud, pursuant to the provisions of which the election of October 1, 1889, was held. This act provided, by section 6 of the same, that every voter when he registers, shall make oath before the registering agent specifically to each and every qualification required by law. As an additional safeguard sections 7 and 8 of the act require that when the voter seeking registry is not known to the register to be entitled to vote, in addition to the oath prescribed by section 6, the register shall, by investigation and by personal examination, specifically and separately ask certain questions to be answered by the voter under oath, set forth in these sections, which cover every qualification of a legal voter.

In the case of naturalized persons the facts necessary are required, at the instance of the register, to be proven by a witness in addition to a personal examination of the voter. The registry itself is a thorough challenge and examination of every voter whose name is entered thereon. This registry is publicly posted for seven days or more before the election for further challenge, if any cause for challenge be known to any one.

That in precinct 34 of Silver Bow County, as to which alone inquiry is material, all these requirements were fully complied with, and the registry list of 182 voters was perfected, filed, and placed in the hands of the election officers.

(4) That the election on the ratification of the constitution and for State and county officers and members of assembly was conducted in said precinct 34 on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, as elsewhere in said Territory, under the Territorial act of March 15, 1889, which is a carefully considered and revised form of the Australian ballot system. The ballots were prepared at public expense, by the county clerk, with all the careful circumspection required by law. At the proper time he placed in the hands of the judge of the election authorized to receive them, 800 ballots, being 200 ballots for every 50 registered voters or fraction thereof. One hundred and seventy-four of these ballots were stamped and delivered by the proper officers of the election, 1 to each voter, as the act provided. Twenty-six of the ballots were used by the election board for posting up according to law and supplying such as were destroyed by the wind after they had been posted for public examination. Six hundred were returned after the election to the county clerk. In fact every requirement of the law was carefully and honestly carried out. Every precaution that human ingenuity has been enabled to devise to secure the freedom and purity of the ballot, and to exclude fraud or corruption, is shown by the evidence to have been vigilantly and carefully observed. The count of the ballots began at the proper hour in a tent where the election was held, in which there was no fire. About 11 o'clock p. m., the wind having arisen and the tent becoming very cold, the boxes and ballots were removed into a room in a house on the same lot and almost in contact with the tent in which the counting had been begun, and the count was there finished.

The poll list showed 174 names. The ballots deposited in the box showed 174 votes, and every ballot was regularly and officially stamped. The proper and truthful returns were prepared and executed. They were sealed up by the board, and by one of their number delivered personally, with seal unbroken, to the clerk of the board of county commissioners, there being no mail facilities nearer the place of election than the place of delivery to the clerk. The returns thus prepared and delivered were opened by the county canvassing board. When they were opened the vote cast for the candidates of one of the parties varied between 168 and 172 votes. The votes of the other party varied from 2 to 6.

That the effect of this majority was to produce a change in the result as to several of the county officers and as to the five representatives.

That the change of the five representatives was sufficient to give a legislative majority to the joint assembly which chose Messrs. Clark and Maginnis as United States Senators, and would make the body purporting to be a house of representatives, which assembled in the court-house at Helena, the true and lawful house of representatives of the State of Montana.

(5) That under the statutes of Montana the county clerks of the several counties are made ex officio clerks of the boards of county commissioners of their several counties.

That precinct 34 of Silver Bow County was duly and legally constituted by the board of county commissioners of said county; that all of said commissioners were of the Republican party, and that the registry agents appointed by them for all the election districts of said county, including precinct 34, were also of that party, as were also two out of the three judges of election appointed for every voting precinct in said county, including precinct 34. That in due time after the said election the county clerk of Silver Bow County, as ex officio clerk of the board of county commissioners, received the official returns of the election from all the voting precincts of said county, including said precinct 34, the returns of which precinct were delivered to said clerk by one of the judges of the election in a sealed envelope, together with all the official ballots which were not used at said election.

That afterwards, on the 11th day of October, 1889, the chairman of the board of county commissioners of Silver Bow County, calling to his assistance another county commissioner and a probate judge, and appointing the clerk of the board of county commissioners and another person clerks, proceeded to perform the duties required of them by law, that is, to open the returns from the several voting precincts of said county, all of which had been duly received and laid before them by the clerk of the board of county commissioners, as required by law, and to "make abstracts of the votes." That to open the returns so laid before them, and make abstracts of the votes, was the only duty imposed, and the only authority conferred upon said officers by law, unless the duty of making returns of said abstracts to the secretary of the Territory, prescribed by ordinance 2 of the constitutional convention be taken to belong to them instead of the clerk of the board of county commissioners.

That the canvass of said vote, or the making of the abstracts of the precinct returns, including precinct 34, was concluded about 5 o'clock p. m., Saturday evening, October 12.

That during the progress of said canvass, counsel representing the Republican party appeared before the board and objected on various grounds of alleged irregularity to the counting of the returns of the votes cast at various Democratic precincts, including precinct 34. That counsel for the Democratic candidates also appeared before the board and denied the jurisdiction of the board to change the abstract of the votes made by elimination of any of the precincts. The ballot box of precinct 34 was produced before the board by the proper custodian thereof, and the demand was made by the counsel of the Democratic candidates, under protest as to the right of the board to go behind the returns from said election judges of said precinct, that the same should be opened and the votes inspected and counted. This the board refused to do, and on the evening of October 14, overruling the objections to all the returns from all the other precincts by a majority vote, ordered the returns from precinct 34 and the votes cast thereat to be excluded from the abstract, which had been previously made, and directed a red line to be drawn through the vote of said precinct so entered upon the abstract sheets.

That immediately after the decision thus excluding the returns and refusing to count the votes of said precinct 34, and before the adjournment of the board, and while the clerks were engaged in their work (see certificate and affidavit of C. F. Booth, clerk, etc.), alternative writs of mandamus in the name of the Territory of Montana—one at the relation of John J. McHatton, Democratic candidate for district judge for Silver Bow County, and the other at the relation of some of the Democratic candidates for the house of representatives, issuing from the district court of the Territory for said county having full jurisdiction in the premises—were duly and lawfully served on all the members of said canvassing board, commanding them to proceed and count the votes of said precinct 34, and make them part of the abstract of votes for the said county for all persons voted for at said election, or show cause to the court on the 28th day of October, 1889, at 10 o'clock a. m., why they had not done so.

That on the 21st day of October, 1889, C. F. Booth, the said county clerk, sent a communication to the secretary of the Territory, one of the Territorial board of canvassers, and which the said board admit they had before them at the time they made their finding as to the result of the election in Silver Bow County, in which, after reciting in substance the foregoing facts, he concludes as follows:

"That by reason of said order from the district court the abstract of votes for said county is incomplete, and by reason of the fact that said abstract of votes is not complete I am unable to forward the copy of such abstract as is required by law to the secretary of the Territory, and that I shall be unable to forward such copy until after the 7th day of November, 1889."

That after due proceedings, pleadings, and hearing of parties in the suit at the relation of John J. McHatton, a judgment for a peremptory writ of mandamus was made and entered on the 31st day of October, 1889, as follows:

"This cause coming on for hearing upon the relator's motion for judgment upon the petition, order, and writ, and answer and return of defendants: It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said motion be sustained, and that defendants had no power or authority to exclude said precinct No. 34, and that their action was illegal and void, and that the returns, including said precinct, constitute the true and correct result of said election, and that said relator have his peremptory writ of mandate, as prayed for in his petition, and recover his cost and disbursement in this behalf expended. This 31st day of October, 1889."

That in like manner, in the suit at the relation of Thomas F. Courtney et al., was rendered and entered the following judgment on the 1st day of November, 1889:

"In the district court of the second judicial district of the Territory of Montana in and for the county of Silver Bow.

"The Territory of Montana ex rel. Thomas F. Courtney, A. M. Day, A. M. Dessault, John W. Galligan, and Jos. Hogan v. William M. Jack, W. E. Hall, and Caleb E. Irvine, constituting the board of canvassers of Silver Bow County, for an election held on the first Tuesday of October, 1889; and Charles F. Booth, clerk of the county commissioners for said county.

"JUDGMENT.

"Be it remembered that this cause came on for hearing upon the relators' motion for judgment upon the petition, order, and alternative writ and answer and return of the defendants, when it was "Ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that said motion be sustained, and that defendants, William M. Jack, William E. Hall, and Caleb E. Irvine, the canvassing board aforesaid, had no power or authority to exclude the votes as shown by the returns from said precinct number 34, in said county, and that their action therein was illegal and void, and that the returns, including the said precinct, constitute the true and correct result of said election; and that said relators have their peremptory writ of mandate, as prayed for in their petition.

"And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that it is the duty of the said clerk of the said county commissioners to issue a certificate to relators, as prayed for in said petition and affidavit, and that a peremptory writ of mandate issue to compel him to issue said certificates, and that said relators recover cost and disbursements in this behalf expended. This first day of November, 1889.

"S. DE WOLFE,
"Judge Second Judicial District Court in
"and for Silver Bow County, Montana.

(Endorsed:) "Filed November 1, 1889. Wellington Napton, clerk, by (signed) Will L. Clark, deputy clerk."

That notice of appeal was given by the counsel for respondents in both cases, but said appeals were not perfected, if at all, until the 7th day of November, 1889, by the filing of a bond or undertaking, and on that day peremptory writs of mandate in pursuance of said several judgments were issued and duly served by the proper officer on a majority of the members of said county board of canvass, one of said members, as appears by the return of the sheriff, being absent from the Territory.

(6) That the majority of said board, in obedience to the commands of said writs of peremptory mandamus, did, on the said 7th day of November, 1889, meet and proceed to canvass and count, and did in fact canvass and count, the votes cast at said precinct 34, as shown by the said returns thereof, for all the said relators, and made them a part of the abstract of votes for said county; and the clerk of said board of county commissioners did on the same day, in obedience to one of said writs, issue and deliver to the relators therein their certificates of election to the office of representative in said legislative assembly, and also, in obedience to the other of said writs, issue and deliver to the said John J. McHatton, the relator therein, his certificate of election to the office of district judge.

(7) It also appears by the affidavit of the said Charles F. Booth, county clerk, that after the rendition of the judgment of the court in said mandamus proceedings, adjudging that the rejection by the board of county canvassers of Silver Bow County, of the returns from said precinct 34, was illegal and void, he forwarded to the Territorial board of canvassers at Helena the abstract of the returns from all the voting precincts of said county, including said precinct 34, with a certified copy of said judgment attached thereto.

The following is a copy of said abstract, with the certificate of said Booth as county clerk attached:

"TERRITORY OF MONTANA,
"County of Silver Bow, ss:

"I, Charles F. Booth, county clerk of said county, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct abstract showing the result of the election and votes cast for State senator and members of the legislative assembly of Montana, in Silver Bow County, Mont., on the 1st day of October, 1889.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my hand and affixed the seal of said county on the 31st day of October, 1889.

"[SEAL.]

"CHAS. F. BOOTH,
"County Clerk of Silver Bow County, Montana."

"In addition to the evidence of Booth, we have the admission of the Territorial board of canvassers, in what purports to be their official finding of the result of the election, that this copy of the abstract of the returns from Silver Bow County, so certified to by the county clerk, was before the said board when they made their said finding, and that no other or different abstract of returns from said county was before them; and to said copy of said abstract was attached, according to the affidavit of Booth, as before stated, a copy of the judgment, of the court declaring the duty of the county board to include precinct 34 in the abstract of votes of said county to be absolute, "and that the returns, including said precinct, constitute the true and correct result of said election."

(8) That notwithstanding the premises, the Territorial board of canvass, consisting of the governor, the secretary of state, and the chief justice of said Territory, all being of the same political party—the Republican—made their finding, dated the 4th of November, 1889, which, so far as concerns Silver Bow County, is as follows:

"TERRITORY OF MONTANA,
"County of Lewis and Clarke, ss:

"We, Benjamin F. White, governor, Henry N. Blake, chief justice, and Louis A. Walker, secretary of the Territory of Montana, the duly appointed and authorized canvassing board designated in the act of Congress approved February 22, A. D. 1889, providing for the admission of Montana as a State in the Union, and also under and by authority of ordnance number two, passed and enacted by the constitutional convention of the said Territory, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and correct abstract of the votes cast in said Territory at the election held on the first Tuesday in October, A. D. 1889, as appears by the duly certified returns from the counties named, and as counted and canvassed by us this the 4th day of November, A. D. 1889.

"And we further certify that, having duly convened as such canvassing board on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1889, the same having been the thirtieth day after the close of said election, and having received no duly certified returns from the county of Silver Bow in said Territory, we duly appointed and commissioned Benjamin Webster a special messenger to proceed forthwith to the said Silver Bow County and to demand and receive from the county clerk of said county a properly certified copy of the abstract of the votes cast in said county at said election as canvassed and declared by the proper canvassing board.

"That the said messenger, Benjamin Webster, duly appointed as aforesaid, did proceed to the said Silver Bow County and did demand from the county clerk of said county the duly certified copy of said abstract of votes as aforesaid, and thereafter returned to Helena and made his sworn return that the demand for said abstract was by the said county clerk refused.

"Being, therefore, without any proper copy of the abstract of votes cast in Silver Bow County, and having exhausted the authority given by the statute in endeavoring to obtain the same, it now becomes our duty to ascertain and declare the same from the best sources of information obtainable.

"We have before us the official certificate of Charles F. Booth, county clerk of Silver Bow County, showing that a certain number of votes were cast for the different candidates in that county in the different precincts thereof, naming each of them and the number received by each candidate in each precinct, and including the 34th precinct as having voted at said election. We also have before us an official notice signed by Mr. Booth as county clerk of said county, stating in effect that the board of canvassers in said county met as such on the 14th day of October, 1889, and did then and there canvass and count the vote of Silver Bow County and declare the result thereof, and that they did not count, but did reject as false, fraudulent, and void, all of the votes reported as cast and counted in election precinct No. 34 in said county.

"No other or further action having been had by the canvassing board of said county in relation to the canvass of the vote therein, we conclude that the true result as canvassed and declared must be found by eliminating from the list of votes cast, as certified by County Clerk Booth, the vote of precinct 34, which was rejected by said canvassing board, as stated in the certificate of said county clerk, and which shows the true vote of Silver Bow County to be as follows:

"That the foregoing is, and the same is hereby found and declared to be the result and a true and correct statement of the votes cast at said election held on the first day of October, A. D. 1889, in Silver Bow County, Montana, according to and in strict conformity with the abstract of votes made and certified to by the duly and legally constituted board of canvassers of election returns for said county at said election."

* * * * * * *

That in obedience to the peremptory mandate of the court, and in conformity to the law declared by said court to be in force, the county clerk of said Silver Bow County issued to the relators, the five members of the house of representatives found to be elected by the abstract of votes made by the canvassing board of said county, their certificates of election. Like certificates of election had been, it is said, issued by the clerks of the several counties to those who appeared by the votes of their respective counties to have been elected members of said house.

(9) It is established by sworn testimony that has not been impeached or controverted that the election on the 1st day of October, 1889, at said precinct 34 was from beginning to end conducted in a public, open, peaceable, fair, and impartial manner, without intimidation, fraud, or undue influence exercised toward anyone, and that after the closing of the polls the counting of the votes was done fairly and correctly, and duly certified according to law upon the blank sheets furnished by the proper authority for that purpose; that the tally sheet and returns from said precinct contained a fair and correct report of the votes and ballots cast thereat; that these returns were duly delivered by one of the judges to the county clerk in a sealed envelope, and was by him laid before the county canvassing board; that they were regular and in due form upon their face appears by the copies in the printed record laid before your committee; that the frivolous character of the objections which were made by partisan counsel to the regularity of these returns is apparent when it is seen by the record that the first and principal objection insisted upon was that in signing the returns the names of the judges were not written opposite the word "Attest," printed on the blanks used, and that the names of the clerks were written after and below those of the judges, thus:

"Certified by us this 2d day of October, A. D. 1889.
"Attest:

"W. A. PENNYCOOK,
"JOHN MORRISON,
"WILLIAM O'REGAN,
"Judges of Election.
"THOMAS O'KEEFE,
"A. M. ANDERSON,
"Clerks of Election."

the law directing that the returns should be certified by the clerks and attested by the judges.

Another principal objection urged before said canvassing board to their receiving and counting said returns was that the sealed envelope containing the same was delivered to the county clerk by one of the judges in person, instead of being mailed at the nearest post-office, as directed by law.

The only other objection made to the returns on their face was that the lists of persons voted for and the entry of the number of votes received by each appeared to be in the handwriting of one of the judges, instead of in that of one of the clerks. After these objections to the regularity of the returns and apparently as an afterthought five or six ex parte affidavits were introduced as to certain alleged occurrences at the polls and the counting of the votes, none of which arose to the dignity of supporting even a suspicion of fraud or invalidity as to the conduct of said election at said precinct 34.

Reference is here made to the amazing character of these objections, not because, in the opinion of the undersigned, the Senate, in determining this case, is engaged in a discussion of the grounds of decision of a board or tribunal invested by law with a judicial function in the premises, for no such function, in the opinion of the undersigned, belonged to this county board of canvassers, but in order that the desperate nature of what seems to the undersigned to have been a conspiracy to thwart the expressed will of the people of Montana, by the suppression of votes honestly and lawfully cast, may be displayed to the Senate and the country.

(10) That by the constitution of the State of Montana the senate consists of sixteen members, and the house of representatives of fifty-five. In one representative district there was a tie vote, and no election was had to supply the vacancy, thus reducing the whole number of representatives to fifty-four and the total of the joint assembly to seventy. That in obedience to said constitution the governor of the State of Montana, on the 11th of November, 1889, issued his proclamation convening the legislative assembly to meet at Helena, the seat of government, on November 23, 1889, and by a subsequent proclamation, dated November 22, 1889, he designated the court-house in Helena as the place where the said legislative assembly, "comprising the persons holding and presenting certificates of election from said county clerks, shall meet." That the said court-house had been, under the laws of the Territory of Montana, the place for the meeting of the Territorial legislature. That on the said 23d day of November, the day for the convening of the legislative assembly, the governor, in a letter of instruction to the custodian of the said court house, directed him to admit to the same every person claiming to be a member of said assembly.

Pursuant to the said proclamations on the said 23d day of November, 29 persons claiming to be members of the house of representatives, and all having certificates of election from clerks of counties, met at the said court-house at the time fixed by the constitution, and, being a majority of the number of representatives prescribed by the constitution, proceeded to organize as the house of representatives. The title of 24 of these as members of the house is not disputed: the remaining 5 claimed to be lawfully elected and entitled to sit as members from Silver Bow County.

Thirty other persons, claiming to be members of the said house of representatives, on the finding of the Territorial board of canvass, but with what certificates thereof is not clear, met at a building called Iron Hall, in the said city of Helena, at the time fixed aforesaid, and also organized as the house of representatives. The title of 25 of these as members of the house is not disputed. The remaining 5 claimed to be lawfully entitled to sit as members from Silver Bow County. There is no dispute as to the membership or organization of the senate.

Two of the claimants for admission as Senators to this body, Messrs. Clark and Maginnis, were elected by a joint assembly of one-half of the members of the senate and all of the members of what may be called the "court-house" house of representatives, and their election is certified to the Senate by the governor of the State. But his certificate lacks the attestation of the secretary of state and the seal of the State, as required by the act of Congress. The other two claimants, Messrs. Sanders and Power, were elected by a joint assembly of one-half of the members of the senate and all of the members of what may be called the "Iron Hall" house of representatives. Their said election is certified to the Senate by the secretary of state, with the seal of the State attached. But there is no certificate of the governor, as required by the act of Congress, and the secretary of state is not authorized by said act to certify, but only to attest the certification of the governor.

The question, therefore, for the Senate to determine is which of these two sets of five persons claiming to be entitled to sit as members of the house of representatives were lawfully so entitled.

The undersigned believe that an unbiased consideration of the facts above stated will fully justify their dissent from the majority of the committee and should prevent the Senate from adopting the resolution reported.

The power conferred by the Constitution on the Senate to "judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members" is exclusive and judicial, and in its exercise the Senate acts judicially.

The immediate constituency of a United States Senator is the legislature of the State which he represents. His credentials must purport to be a certificate that he was chosen by the legislature.

The act of Congress prescribes that this certification shall be made by the governor of the State, under the seal of the State, and shall be countersigned by the secretary of state. Such a certificate is received by the Senate as prima facie evidence of the due performance by the legislature of its constitutional function to choose a Senator and of the title of the person named therein to a seat in this body.

In the absence of such certification the Senate, in pursuing further its judicial inquisition, must inquire for itself whether the claimant has been duly chosen by the legislature of the State. In so doing it must seek to satisfy itself, first, that the body assuming to choose a Senator is in fact the legislature of the State, and, second, that it has actually and lawfully chosen a Senator. In deciding the first branch of this inquiry in this case the Senate will be relieved of all difficulty in deciding the second.

A legislature must be taken to mean, for the purposes of such an inquiry and in the sense of the Constitution, "the law-making power of the State." The body capable of making laws for the State is the legislature, both in its literal and technical sense, as was decided by the Senate in the case of Potter vs. Robbins, Taft's Election Cases, page 83.

When the Senate finds such a body duly organized in both branches, capable of enacting laws and recognized as such in the State and by the other departments, further inquiry is useless and inappropriate. The body authorized to choose a Senator is found. The Senate can not in such a case make inquisition as to the title of the sitting members of such a body in order to invalidate its legal character or impinge in the slightest degree on the exclusive right of each branch to judge of the elections and qualifications of its own members.

It is not believed that there is any difference of opinion in the committee upon this proposition, or as to the doctrine announced by the majority of the committee in the Rhode Island case just alluded to and reaffirmed by the undersigned, that "when the sovereign will of the State is made known through its legislature, and consummated by its proper official functionaries in due form, it would be a dangerous exertion of power to look behind the commission for defects in component parts of the legislature or into the peculiar organization of the body for reasons to justify the Senate in declaring its acts absolutely null and void," and "that contested elections in the popular branch of Congress, where the people exert in their primary capacity the right of suffrage under various limitations and restrictions in the choice of Representatives from certain prescribed districts, open a much wider field of inquiry and investigation than a like contest for a seat in the Senate, which is a body wholly federative in its character and organization, and whose members hold their appointments from and represent the States as political sovereignties."

But the difficulty comes in cases like the present, where there are two bodies claiming to be the legislature of the State, or, to come more closely to the facts of the present case, when there is a single and legally organized State senate and a dual organization of the house of representatives, neither of the houses so organized having a quorum of members without counting those whose title is contested and right to sit denied by a like number in the other house, claiming to lawfully represent the same constituency.

If either house had a quorum outside of such disputed membership, then the Senate would be concluded from any attempt at further inquisition. Such an attempt on its part would be an interference with the highest judicial function in the premises, the exclusive jurisdiction of each branch of a legislature to judge of the election, etc., of its own members.

But as confessedly neither house has such a quorum, then, unless the Senate shall decide that none of the claimants before it come accredited by a body competent to act as a legislature, or so recognized as such by the other departments of the State government as to make it de facto the legislature of the State in the sense of the Constitution of the United States, from necessity the Senate must pursue its inquiry as to which is the true and lawful house, outside the doors of either.

In conformity to the doctrines already stated in this report, and to the safest precedents and best traditions applicable to the premises, the undersigned believe that the Senate in prosecuting its inquiry, after leaving the doors of both alleged houses, must, under the facts and circumstances appearing in this case, seek the first for an officer or body on whom the law devolved the duty of ascertaining the result of the election and of certifying the result, and then ask what action has been had by such within his or its legal duty and powers, and especially inquire for any judicial decision on the question of disputed powers and duties, made prior to the time fixed for the convening of the legislature, because the facts and circumstances of the case as they stand admitted in the record bring us to this position: That, conceding the proposition of the majority of the committee, that the Territorial board of canvass was the paramount authority to canvass the returns of the county board as to the votes cast for representatives, and that we must first look to see what credentials members of the legislative assembly, or those claiming to be such, have from this canvassing board, yet it seems uncontrovertibly true that the Senate must inquire and judicially determine, first, what are the legitimate powers of the said board under the act of Congress and the ordinances made pursuant thereto, and the principles of law applicable in the premises; and, second, what this board has assumed to do (comparing its acts with its lawful authority); and, third, what binding effect its proceedings as set out in the record should properly have upon the Senate in determining the question before it.

Proceeding to this inquiry, we find that this Territorial board of canvass was constituted, by the eighth section of the enabling act and by the fifth section of ordinance 2 of the convention, to "canvass the votes so cast (for or against the constitution), and declare the result;" that while the said enabling act, in its twenty-fourth section, provides "that the constitutional conventions may by ordinance provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the legislature and Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress," it is silent as to the manner in which said election shall be had, thereby authorizing the said conventions to prescribe the details as to manner and methods of conducting the same.

Accordingly, the said ordnance 2 of the convention, in its sixth section, provides that such an election for State officers, including members of the legislative assembly, should be held on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, and then in section 8 as follows:

"Eighth. The votes for the above officers shall be returned and canvassed as is provided by law [that is, law of the Territory], and returns shall be made to the secretary of the Territory and canvassed in the same manner and by the same board as is the vote upon the constitution."

It will be observed that while the said board are to canvass the votes cast for or against the constitution, and to declare the result, it is expressly directed, in the matter of the election of representatives, to canvass only the returns from the so-called county canvassing boards, and the express authority "to declare the result" is omitted.

Whatever view is taken of the extent of the implied authority asserted for said board to make some finding or statement of their transaction in the premises, the fact that express authority "to declare the result" was given in the one case and withheld in the other can not be without significance in considering the powers of said board in regard to the canvass of the returns from the county boards, of the abstracts made by them of the votes cast in their respective counties for representatives.

It is perfectly clear, in the opinion of the undersigned, that both the so-called county boards of canvass, under the general laws of the Territory, and the Territorial board of canvass, under the provisions of the ordinance prescribing its duties in regard to the election of representatives to the legislative assembly, had none but ministerial duties to perform, and was invested with no judicial functions whatever.

A judicial authority of so high and important a nature as to stand between the electors and the result of their ballots, ought never to be taken as conferred otherwise than by express enactment of law, and in the opinion of the undersigned it never has been. By the general laws of Montana the county boards of canvass (of whose powers and duties more hereafter) were only authorized to make abstracts of the votes cast in the several voting precincts, and the returns which alone the Territorial board is authorized to canvass, are these abstracts. So that it would seem too plain for argument that the only duty of the said board in the premises was to aggregate and tabulate as a matter of arithmetic these abstracts, where, as in the case of the office of representative of Silver Bow County, the vote of the county elects the officers, the only duty would plainly be to verify the arithmetical processes and thereby confirm the return.

When, however, the officer is voted for throughout the State, a large duty is devolved upon them, to aggregate the returns from the several counties that it may appear who of those voted for for the same office, has the larger number of votes. There is surely no authority here, allowing even the greatest latitude to the doctrine of implication, to canvass anything but returns from the county boards, or, more monstrous still, to omit to canvass some returns, or to canvass where there are no returns, or to canvass part of a return.

If authority were necessary for a conclusion so obvious, and so conformable to the practical common sense of a self-governing people, our judicial reports are full of decisions, commencing far back in our history and coming down to recent times, making an unbroken current of authority for the proposition, as stated by Judge McCrary in his work on elections, at section 226. He says:

"It is well settled that the duties of canvassing officers are purely ministerial, and extend only to the casting up of the votes and awarding the certificate to the person having the highest number; they have no judicial power."

At section 229 of the same book, he says:

"The doctrine that canvassing boards and return judges are ministerial officers possessing no discretionary or judicial power, is settled in nearly or quite all the States."

A long list of cases is cited in support of this, which need only thus be referred to.

In Attorney-General vs. Barstow (4 Wis. 749) the supreme court of the State says:

"The canvassing officers are to add up and certify by calculation the number of votes given for any office; they have no discretion to hear and take proof as to frauds, even if morally certain that monstrous frauds have been perpetrated."

In State ex rel vs. Steers (44 Mo. 223), the court says:

"To allow a ministerial officer arbitrarily to reject returns at his mere caprice or pleasure is to infringe or destroy the rights of parties without notice or opportunity to be heard, a thing which the law abhors and prohibits. * * * The exercise of such a power is subversive of the rights of the citizen and dangerous and fatal to the elective franchise. But it is enough to say that the claim is utterly unauthorized. * * * When a ministerial officer leaves his proper sphere and attempts to exercise judicial functions, he is exceeding the limits of the law and guilty of usurpation."

The court goes on to say that it has examined, with a good deal of research, the authorities, and has "never been able to find a single one that held otherwise than that the canvasser acted ministerially; but they are unanimous and decisive in declaring him to be a ministerial officer and nothing else."

It is submitted that there can be no serious difference of opinion as to the correctness of the foregoing view of the legitimate powers of this Territorial board of canvass. Comparing these powers with what this board assumed to do, it will appear by their own showing that they have, in relation to the election of these five members from Silver Bow County, grossly transcended their lawful authority and wilfully neglected the duties imposed upon them by law—sins of commission and of omission.

The only evidence that the Senate has before it of what this board did do, or did not do, is in what purports to be an official deliverance made on the 4th day of November, 1889. And for the purposes of this case that is the best evidence.

We have recited above all of that deliverance that is material to this inquiry. The Senate can not close its eyes or ears to what is there found. It is acting judicially, by virtue of power which is conferred upon it by the Constitution, which power is judicial in its nature. As has been seen, a decision as to the election and return of these five members from Silver Bow County, by the highest judicial tribunal having jurisdiction, to wit, the house of representatives of Montana, is wanting, and in the nature of things can not be had. The Senate has been compelled to leave the doors of both contesting bodies to institute its judicial inquiry, and seek for the highest and best legal evidence of the title of these five members sitting in the "Iron Hall House," whom, the majority of the committee say, the Senate must find to be lawfully and duly elected by virtue of this said finding or deliverance of the Territorial board of canvassers.

To this the majority refer us as the first evidence to which we must turn, and as the best, and upon us conclusive, evidence. Admitting that this board was lawfully created, and that it can, within the scope of its lawful powers, announce the result of the election of representatives in Silver Bow County, and that we would be bound thereby, it is nevertheless true that not every pretended act of this board, no matter how unlawful or usurpatory in its character, is so binding. What is the act which has thus assumed the character of evidence conclusive (as claimed) upon the Senate? Not a simple certificate of result, such as was made in the famous and infamous Louisiana case in 1876; but a judicial finding, purporting at great length to set out the reasons which supported its decision to eliminate the votes of a whole precinct of Silver Bow County, which they admitted they had before them But we have seen how purely ministerial their duty in the premises was. How can the Senate recognize such an act of such a body? But again, in their judicial finding they tell us, with amazing inconsistency, that when they were assuming to canvass the returns from the different counties they had no proper returns from Silver Bow County before them, and yet they attempt to declare the result from that county. In one part of their finding they profess to have a return from said county from which they tell us they decided to "eliminate" the votes of a whole precinct, and in another they declare that there is no return from said county before them. By what principle of law or common sense is the Senate bound by such a finding or by such an act? Is it not the clearest duty of the Senate in the exercise of a judicial power to reject altogether such evidence?

The Territorial board of canvass has stated itself out of court. If it had been a body armed with judicial powers conferred by the ordinance, still it would have been necessary that the Senate should satisfy itself of the existence, at least the presumed existence, of the facts necessary to its jurisdiction. But no presumption, even, of jurisdiction can prevail against the statements of the record, which not only rebut that presumption, but disclose the baldest and most flagrant usurpation of a jurisdiction not conferred by ordinance or statute.

A suit on a judgment of a Federal or State court for the most insignificant amount would be thrown out of any court in which it was brought if the record itself disclosed a want of jurisdiction of either the subject-matter or the parties. And this is true even if the judgment be of a court of general jurisdiction. But in the case of a judgment of a court of statutory and limited jurisdiction it must affirmatively appear in the record, in the language of Judge Cooley, "that the case was one which the law permitted the court to take cognizance of, and that the parties were subject to its jurisdiction."

No presumption in such a case exists in favor of jurisdiction. These are the elementary and well-understood principles applicable to judicial tribunals. But these Territorial canvassers, as we have seen and as must be admitted, are not a tribunal at all and are clothed with no judicial functions whatever; their duties are ministerial. A fortiori, then, must their said action in the matter of the election of representatives from Silver Bow County, to which we are referred as being the credentials of the five members sitting in the "Iron Hall" house, appear to have been taken under authority of law, to have been within the scope of their lawful authority, and not outside of it.

It is what the board may lawfully do, which, when done, may be evidence of title to sit as a member from Silver Bow County, and be called by the somewhat ambiguous name of a credential to such member. No mere usurpatory and unauthorized action can be so dignified. It is this finding of November 4, the character of which we have now sufficiently displayed, that is relied upon by the majority of the committee as the evidence of the right of the five "Iron Hall" representatives to sit as members from Silver Bow County. This is what is called their credentials. No other paper or document can be referred to as such.

It is submitted that this finding, showing on its face that it was one not within the scope of the authority of said board to make, so far as the election of representatives from Silver Bow County is concerned, is not a credential at all in any proper sense of that term, and must be disregarded by the Senate in its judicial inquiry as utterly void and of no effect. While to do otherwise would violate those rules of procedure which should govern the Senate as a judicial tribunal, it will appear further on that it would most seriously infringe the right of the people of Montana to free elections, and that technical law and the broadest principles of public morality and popular rights demand the same result. Far as the inherited tendencies and traditions of our race may compel us to go in paying the homage of our respect and obedience to the orderly and lawful though technical forms through which the principles of self-government have achieved their greatest triumphs, they will never compel us to stand uncovered in the presence of usurpation and fraud though masked in the forms of law.

If the Senate fail, as we think they must fail, to be judicially satisfied that the deliverance of the Territorial board of canvass of November 4, 1889, is sufficient as evidence of the title of the five Silver Bow members in the "Iron Hall" house of representatives, they must turn elsewhere and seek for such evidence under the limitations hereinbefore stated. This will bring us to the abstract of votes made by the county board of canvass of Silver Bow County, under the law as interpreted by the Territorial court, and in obedience to the lawful mandate of said court.

It is not necessary now to discuss the authority, under the law, of the county clerk to certify the result of the final canvass for representatives in the legislative assembly, or whether section 1325 of the general laws of Montana, quoted above, give the force of prima facie evidence to his certificate, was or was not repealed by the ordinances of the convention. For in the absence of any lawful act in the premises, by the board of final canvass, and in view of the fact certified to by them, that among the returns before them from the various county boards of canvass (which and which alone it was their duty to canvass) there were none from Silver Bow County, the Senate, unless it shall deem its duty to be to decline further inquiry, and to declare that there is no evidence of the existence of a legislative body competent to choose a United States Senator, must and properly should, ask for the abstracts of votes made by the board of canvass of Silver Bow County, the return of which was not before the Territorial board of canvass at the time they made their canvass of the returns from the other counties, or if before them was not lawfully canvassed.

If we can find these abstracts of the votes of the various voting precincts of Silver Bow County lawfully canvassed and certified by the officials of that county entrusted by law with that duty, we will have the very thing which the Territorial board was directed by the ordinance to receive as showing the state of the vote, and to canvass and certify, and under the circumstances of this case the same will, in the opinion of the undersigned, be binding on the Senate.

This makes it necessary to look at what was done by the said county board after the election on the first Tuesday of October.

It has already been recited briefly in the foregoing pages. Suffice it to recall now that the law constituting this board prescribed its duty to be, after the fifteenth day from the close of the election, or sooner if all the returns shall be received, to open said returns and make abstracts of the votes. (See section 1033 of general laws of Montana above recited.) That after it had met on October 12 and had according to law opened the returns from all the voting precincts of said county and made abstracts of the votes, a majority of the board on October 14 determined to eliminate the vote of one of said precincts, viz, precinct 34, thereby changing the majority shown in favor of the five representatives, who afterwards sat in the court-house legislature, to one in favor of the five who afterwards sat in the Iron Hall legislature.

Soon thereafter, before they had adjourned or completed their work on said abstracts, alernative writs of mandamus were served upon all the canvassers, commanding them to include the returns from said precinct in the abstracts of votes of said county, or show cause to the contrary on the 28th of the said month of October. That on the 31st of October judgment awarding a peremptory writ of mandate was rendered by the court, in one of said suits, and on the 1st day of November a like judgment was rendered in the other, commanding the said board of canvass to count and include said precinct 34 in the abstracts of votes of said county, and the clerk of the board of county commissioners to deliver a certificate of election to each of the relators, the five Democratic candidates for representative. The said judgment of the court, and the opinion accompanying the same, and the said writ of peremptory mandamus issued in obedience to the same, are appended to this report as an appendix.

These judgments were delivered, and these peremptory writs of mandate were ordered to issue, while the Territorial board of canvass was in session before its alleged finding in regard to the vote of Silver Bow County. No reasonable man doubts that, as a matter of fact, the members of said board was cognizant of this judicial determination; and there is no declaration on their part, or other evidence, that they were not. The indecent haste with which they sought to anticipate, by their action, the reception of a lawful return of the abstract of votes of said Silver Bow County, made in obedience to competent judicial authority, is one fact, among many, that combine to establish the existence of a purpose, born of reckless partisanship, to disregard the votes of the people, in order to obtain results favorable to a political party and its ambitious leaders.

Ordinary respect for the laws of the society of which they were members should have constrained these canvassers to have postponed their adjournment till the abstracts which the court had ordered could be made, and which three days thereafter actually were made. But this palpable evasion of legal official duty can not alter the fact that in conformity to law as interpreted by a court of competent jurisdiction over this very case, and in obedience to a lawful mandate of said court, the county canvassers made abstracts of the votes from all the precincts of said Silver Bow County, including precinct 34, which were duly certified to the secretary of the said Territory. This return shows that the five persons sitting in the court-house house of representatives as members from Silver Bow County, were elected as such, and is, in the opinion of the undersigned, binding on the Senate, as, under the circumstances, the best evidence of title to sit as representatives from said county.

It was a board authorized and directed by law to canvass the returns of votes cast in said county. That it acted according to law is evidenced by the fact that what it did was in obedience and strict conformity to the mandate of the judicial department of the Government, lawfully issued in accordance with its interpretation of the law. What higher sanction can the Senate ask for official action? This is not the finding of an officer or board acting outside of the scope of his or its lawful authority, but the lawful act and law-directed performance of a duty to canvass, declared so to be by a competent judicial tribunal.

The undersigned believe that the Senate is bound by the act so performed, and by the judicial opinion indorsing it.

But it is said by the majority of the committee, to break the admitted force of this conclusion, that the execution of the judgment of the court referred to was superseded by an appeal. A sufficient answer would be, that the judgment was executed by the service of the peremptory mandate upon the county canvassers and that said mandate was obeyed by them. Another and independent answer is, that the alleged appeal was not perfected by filing the appeal bond or undertaking within the five days of the notice of appeal required by the statute of Montana, and was therefore under the express provision of said statute "unavailing for any purpose."

The undersigned therefore submit that, under the limitations, which they recognize as properly applicable to this judicial inquiry of the Senate, it is found and should be judicially determined by the Senate, that the five persons claiming to sit in the court-house assembly as representatives from Silver Bow County, are accredited by the act of the only officer or board that has lawfully canvassed the vote of said county. That this being so, it should be further found and determined by the Senate, that the joint assembly of the members of the senate and the members of the said court-house house of representatives, which chose Messrs. Clark and Maginnis as Senators of the United States from the State of Montana, contained a majority of all the members elected to both houses, present and voting, and was competent to choose such Senator, and that the Messrs. Clark and Maginnis are entitled to be admitted to seats in the Senate as Senators as aforesaid.

It should be remembered that the governor of the State of Montana, constituting one of the three great departments of the government, has never recognized the body assembling in Iron Hall as the house of representatives of Montana, but that he has so recognized the body which assembled in the court-house.

It is well to notice here an objection urged by the majority to the conclusions we have based on the purely ministerial character of the duties imposed upon the Territorial board. It is this: That admitting that those duties are ministerial and not judicial, yet they say the board is required to judge whether what purport to be returns are properly returned or no.

Without pausing to comment, except thus briefly, on the exceeding refinement of the distinction, and how convenient a door it opens for the escape of tricky and unscrupulous officials from the obligations of their duties, we answer that in this case the canvassing board in their finding declare that though they have "judged," that no proper return was before them they afterwards in the same finding, "judge" that there is, and proceed to eliminate part of it. So that the proposition, even if true to the extent claimed, has no application or relevancy to the facts of this case.

But the unqualified proposition that such a board may judge and determine as pleases them, whether any paper purporting to be a return is such, is not true. The rule in this regard is, that what is contained on the face of the return must decide this question. McCreary, in his work on elections, already cited, says:

"The true rule is this: They must receive and count the votes as shown by the returns, and they can not go behind the returns for any purpose, and this necessarily implies that if a paper is presented as a return, and there is a question as to whether it is a return or not, they must decide that question from what appears upon the face of the paper itself."

There is an additional reason for the conclusion that the Senate must recognize the title to sit of the five members from Silver Bow County in the court-house legislature. It is quite independent of those already urged by the undersigned in this report. It is found in the fact that these five members have certificates of election, signed and issued by the county clerk of Silver Bow County, in conformity to the requirement of the statutes of Montana in that behalf, which it is submitted were in force at the time fixed for the convening of the legislature, and that such certificates are made by section 1325 of said statutes "prima facie evidence of the right to membership of the person certified therein to be elected, for all purposes of organization of either branch of the legislative assembly."

Section 9 of the enabling act provides that Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices until State officers are elected and qualified and the State is admitted into the Union. And section 24 of said act provides that all Territorial laws shall remain in force, except as modified or changed by said act, or by the constitution of the State. It is not claimed the law requiring the county clerk to certify the election of representatives and making such certificate of election prima facie evidence, etc., was repealed by any provision of the act of Congress, but it is claimed that the provision of the ordinance constituting the Territorial board of canvass worked a repeal by superseding the requirement of such a certificate from the county clerk. The argument of the majority of the committee in favor of such a repeal is founded partly upon a mistake as to fact, and is otherwise an argument ab inconvenienti. The former, of course, fails when the mistake is shown, and the latter can not avail against the express provision of the law.

There is no necessary inconsistency between the requirements that one set of officials should canvass and another official should declare the result. The fact that such requirements are often made in State laws would seem to settle the matter of their propriety and convenience. Indeed, a most conspicuous example of this is the provision of the act of Congress with which we are concerned in this case, that directs that the governor of the State shall make the certificate of the election by the legislature of a United States Senator. Under the Territorial laws of Montana the power to issue a certificate of election to a Delegate in Congress was given to the governor after the canvass was made by the Territorial board. So in this case there is no inconsistency between the power of the said board to canvass the returns of elections for State representatives and the direction to the county clerk of the county from which they were elected to issue to them certificates of such election.

The majority of the committee are mistaken when they say as a foundation for their argument that the county clerks can not be supposed to have official information of the result of the final canvass of the Territorial board, because they had no official relation to said board, while they did have such a relation to the county boards of canvass, whose action they were required to certificate. On the contrary, the law of the Territory, prior to the creation of this Territorial board of canvass, is an example of the provision for one set of officials to canvass and for another official to certify the result, because the county clerk is not the clerk of the county board of canvass and has no ex officio relation to it.

If the county board of canvass appoint him a clerk of their board it is done precisely as they might appoint any other person, or as the Territorial board of canvass might appoint him. As the county clerk has a convenient opportunity to know the result of the election in his own county of representatives to the legislative assembly, there can be no great inconvenience in his acquiring the information as to the verifying and confirming of that result by the Territorial board; but whether it be convenient or inconvenient, can not determine the question of the implied repeal of express law by a subsequent enactment.

Finding, therefore, that the five members from Silver Bow County in the court-house house of representatives had certificates of election from the county clerk of Silver Bow County is, in this view of the law, sufficient to justify the Senate in recognizing their de facto title to sit as such, and thus bind us to the same conclusion as was arrived at above on independent grounds, viz, that Messrs. Clark and Maginnis were chosen United States Senators by a legally constituted joint legislative assembly of the State of Montana, and that Messrs. Sanders and Power were not so chosen.

In this connection it is interesting to observe that this question as to the validity and effect of these certificates of the county clerk arose before the convening of the legislative assembly. The opinion of the attorney-general of the State was asked upon the question, and after an examination of the law he decided, and announced his opinion in writing, that the clerk of the board of county commissioners was to issue the certificates. The question also came before Judge Blake, the present chief justice of the State of Montana (and who declined to sit in the case of Thompson vs. Kenney, auditor, etc.), in a case where a mandamus was prayed for, by a member of the legislature who claimed to be elected, on the county clerk of Jefferson County to issue the certificate to him. Judge Blake issued an alternative writ, and in obedience thereto the clerk issued the certificate as prayed.

Then the secretary of the Territory (a Republican) was asked the same question, and he responded unequivocally that the certificates of election must be issued to members of the legislature by the clerks of the boards of county commissioners of the several counties. Then the governor examined the question and reached the same conclusion, and so it was understood all over the Territory. The statements were made by the counsel for Messrs. Clark and Maginnis before the committee, and it is not known by the undersigned that they have ever been denied.

All, then, were of one mind, Republicans and Democrats alike, that notwithstanding these ordinances of the constitutional convention there was no inconsistency, and the officer who, by positive statute, was required to issue the certificates, would still issue them. This remarkable concensus of opinion would undoubtedly have governed the organization of the legislative assembly but for the fierce heat of the political ambitions which dissolved it. But it should be none the less impressive to the judicial mind of the Senate.

Basing its judicial finding on these two several grounds, either of which is sufficient therefor, the Senate will have kept within the lines of safe precedent, and has not lost sight of its own federative character and organization and of the fact that its members represent the States in their organized capacities as sovereignties under the Constitution.

The existence of this appropriate legal evidence of the election of these said five members, to which we have above referred, has not rendered it necessary that we should resort, as we might and must have resorted in its absence, to the finding of the only body clothed with judicial power, which by law stood between the electors of Silver Bow County and the announcement of the result of the election; that is, the judges of the election for precinct 34 of said county.

They were required by law to pass upon the qualifications of each elector as he presented his ballot. Behind their finding of the lawful right of each ballot to be in the box, to be counted, the Senate, in the opinion of the undersigned, is not permitted to go. In exercising its judicial function it is bound by that finding.

But, inasmuch as the aspersion of the integrity of the vote and the fairness of the poll at said precinct, made by interested parties before the committee, seems to have made some impression upon the majority thereof, the undersigned think it right in closing this report to say a word in regard thereto. That this aspersion is unfounded and unjust will abundantly appear by the affidavits of the judges who held the election, a majority of whom were opposed in politics to the majority of the voters. Copies of these affidavits are attached to this report as an appendix. Their substance has been hereinbefore recited, and need not be again quoted.

It is sufficient to say, referring to the sworn testimony in the record, that there is no proof that the election was not fairly conducted and the count honestly and publicly made according to the requirements of law. It seems like trifling with the Senate to dwell upon the ex parte affidavit of the Democratic judge, O'Reagan, as showing that the public were excluded from the room in which the count was made and that newspapers were pasted over the lower sash of the window of said room, the fact being apparent that the affidavit was carefully and artfully framed for an illiterate man by the plotters for the suppression of the vote of said precinct.

On this point it will, we think, appear to be clearly established by the affidavits of other and less interested parties that the public were not excluded from the room during the count. That the door was locked only while the judges had adjourned the count that they might eat supper, or while it was necessary to exclude a drunken and disorderly person who was interfering with the conduct of the count. That the paper over the lower sash of the window was not put there by the said judges or officers of the election, but had been pasted there months before by the occupant of the store to which said room belonged. Trivial and technical as these objections to the regularity of the election and the returns appear, and far as they are from touching the honesty and fairness of the same, or from going to the point that the result was in any way affected by the matters objected to, they also for the most part fail to be supported by the facts or the law.

Some of these objections have already been alluded to and need not again be mentioned. Another on which much stress is laid by the majority of the committee, is that the poll list, which they allege was required to be kept of the voters as their votes were cast, and which was returned by the judges to the county board of canvass, appears to be in alphabetical order. The explanation is this, that the registry law of Montana passed, March 8, 1889, under which, for the first time, an election was held on the said first Tuesday of October, 1889, provided in its tenth section as follows:

"The registry agent shall prepare and complete, not later than two days next preceding that on which the election is to be held, in 'index books,' one for each election precinct, and which shall be known as the 'check lists,' lists of the names of all electors found on the official register, for such election precincts, alphabetically arranged (the surname first), with the number such name bears in the official register placed at the left of the name of the elector, and with a blank column at the right of the column of names, formed by two parallel perpendicular lines, in which the judges of election shall check the names of those voting by some particular character, thus: 'V' for voted; said blank columns last mentioned shall have written headings made by the registry agents, showing what particular election the said 'check lists' apply to, as, for instance, 'Voted at the general election, 1888.' The copy of the official register, together with the 'check lists' for election precinct, as herein provided, shall be carefully preserved and duly certified to by the registry agent, and delivered, togther with affidavits of objection, to some one of the judges of election in each election precinct, at a time not later than the day next preceding that on which such election is to be held, and such 'check lists' shall be carefully preserved, and any surrendered certificates which may have come into the hands of such registry agents pursuant to this act, and after election they shall be transmitted by the judges of election to the clerk of the board of county commissioners, in connection with and as a part of the 'election returns,' as provided by law."

A "check list," as provided by this section, was duly furnished to the judges of said election precinct 34, and the names of those who voted were "checked" or marked with a letter V, as their ballots were deposited. (A specimen page of their check list is attached to this report as an appendix.)

From this list, so marked, a copy was made of the names of those who were checked as voted and returned by the clerks and judges, as the poll list of the precinct, to the county canvassing board. This list was naturally in alphabetical order, but no suspicion can properly arise from that fact so explained. Even if it were not the exact poll list required by the old law prior to the recent registry law, it could not have affected in any way the integrity of the election or the count. Except that it did not give the order of voting, it gave as accurate and reliable information as to who, and how many voted, as a list of names written down as the votes were cast could possibly do.

The undersigned have before them duly certified copies of the check list furnished under the hand of the registry agent to the said judges of election of precinct 34, upon which the said marking or checking was done, and of the said poll list made as aforesaid and returned by said judges with their returns to the county clerk. The undersigned regret that the first of these papers, asked for by them, arrived too late to be included in the statement of facts made by order of the committee. They have also before them a certified copy of the poll book, or list, of precinct 17 of said Silver Bow County, returned by the judges of said election of October 1, 1889, to the county clerk of said county, on which appear 199 names of voters, and all in alphabetical order. So that it would seem that it was not an entirely unique impression that was made on the minds of the election officers of precinct 34, that the requirement of the registry law of 1889 as to a check list superseded and repealed the old provision as to a separate poll list, as each performed the same function. The certified poll list of said precinct 17 will be attached hereto as an appendix.

The fact that the "poll list" of this precinct 17 was in alphabetical order does not seem to have excited any suspicion on the part of these schemers in Montana to throw out the vote of precinct 34, and who were so hypercritical as to the regularity of all matters touching the returns from the same. Perhaps the alleged fact that the Republican votes on said last-mentioned list were as two to one of the Democratic votes may explain this want of zeal. Much stress is laid by the majority of the committee on the remoteness of the said precinct 34 from the settled part of the county, and the fact that quite a number of the 171 votes cast were by aliens and by men who were in that locality for the purpose of working in the construction of a railroad then being built.

Part of this objection is too illiberal and unAmerican for serious notice. Though it is worth while to remark, in passing, that these men lived only from 9 to 12 miles from Butte, the wealthiest and most populous town in the State, and county seat of Silver Bow County. The fact of their residence in the Territory and county for the period required by law was passed upon by the registry agent, and the opportunity for challenge on this or other grounds given under the law for an interval of seven days, and afterwards at the polls, together with the presumption in favor of the due performance of duty by these officers, and the utter absence of all proof to rebut such presumption, should, it seems to the undersigned, set at rest all question on these points. But, for the satisfaction of the Senate and of all who are inquisitive as to the legality and fairness of the election at these polls, it is interesting to know that the question of legal residence was recently passed upon by a court of the State of Montana of competent jurisdiction, in a suit in which the due election of the sheriff of said Silver Bow County was directly in issue, and to whose election the votes cast at precinct 34 were necessary. The court in its opinion and finding of fact says:

"The official returns, then, and this certificate which they support, make out a prima facie case for respondent, and uncontradicted and unimpeached would entitle him to judgment and the office. The inquiry, however, does not stop here, but contestant is permitted to go further and to show, if he can, that persons who were not qualified electors voted at said election for respondent, or that legal votes cast for contestant were by the election officers not counted for him, or were counted for respondent, or that they counted more votes for respondent than were cast for him, or any other legal cause why votes counted by the election officers for respondent should be rejected, or votes cast for himself should be counted and he declared elected. Contestant offered no proof of an illegal lack of qualification charged in statement against sixty-five persons who voted at precinct No. 34 for respondent, and whom he claimed had not been residents of Montana Territory for six months and of Silver Bow County for thirty days immediately preceding the date of said election, and he must be taken to have abandoned that cause of complaint in his statement altogether. He relies entirely on the lack of qualification of persons who voted at precincts Nos. 26 and 34, who were aliens, had never declared their intention before the clerk of a court of record, at his office, but had made their declaration of intention before deputy clerks, away from the office, which deputies, it is alleged, issued fraudulent certificates of election to said persons, being fraudulent for the alleged reason that no record of the declaration had been made; and the appointment of said deputies, it is contended, were invalid and their acts unauthorized, their appointment and official oaths not having been spread upon the journal of the court; and upon evidence to show fraud and impeach the returns of the election officers at precinct No. 24."

The court, in the sentences last above quoted, states the remaining objection made to the legality of some of the votes cast at precinct 34 and another precinct, and about which the majority of the committee seem greatly concerned. But in the same finding and opinion of the court in the case just stated this objection is elaborately considered and disposed of. The court decides that when the act of Congress was so changed as to prescribe that these sworn declarations of intention could be taken before the clerk instead of in the court, it permitted them to be taken in any place outside of the court that might be convenient and where the clerk might be. This was also the ruling of the supreme court of Michigan in a recent case, Andres vs. Judge of Circuit Court, decided October 25, 1889.

Campbell, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"There is no substantial reason why a clerk must be in his office or in court for this purpose, any more than for any other ministerial act not pertaining to court business. There is no law requiring him to be in any particular place to administer affidavits.

* * * * * * *

"There is no reason why an oath may not be taken before him at any place where he may happen to be, as well as before a judge, or notary, or commissioner. He is the person indicated by the law. When it dispenses with his action in open court, it dispenses with the only locality which is universally known for clerical action; and we can not require his action under the naturalization laws to be held in any particular spot, or room, or building without adding to the law a qualification of our own not indicated by its language and not required by any of its purposes."

This is sound reasoning, and whatever we may think of the general question of propriety on the part of the clerk in leaving his office for this purpose, it will hardly do to say that the men so qualified voted illegally in this respect at said precinct 34. The Montana State court, in the case above referred to, say that it had been the habit in the Territory for aliens to make their declarations of intention in this manner. As this opinion is interesting and valuable on other points that concern this election, and contains a complete answer to all these objections, it is in part printed as an appendix hereto.

It is unnecessary to comment further on the character of these objections. They are not even plausible, and the undersigned think that the majority of the committee have been misled in indorsing them. It is not uncommon for a party who is prejudiced by a record to resort to some method of destroying it or impeaching it. And where the method is questionable and illegal this is not only recognized as criminative of the party making use of it, but as the strongest proof of the truth and genuine authenticity of the record so attacked. Omnia presumuntur contra spoliatorum. There is, in the opinion of the undersigned, no room to question that the election at said precinct 34 was fairly conducted; that the electors voted without intimidation or undue influence exercised toward them from any source; and the votes so cast were fairly counted and honestly returned.

Elections under our form of government must be conducted by the plain people of the country. That this should be so is one of the greatest securities to, as well as one of the chiefest glories of, our scheme of self-government. The officers and all the machinery of the elections are provided for by laws of their own making, and furnished from the vicinage of the election precinct.

It is essential to the working of such a system that substance and not form should be first regarded. This wholesome American doctrine is well laid down by Judge McCrary, quoting the language of the report of the election committee of the House of Representatives in an important case:

"Your committee feel constrained to adhere to the law as it exists and is administered in all the courts of the country, not only because of the very great authority by which it is supported, but for the further reason, as stated in the outset, that we believe the rule to be most wise and salutary. The officers of election are chosen of necessity from among all classes of the people; they are numbered in every State by thousands; they are often men unaccustomed to the formalities of legal proceedings. Omissions and mistakes in the discharge of their ministerial duties are almost inevitable. If this House shall establish the doctrine that an election is void because an officer thereof is not in all respects duly qualified, or because the same is not conducted strictly according to law, notwithstanding it may have been a fair and free election, the result will be very many contests, and, what is worse, injustice will be done in many cases. It will enable those who are so disposed to seize upon mere technicality in order to defeat the will of the majority."

In the opinion of the undersigned the Senate can not adopt the resolution reported by the majority of the committee without, practically, making itself a party to the sharp practices and questionable methods by which heated partisans have sought to suppress the votes honestly cast at said precinct 34. Nor can it adopt it without disregarding those safe rules of judicial action, established by high authority, adhered to in previous cases and which, we have endeavored to show, commend themselves to a sober judgment, by their consonance with sound reasoning and the genius of our political system.

The undersigned, therefore, respectfully submit, as an amendment to the resolutions reported by the committee, the following:

Resolved, That the word "not" be stricken out of the first two resolutions and that the word not be inserted between the words "is" and "entitled" in last two of the resolutions so reported by the committee, so that said resolutions shall read:

"Resolved, That William A. Clark is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

"Resolved, That Martin Maginnis is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

"Resolved, That Wilbur F. Sanders is not entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana.

"Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is not entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana."

WEDNESDAY, April 16, 1890.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,
The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested election cases from the State of Montana; and Pending debate,
On motion by Mr. Butler, at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., that the Senate adjourn,

It was determined in the negative, { 1
..... 48

On motion by Mr. Paddock,
The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Mr. Hampton voted in the affirmative.

Those who voted in the negative are,

Messrs. So the motion was not agreed to.

After further debate,

On the question to agree to the first resolution reported by the committee, viz:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana,

On motion by Mr. Butler, that the question be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections,

It was determined in the negative, { Yeas ..... 26 / Nays ..... 32 }

On motion of Mr. Butler,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Barbour, Berry, Blackburn, Call, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Kenna, Morgan, Payne, Reagan, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Maryland.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Pettigrew, Platt, Quay, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the first two resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, viz:

Resolved, That William A. Clark is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana;

Resolved, That Martin Maginnis is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana, be treated as one question.

On motion by Mr. Gray to amend the resolution by striking out all after the first word "Resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

That Wilbur F. Sanders is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana;

Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana,

It was decided in the negative, { Yeas ..... 26 / Nays ..... 32 }

On motion by Mr. Gray,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Barbour, Berry, Blackburn, Call, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Kenna, Morgan, Payne, Reagan, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Maryland.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Pettigrew, Platt, Quay, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolutions,

It was determined in the affirmative, { Yeas ..... 38 / Nays ..... 19 }

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Barbour, Blair, Casey, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Evarts, Frye, George, Gibson, Hale, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar, Jones of Nevada, Kenna, McMillan, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Pettigrew, Platt, Plumb, Quay, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Walthall, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Berry, Blackburn, Call, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Morgan, Reagan, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Wilson of Maryland.

So the resolutions were agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Hoar, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the last two resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, viz:

Resolved, That Wilbur F. Sanders is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana;

Resolved, That Thomas C. Power is entitled, upon the merits of the case, to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana; be treated as one question; and

On the question to agree thereto,

On motion by Mr. Butler, to amend the resolutions by striking out all after the first word, "Resolved" and in lieu thereof inserting:

That it is the judgment of the Senate that there has been no choice of United States Senators from the State of Montana,

It was determined in the negative, { Yeas ..... 23 / Nays 30

On motion by Mr. Butler,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Barbour, Blackburn, Call, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Kenna, Morgan, Payne, Reagan, Turpie, Vance, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Maryland.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Moody, Morrill, Pettigrew, Platt, Quay, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolutions,

It was determined in the affimative, { Yeas ..... 32 / Nays 26

On motion by Mr. Gray,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Blair, Casey, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Evarts, Frye, Hale, Higgins, Hiscock, Hoar, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Mitchell, Moody, Morrill, Paddock, Pettigrew, Platt, Quay, Sawyer, Sherman, Spooner, Squire, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Washburn, Wilson of Iowa.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Barbour, Berry, Blackburn, Call, Coke, Colquitt, Daniel, Eustis, Faulkner, George, Gibson, Gorman, Gray, Hampton, Harris, Jones of Arkansas, Kenna, Morgan, Payne, Reagan, Turpie, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson of Maryland.

So the resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. Wilbur F. Sanders and Mr. Thomas C. Power appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them by the Vice-President, they took their seats in the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF CONTESTANTS.

FRIDAY, July 18, 1890.

Mr. Gray, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That there be allowed out of the contingent fund of the Senate to William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis the sum of $5,000 each, in full compensation for their time and expenses in prosecuting their respective claims to seats in the Senate as Senators from the State of Montana.

[These sums were appropriated by "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for prior years and for other purposes," approved September 30, 1890. (26 St. L,. 529.) The same act appropriated "to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Wilbur F. Sanders and Thomas C. Power their counsel fees and expenses in defending the title to their seats, $2,453. (Ib. 529.)]

[Second session—Fifty-first Congress.]

GEORGE L. SHOUP AND WILLIAM J. McCONNELL,

of Idaho.

December 29, 1890, a statement of the governor of Idaho transmitting a certified copy of the proceedings of the joint convention of the legislature of that State in which three Senators were elected, one for the term beginning March 4, 1890, was presented to the Senate, and on the same day the credentials of Messrs. Shoup and McConnell, as Senators, were presented. Mr. Shoup, who was present, was sworn and took his seat. The credentials were on the same day referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported that the credentials presented a sufficient certificate of the executive of the State under its seal and countersigned by the secretary of state, and recommended that Mr. McConnell be also sworn and admitted to a seat. The report was adopted and Mr. McConnell was sworn.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the Journal of the Senate relating to it. The report of the committee, No. 1904, Sen. Rep., 2d Sess. 51st Cong., being spread at length on the Journal, is not repeated below. The proceedings of the legislature of Idaho appear more fully in the case of Claggett v. Dubois, below.

MONDAY, December 29, 1890.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of Idaho, transmitting a certified copy of the proceedings of the joint session of the legislature of Idaho for the election of United States Senators, at Boise City, Idaho, December 18, 1890.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

[This paper as printed on p. 847, Cong. Record, 2d Sess., 51st Cong.]

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the credentials of George L. Shoup and the credentials of William J. McConnell, elected Senators by the legislature of the State of Idaho; which were read.

On motion by Mr. Vance, that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections,

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That George L. Shoup, whose credentials have been read, be now sworn and admitted as such Senator,

Whereupon

Mr. Shoup appeared and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[Mr. McConnell was not present.]

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. Vance to refer the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections,

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Hoar that the motion to refer lie on the table,

The yeas were 22 and the nays were 15.

On motion by Mr. Harris,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Aldrich, Allen, Casey, Dolph, Evarts, Frye, Hawley, Higgins, Hoar, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Plumb, Power, Sanders, Sherman, Spooner, Stewart, Stockbridge, Teller, Washburn, Wolcott.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Bate, Cockrell, Coke, Edmunds, Gibson, Gorman, Harris, Kenna, McPherson, Morgan, Pasco, Pugh, Reagan, Vance, Vest.

The number of Senators voting not constituting a quorum,

The Vice-President directed the roll to be called;

When

Fifty-four Senators answered to their names.

A quorum being present,

By unanimous consent the order for the yeas and nays was rescinded; and the motion to lay on the table was withdrawn by Mr. Hoar;

When,

The motion to refer the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections was agreed to.

[For the debate see pp. 843–848 Cong. Record, 2d Sess. 51st Cong.]

JANUARY 5, 1891.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of George L. Shoup and William J. McConnell, as Senators from the State of Idaho, submitted the following report (No. 1904):

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of George L. Shoup and William J. McConnell, as Senators from the State of Idaho, have considered the same and report:

That the said credentials constitute a sufficient certificate of the executive of the State under the seal thereof, properly countersigned by the secretary of said State, and certifying the election of Mr. Shoup and Mr. McConnell, respectively, as Senators from that State. Mr. Shoup has already been admitted to take the oath and has taken his seat.

The committee therefore are of the opinion that Mr. McConnell should likewise be admitted to take the oath as Senator, and that said credentials should be placed on file.

The credentials were accordingly placed on file,

When

Mr. McConnell appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

[Second session Fifty-first Congress.]

FRED T. DUBOIS,

of Idaho.

December 30, 1890, the credentials of Mr. Fred T. Dubois, as Senator from Idaho for six years beginning March 4, 1891, were laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. January 5 that committee reported that it was not customary to consider any questions arising on the credentials of a Senator until the term for which he claimed to be elected, and recommended that the credentials be placed on file. The credentials were filed accordingly.

The history of the part of the case here given is a transcript from the Journal of the Senate, 2d sess. 51st Cong. The report of the committee, Senate Rep. 1905, 2d sess. 51st Cong., is printed in full in the Journal, and therefore is not repeated.

TUESDAY, December 30, 1890.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the credentials of Fred T. Dubois, elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of Idaho for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1891; which were read.

Ordered that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[The credentials are printed at p. 863, Cong. Record, 2d sess. 51st Cong.]

MONDAY, January 5, 1891.

Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections to whom were referred the credentials of Fred T. Dubois, as a Senator from the State of Idaho, submitted the following report (No. 1905):

"The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Fred T. Dubois, as a Senator from the State of Idaho, for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1891, have considered the same and report:

"That it is the usage of the Senate to consider any questions that may arise upon the credentials of a Senator, at a session held during the term for which the Senator claims to be elected, and not before; and no reason appears to the committee for a departure from such usage in the present case. They therefore recommend that the credentials be placed on file."

The credentials were accordingly placed on file.

SATURDAY, January 10, 1891.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a memorial of certain members of the legislature of Idaho, remonstrating against the admission of Fred T. Dubois to a seat in the Senate, as a Senator from that State; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

[The memorial is Sen. Mis Doc. 44, 2d sess., 51st Cong.]

[First session Fifty-second Congress.]

WILLIAM H. CLAGETT v. FRED. T. DUBOIS,

of Idaho.

The first legislature of the State of Idaho met pursuant to proclamation by the governor, Monday, December 8, 1890. The house of representatives effected a permanent organization on that day. The senate, the lieutenant-governor being ex-officio presiding officer, after prayer, elected a clerk pro tempore, after which the senators were sworn, a committee on rules selected, choice of seats provided for, a set of temporary rules adopted, and, finally, a committee on organization appointed. Tuesday, December 9, the permanent organization was perfected by the choice of a secretary and other officers. Tuesday, December 16, being the second Tuesday after Monday, December 8, each branch of the legislature took one ballot, acting under joint resolution "to elect, as provided by law, United States Senators." The following day the two houses met in joint convention, and the result of the previous day's balloting showing no choice of a Senator, proceeded to ballot. No person was elected on this day. On the following day, Thursday, December 18, the joint convention elected Messrs. Shoup and McConnell Senators, to fill the existing vacancies, and Mr. Dubois for the term beginning March 4, 1891. Mr. Dubois's credentials were issued under date of December 18, 1890. February 6, 1891, the legislature of Idaho voted that there was "at least grave doubt" as to the validity of the election of Fred T. Dubois, and to proceed to a new election. In pursuance of this resolution a new election was held, and Mr. Clagett was declared elected February 11, 1891. The governor issued credentials, certifying that fact, under date of February 14, 1891. On the assembling of the Fifty-second Congress Mr. Dubois presented himself to take the oath as Senator. Objection was made and the matter went over until the following day, when Mr. Dubois was sworn, and his credentials, together with a memorial of William H. Clagett, claiming the seat, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The majority of the committee reported that "both on construction and precedent the legislature of Idaho was organized on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, within the meaning of the term 'organization' as used in the constitution of the State of Idaho, in the act of admission, and in the Revised Statutes" (R. S. § 14), that "Tuesday, the 16th day of December, was, in the judgment of [the] committee, the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature of the State of Idaho," and that therefore Mr. Dubois was duly elected and entitled to retain his seat. Two of the committee dissented, contending that according to precedent the word "organization" meant permanent organization, that the permanent organization was not effected until Tuesday, December 9, that the proceedings which culminated in the election of Mr. Dubois did not take place on the second Tuesday thereafter, but were premature, and that therefore he was not entitled to the seat as Senator from Idaho. February 25, pending the discussion of the report of the committee, Mr. Clagett was given the right to speak in his own behalf for two hours, and on the following day the limit of time was removed. March 3 Mr. Dubois was declared entitled to retain his seat by vote of 55 yeas to 5 nays. April 1 the committee recommended the payment of $2,000 to Mr. Dubois and $4,000 to Mr. Clagett, in compensation of all expenses incurred by them in the contest, and the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the journal of the Senate and the report of the committee, Senate Reports, 1st sess., 52d Cong., No. 148.

MONDAY, December 7, 1891.

Mr. Hale having objected to the oath of office being this day administered to Mr. Frederick T. Dubois, whose credentials as Senator from the State of Idaho were heretofore presented,

Mr. Cullom submitted a motion that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Dubois; and Ordered, That the consideration of the motion be postponed to to-morrow.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1891.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion yesterday submitted by Mr. Cullom, that the oath of office be administered to Frederick T. Dubois, as a Senator from the State of Idaho; and

The motion was agreed to,

Whereupon,

Mr. Dubois appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. Hale,

Ordered, That the credentials of Frederick T. Dubois and the memorial and papers of William H. Clagett, claiming a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TUESDAY, February 2, 1892.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was committed the investigation of the contest inaugurated by William H. Clagett, involving the right of Mr. Fred T. Dubois to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Idaho, for the full term commencing March 4, 1891, submitted a report (No. 148) accompanied by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Fred T. Dubois is entitled to hold the seat he now holds as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891.

Resolved, That William H. Clagett is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho for the term commencing March 4, 1891.

THURSDAY, February 4, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

Ordered, That leave be granted to the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to file with the Secretary their views in the matter of the contest for a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho, and that they be printed in connection with the report of the committee (No. 148).

TUESDAY, February 16, 1892.

Mr. Vance presented a digest of State precedents to accompany the views of a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested election case from the State of Idaho, which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of the Report No. 148.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Teller (chairman), Hoar, Mitchell, Chandler, Higgins, Vance, Pugh, Gray, Turpie.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 2, 1892.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was committed the investigation of the contest inaugurated by Mr. William H. Clagett, involving the right of Mr. Fred T. Dubois to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891, and to which seat he was admitted on his prima facie case on the 8th day of December, 1891, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

There is in this case really no material controversy in regard to the facts. The questions involved are of law, arising out of the construction of various constitutional and statutory provisions and their applicability to these facts. The sitting member, Mr. Dubois, and the contestant, Mr. Clagett, each claims to have been duly elected a United States Senator by the legislature of the State of Idaho for the full term above mentioned. Mr. Dubois claims to have been thus elected on Thursday, the 18th day of December, 1890; while Mr. Clagett claims to have been thus elected on Wednesday, the 11th day of February, 1891.

Inasmuch as each claimant claims to have been elected for precisely the same term, and as it is conceded that the election under which Mr. Dubois claims to have been elected was prior in time, it follows that, if it shall be held he was duly elected, that is the end of the contest and he is entitled to retain his seat. Upon the other hand, should it be determined that Mr. Dubois was not duly elected, then, and only then, will it become necessary to inquire into the legality of the election of Mr. Clagett.

For the purpose of determining as to the validity of the election of Mr. Dubois, in so far as the facts are involved, it is only necessary to consider the record of the proceedings of the first twelve days of the first session of the legislature of the State of Idaho, commencing Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890. This record, together with accompanying affidavits, supplying an alleged omission in such record on one particular point, and the truthfulness of the allegation as to such omission, and of its proper correction by the affidavits referred to, are not denied by the contestant, disclose the following facts in reference to the organization of the legislature and the election of Mr. Dubois:

Before proceeding, however, to a statement of the facts thus disclosed and admitted, it may be said that the State of Idaho was admitted into the Union by act of Congress dated July 3, 1890. This act refers to and adopts the constitution which the people of the late Territory of Idaho had adopted prior to that time. The fourteenth section of article 21 of such constitution contains the following provision:

"Within ten days after the organization of the legislature both houses of the legislature shall then and there proceed to elect, as provided by law, two Senators of the United States for the State of Idaho. At said election the two persons who shall receive the majority of all the votes cast by said senators and representatives shall be elected as such United States Senators, and shall be so declared by the presiding officer of the said joint session. The presiding officers of the senate and house shall issue a certificate to each of said Senators, certifying his election, which certificate shall also be signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state."

The act of Congress admitting the State into the Union, including the recitals, reads in part as follows:

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Idaho did, on the 4th day of July, 1889, by a convention of delegates called and assembled for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution, which constitution was ratified and adopted by the people of said Territory at an election held therefor on the first Tuesday of November, 1889, which constitution is republican in form and is in conformity with the Constitution of the United States; and

"Whereas said convention and the people of said Territory have asked the admission of said Territory into the Union of States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Idaho is hereby declared to be a State of the United States of America, and is hereby declared to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever; and that the constitution which the people of Idaho have formed for themselves be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed."

Section 20 of said act admitting the State reads as follows:

"SEC. 20. That the legislature of the said State may elect two Senators of the United States, as provided by the constitution of the said State; and the Senators and Representatives of said State shall be entitled to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States."

THE REVISED STATUTES PROVIDING THE TIME AND MANNER OF ELECTING UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the time and manner of the election of United States Senators, the same being a reënactment of the act of July 25, A. D. 1866, are for the convenience of the Senate here inserted. They read as follows:

"SEC. 14. The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

SEC. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from such State, and the name of the person so voted for who receives a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house shall be entered on the journal of that house by the clerk or secretary thereof; or, if either house fails to give such majority to either person on that day, the fact shall be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house, he shall be declared duly elected Senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, and the person who receives the majority of all the votes of the joint assembly—a majority of all the members elected by both houses being present and voting—shall be declared duly elected. If no person receives such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature, and shall take at least one vote until a Senator is elected.

"SEC. 16. Whenever on the meeting of the legislature of any State a vacancy exists in the representation of such State in the Senate, the legislature shall proceed on the second Tuesday after meeting and organization to elect a person to fill such vacancy, in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a Senator for the full term.

"SEC. 17. Whenever during the session of the legislature of any State a vacancy occurs in the representation of such State in the Senate, similar proceedings to fill such vacancy shall be had on the second Tuesday after the legislature has organized and has notice of such vacancy.

"SEC. 18. It shall be the duty of the executive of the State from which any Senator has been chosen to certify his election, under the seal of the State, to the President of the Senate of the United States.

"SEC. 19. The certificate mentioned in the preceding section shall be countersigned by the secretary of state of the State."

ORGANIZATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

On Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, the first legislature of the State of Idaho met, pursuant to the proclamation of the governor as required by section 14, article 21, of the constitution of the State.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

The house met at 12 o'clock meridian on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, in the hall of the house of representatives, in the capital of the State at Boise City. Neither the State constitution nor any statute made any provision for officers of the house. The house, therefore, was possessed of the inherent and exclusive power, not only of electing its own officers, but also of determining the number and kind of officers to be elected.

On the first day of the session, namely, Monday, December 8, 1890, the house of representatives, a quorum of members being present, elected a speaker and principal officers. The house was called to order on that day by Hon. H. J. Burkhart, speaker of the house of representatives of the fifteenth legislative assembly of the late Territory of Idaho, at the hour of 12 o'clock m., whereupon Charles H. Reed, chief clerk of the house of representatives of the fifteenth session of the legislative assembly of the late Territory of Idaho, acting as the chief clerk of the house, with the consent of all, there being no protest, then read the proclamation of the governor of Idaho convening the State legislature on that date.

The certificate of the secretary of state was then read, certifying the names of the different persons elected members of the house of representatives of the first session of the legislature of the State of Idaho. The roll of members, as they appeared upon such certificate of the secretary of state, was then called. All being present, the oath of office was administered to the members of the house, respectively, by Hon. John T. Morgan, associate justice of the supreme court of Idaho. After prayer by Rev. L. W. Gowan, the election of a speaker having been declared in order, Mr. Emery, of Custer County, placed in nomination Mr. Frank A. Fenn, of Idaho County; Mr. Jones, of Boise County, placed in nomination Mr. Ballentine, of Ada County. A ballot was taken, which resulted as follows:

Mr. Fenn received 29 votes; Mr. Ballentine, 5; Mr. Emery, 1; Mr. Steunenberg, 1. Mr. Frank A Fenn, having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared duly elected speaker of the house, and was conducted to the chair by a committee consisting of Messrs. Price, Armstrong, and Cameron, appointed for that purpose by the temporary chairman. The committee presented Mr. Fenn, who was introduced to the house by Mr. Burkhart, the temporary presiding officer, as speaker of the house.

The oath of office was then administered to the speaker by Judge Morgan, associate justice of the supreme court of the State of Idaho; whereupon the house proceeded to the election of a chief clerk. Mr. Charles H. Reed, who had been acting as temporary chief clerk, was, on a ballot being taken, elected, and declared duly elected by the speaker, chief clerk of the house for the ensuing session. A recess was then, on motion of Representative Armstrong, taken for one hour.

The recess having expired, the house was called to order at 2 o'clock p. m., December 8, Mr. Speaker in the chair and a quorum present, whereupon Mr. John Hunter was elected sergeant-at-arms; Miss Carry Sweet, assistant chief clerk; Mr. J. W. Jackson, doorkeeper. An enrolling clerk, an assistant enrolling clerk, an engrossing clerk, and an assistant engrossing clerk were also each duly elected, and all the above-named officers were declared, respectively, to have been duly elected on that date, December 8, A. D. 1890. A page and a messenger were also elected, after all which, on motion of Mr. Hawkins, the house adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., December 9, 1890, the record of proceedings in the house journal being signed as follows:

"F. A. Fenn, speaker; attest, Charles H. Reed, chief clerk."

No action was taken on that day, December 8, in the house looking to the possible election of any other officers on any future day; whether the house would elect any other officers during the session was uncertain. At 10 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, December 9, 1890, the house of representatives reassembled, Mr. Speaker in the chair. Immediately after the journal was read, and which was then approved, a chaplain was elected. No other officer was chosen on December 9, 1890.

ORGANIZATION OF THE SENATE.

The senate of the State of Idaho also met at 12 o'clock meridian, Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, in the senate chamber of the capitol of the State at Boise City. The State constitution of Idaho provides that the lieutenant-governor of the State shall be the presiding officer of the senate. The lieutenant-governor was Norman B. Willey, and at the hour and on the day just named, the members-elect of the senate being assembled in the senate chamber of the capitol at Boise City, a quorum being present, were called to order by Lieutenant-Governor Norman B. Willey, acting in virtue of a provision in the State constitution in the capacity of presiding officer of the senate.

After prayer by the Rev. Mr. Scidmore, Senator Gunn moved that M. C. Athey be elected secretary of the senate pro tempore, which motion, as will appear hereafter, prevailed. Mr. Athey was duly elected and so declared to be by the presiding officer, and he immediately entered upon the duties of his office. The president of the senate then read the proclamation of the governor, convening the legislature of the State of Idaho, at Boise City, on the 8th day of December, A. D. 1890. The president of the senate then called the roll of members as certified by the secretary of state, and a quorum, 16 in all—the whole number constituting the senate of the State of Idaho being 18—answered to their names. The oath of office was then administered to the senators-elect by Mr. Justice Sullivan, chief justice of the supreme court of the State of Idaho.

Senator Gray then moved that the senate adjourn until 2:30 o'clock p. m. of the same day. This motion was carried, and the president of the senate declared the senate adjourned until 2:30 o'clock Monday, December 8, 1890. At 2:30 o'clock p. m. of the same day the senate met pursuant to adjournment, Norman B. Willey, the lieutenant-governor, presiding. The roll was called, which disclosed the fact that all the senators were present.

Senator Gray moved that the rules of the legislative council of the fifteenth session of the late Territory be adopted, as far as consistent, for the regulation of the senate until the report of the committee on rules be adopted; which motion was put by the presiding officer, and by him declared carried.

Motions were then made for the purpose of determining the selection of seats of the several senators.

Senator Finch moved that in drawing for seats names be placed in a hat and the first name drawn would take seat No. 1, and so on.

Senator Gunn moved to amend this motion by adding that the senators retain the seats then occupied by them, which latter motion prevailed.

The senate then adjourned.

These acts on the part of the senate constitute, in the judgment of your committee, an organization on the part of that body sufficient to enable it to exercise every function of a State senate, legislative and otherwise, including that of electing a Senator of the United States. These acts constituted an organization, in the judgment of your committee, within the meaning of that term as employed is section 14 of the Revised Statutes. Whatever else may have been done by the senate, thus organized on Monday, December 8, 1890, either on that date or at any subsequent time, could not, in the opinion of your committee, invalidate such organization.

What further did occur, we will inquire, on Monday, December 8, or subsequently, on which contestant rests his contention that there was no such organization on Monday as is contemplated by the statute? Simply this: Senator Brigham, on Monday, December 8, after the members had been sworn, a chief clerk elected and entered upon his duties, and rules adopted, moved that the president appoint a committee of three on organization, to designate and determine the number and order of officers to be filled by the senate. This motion was carried, and the president of the senate appointed Senators Brigham, Gunn, and Jewell such committee.

Senator Shoup also moved, on Monday, that a committee of five be appointed by the chair to report rules for the government of the senate, which motion was carried. This was prior to the adoption of the motion of Senator Gray that the rules of the legislative council of the fifteenth session be adopted as hereinbefore recited. Subsequent to this the president, in accordance with Senator Shoup's motion, appointed as a committee on rules of government of the senate, Senators Shoup, Weiler, Langrische, and Branstetter.

But surely these acts, so far from proving or tending to prove that there was not already, prior to and at the time they occurred, a perfect and complete temporary organization of the senate, such as would have enabled it to censure or expel a member, pass a bill, or do any other act required of it by the laws of its being, that it could rightfully do after the permanent organization had been effected, conclusively, as it seems to your committee, prove the very reverse. Why the necessity of adopting the rules of a late Territorial council if it were not understood that the senate was organized and in a condition to transact business? Why adopt rules "for the regulation of the senate" if there were no organized senate in existence—no senate to regulate. And, again, can an unorganized senate adopt rules, appoint important committees, etc.?

The appointment of the committee on organization clearly had reference to a permanent organization. This is made plain by what occurred on Tuesday, December 9. On that date the journal shows the senate met pursuant to adjournment at 10 o'clock a. m. It was the senate—an organized body that met, not the members of the senate in their unorganized capacity.

The senate, says the journal, was opened by prayer by Rev. Mr. Gowan. Roll called; all present. The committee appointed on Monday reported a list of offices to be filled by the senate, which report was adopted. This list included president pro tempore of the senate and secretary of the senate pro tempore, each of whom had been duly installed on Monday. These several offices were then filled by election. M. C. Athey, who had been elected and installed on Monday as secretary pro tempore of the senate, was elected as secretary of the senate.

All this conclusively shows, in the judgment of your committee, that the senate itself understood there had been a temporary organization of the senate on Monday, and it was the permanent organization that was being effected on Tuesday, December 9. This view is fully confirmed by the character of the notices which passed between the two houses on Tuesday, December 9, as each of these recites that the house "has permanently organized."

The question as to the effect in determining the date of organization which these notices should have, from the fact that they were not transmitted until Tuesday, will be further considered later on in this report.

The only constitutional office of the senate is that of president. Upon the senate in like manner, as in the case of the house, devolves the power not only of choosing all of its other officers, but of determining what officers were to be chosen. Each house, therefore, it will be observed, had, by constitutional provision as to the president of the senate, and by election as to the other officers named, a duly elected and acting (and without any protest from any source) presiding officer and chief clerk of each house on Monday, December 8, 1890; the house having duly elected on that date eleven of its officers—all but chaplain, who was elected on Tuesday, December 9—while the senate had on that date (Monday, December 8) its duly elected and qualified presiding officer, and also a duly elected and acting secretary pro tempore.

The senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m. on Tuesday, December 9, 1890, and as appears from the record, elected certain other officers, all of whom were elected before the adjournment at 12 o'clock meridian of December 9.

OMISSION IN JOURNAL.

In this connection attention is attracted to an evident omission in the journal of the proceedings of the senate of December 8, 1890.

The record of the proceedings of the senate of the State of Idaho of December 8, A. D. 1890, recites as follows:

"After prayer by the Rev. Scidmore, Mr. Gunn moved that M. C. Athey be elected secretary of the senate pro tempore."

This record, it is true, does not recite the fact that the motion was carried or that Mr. Athey was either elected or declared elected secretary of the senate pro tempore. It does appear, however, from such record that M. C. Athey acted as secretary pro tempore of the senate on that day without objection from any source, and the proceedings of the senate for that day, Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, are in the journal certified as follows:

"N. B. Willey, president of the senate. Attest: M. C. Athey, secretary pro tem."

The journal therefore clearly shows upon its face that M. C. Athey acted as secretary pro tempore of the senate on the 8th day of December, 1890. He was on that day, as appears from the record of the proceedings, de facto if not de jure secretary of the senate pro tempore, and therefore comes within the rule laid down in the case of Bank vs. Dandridge (12 Wheaton, 64), by the Supreme Court of the United States, and which is recognized in both England and America as settled law, namely:

"It (the law) will presume that a man acting in a public office has been rightly appointed."

But as a matter of fact Mr. M. C. Athey was formally elected secretary pro tempore on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, in pursuance of the motion made by Mr. Gunn, as recited in the record, and he then immediately entered upon his duties as such secretary pro tempore, and the record of the proceedings of the session of the senate of that day is shown to be clearly defective in omitting to recite that the motion of Mr. Gunn that Mr. M. C. Athey be elected secretary pro tempore of the senate was adopted by the senate. This is made clearly apparent by the affidavits of James Gunn, the author of the motion; M. C. Athey, the secretary pro tempore; by H. C. Branstetter, a senator, representing Ada County in said senate; and by J. M. Wells, a member of the senate of the State of Idaho, representing the counties of Kootenai and Latah. These affidavits are as follow:

"STATE OF IDAHO, County of Alturas, ss:

"James Gunn, being first duly sworn, on his oath doth say: I am the duly elected and qualified senator for Alturas County in the senate of the State of Idaho. As such senator I was in my seat in the senate of the State of Idaho on the first day of the last session of the said senate, the same being the eighth day of December, A. D. 1890. As such senator I made a motion that M. C. Athey be elected secretary of said senate pro tem. The said motion was duly seconded, and by the president of the senate put to the senate, and the same was carried unanimously. Whereupon the said M. C. Athey did immediately enter upon and perform all the duties of secretary of the senate from that time henceforward, until he was, by vote of the senate, made the permanent secretary of the senate. That immediately upon the election of the said secretary, as aforesaid, the senate proceeded to the regular business of the session. Further deponent said not.

D. 1890, and permanent secretary of said senate, on the ninth day of December, A. D. 1890. That the motion made by Mr. Gunn, in the first day's proceedings of said senate, which reads as follows: 'Mr. Gunn moved that M. C. Willey, president of the senate, and a vote taken thereon. M. C. That in writing up the senate roll of the first day's proceedings the fact of Senator Gunn's motion for the election of M. C. It is therefore conclusively shown to your committee that Mr. M. C. Athey was formally and regularly elected to the office of secretary pro tempore of the senate of the State of Idaho on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890. These affidavits, it will be observed, do not contradict the journal. While the journal as it stands does not expressly prove the formal election of Mr. Athey, it does not disprove it; nor is there anything in it from which a presumption can be indulged in that no such formal election took place, or which in any manner tends to overcome the counter presumption in its favor raised by the fact that Mr. Athey acted as secretary pro tempore, which fact clearly appears by the printed journal.

These affidavits do not contradict the journal, but simply supply an apparent omission in the same. Certainly the presumption is violent that some disposition was made of the motion of Mr. Gunn to the effect that M. C. Athey be elected secretary of the senate pro tempore. The record of the proceedings of the senate of that date fails to disclose that any disposition was made of it; but as the journal shows he acted as such this fact raises a conclusive presumption not only that Mr. Gunn's motion was adopted, but also that Mr. Athey was then and there duly elected. It is, therefore, in the opinion of your committee, although unnecessary to constitute a sufficient record in this case, clearly regular to permit this evident omission to be supplied by evidence aliunde the record.

To hold that the failure of the secretary pro tempore to record the fact of his own election could vitiate the election of a Senator of the United States would border very closely on an absurdity. If there is any rule which would compel a judicial tribunal to refuse to permit such a correction in a record—and your committee believe there is not—there most certainly is none which would compel the Senate of the United States, in the exercise of its rightful jurisdiction of judging of the election of its members, to close its eyes to the very truth of a case when clearly demonstrated by indisputable evidence other than that of the record itself and in harmonious connection with it. That no such rule is recognized in judicial tribunals is apparent from the rule in the following cases:

In Green v. Weller (3 Miss., 650), the supreme court of Mississippi said:

"In England the journals of the Lords and Commons, which are kept as memorials of their proceedings, may be proved by an examined copy. But the courts do not judicially notice them, and they do not import absolute verity, and are not conclusive of the facts stated in them, except in the case of a judgment rendered by the House of Lords, as a judicial tribunal, upon appeal (1 Phill. Ev., 406). In this country the same rule prevails, and such documents are not noticed judicially by the courts, but must be proved."

In Taymouth v. Kochler (35 Mich., 22), the supreme court of Michigan said:

"The township clerk is, by statute, made the clerk of the board of highway commissioners, and required, under their direction, to record their proceedings. It has, however, frequently been held that, while parol evidence can not be admitted to contradict the record, yet it might be introduced to show the facts omitted to be stated; that the rights of creditors, or third persons, can not be prejudiced by the neglect of the clerk to perform his duty in this respect."

In Ohio the clerk of the county commissioners was required by law to record certain official proceedings. In King v. Kenney (4 Ohio, 79), the supreme court of Ohio said:

"The omission was in the clerk of the commissioners. It would seem unreasonable that such ministerial nonfeasance should render the whole proceeding nugatory. To authorize this construction, for such omission, would require precedents and authorities. But in fact they are the other way."

In the case of Bigelow v. Amboy (1 Dutcher, 297), the court said:

"Nor can the right of the creditor to recover depend upon the regularity with which the minutes of the city council are kept, nor whether they are kept at all. It is expressly proved by the city clerk that a resolution, substantially the same as that shown to the clerk of the plaintiffs, was passed by the council. Whether the resolution furnished to the mayor was copied from the minutes, or furnished to him before the minutes were recorded, or whether they were recorded at all, is a matter which can not prejudice the claim of the creditor."

In the case of Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch, 137), the court said:

"When all the requirements have been performed which authorize a recording officer to record any instrument whatever, and the order for that purpose has been given, the instrument is, in law, considered as recorded, although the mere labor of inserting it in a book kept for that purpose may not have been performed."

THE CONTESTANT CONCEDES THIS POINT.

But the contestant, Mr. Clagett, has abandoned this contention and now makes no point on this omission in the record in his supplemental brief filed in this case. Mr. Clagett also in this paper abandons the point which was really the only one originally urged against the election of Mr. Dubois at the time of his election, namely, that he, Mr. Dubois, was not elected because his alleged election was had before the two Senators elected to existing vacancies had drawn for terms. We quote from Mr. Clagett's brief the following on these two points:

"(1) I make no point on the omission of the senate journal to say that Mr. Athey was elected secretary pro tempore on Monday, December 8. I had personal knowledge that he was so elected, and, although the journal does not show the fact, in my brief (p. 22) I so state. Affidavits to prove an expressly admitted fact are, to say the least, unnecessary.

"(2) Neither do I urge that Mr. Dubois was not elected because his alleged election was had before the two Senators elected to fill existing vacancies had drawn for terms. I was for a short period inclined to this opinion, but on full consideration abandoned it, and it is not mentioned in my brief. Had the legislature waited until after the two Senators had drawn for terms, it would have avoided the undignified and indecent haste which characterized the election in December. It would also have been spared the political perfidy involved in the open repudiation of the instructions given to the members in the platforms of both political parties to so act as to assure as near as possible equal representation in the Senate to the two great sections of the State. Although undignified and indecent, the course taken was not for this reason illegal."

While your committee would be unwilling to hold that a formal election is indispensable to an organization where it is clearly shown that a certain person had acted in the capacity of secretary pro tempore with the consent of the senate and without objection from any source, and who as such had certified to the record of the proceedings, still in the case under consideration your committee are fully satisfied from the evidence presented not only that Mr. Gunn moved that Mr. Athey be elected secretary pro tempore of the senate, but that such motion was put by the presiding officer and carried, and, further, that Mr. Athey was on that date duly elected as such and so declared to be, and in pursuance of such election then and there, Monday, December 8, 1890, entered upon the duties of his office.

WAS THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF IDAHO IN VIEW OF THE FOREGOING FACTS, ORGANIZED ON MONDAY, DECEMBER 8, A. D. 1890, WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE TERM "ORGANIZATION," AS EMPLOYED IN SECTION 14 OF THE REVISED STATUTES?

It is virtually conceded by the contestant and admitted by all that if the legislature of the State of Idaho were organized on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, within the meaning of the term "organization" as used in the fourteenth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the time and manner of electing United States Senators, then Mr. Dubois was duly elected Senator for the State of Idaho for the term for which he claims to have been elected.

The contention on the part of Mr. Clagett, however, is, in so far as this question is concerned, that there was no such organization of the legislature as is contemplated by the statute until Tuesday, December 9, A. D. 1890. It is conceded by the contestant, or, if not, the fact is clearly shown by the record, that there was at least a complete temporary organization of the legislature of the State of Idaho on Monday, December 8, 1890. The question therefore arises, What is necessary to be done to constitute an organization of a legislature within the meaning of the term organization as used in the statutes? Inasmuch as Congress has provided that the election shall be held, or at least the first steps preliminary to an election shall be taken, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature, without indicating in the remotest manner what shall be the character of such organization—whether it is to be a permanent organization with all the officers of every grade elected and installed which the legislature may determine necessary for its convenience in the transaction of business, as contradistinguished from a temporary organization, such as will enable the respective bodies to exercise fully all legislative functions, enact laws, censure or expel a member, and the like—is it not competent for the legislature to elect on the second Tuesday after such temporary organization?

In other words, does not such an organization as last described meet the requirements of the Revised Statutes as to organization? Your committee are of the opinion that it does. If the term "organization" as used in the Revised Statutes must be construed to mean only such an organization as exists after every officer is elected that either house may see proper to elect, or may be necessary to elect, for the mere convenience of the body, then it would seem to be quite unsafe to regard the legislature as organized within the meaning of the statute, so long as there existed the remotest possibility of electing any additional officers of any grade or character during the progress of the session. In other words, if that is the character of organization intended by Congress, then it would seem to be most difficult indeed to draw the line or define the exact date when the organization of the two houses is complete within the meaning of the law.

Your committee are of the opinion that whenever each house has progressed so far in the election of such officers, respectively, as will enable it and the two houses together to transact business, exercise legislative functions, enact laws, and make and keep a record of such business, that then there has been such an organization of the two houses as is contemplated by the statute. When that has been done, in so far as the election of officers of the two houses is concerned which will enable them respectively to exercise the functions for which they have been brought into existence, and which will enable them to make, keep, and certify a record of the same, then, it seems to your committee, although much less than this may, and by some members of your committee is, deemed to be sufficient, the requirement of the statute as to the organization necessary from which time shall date in the election of a United States Senator, is clearly and fully met.

In other words, a legislature is, in the judgment of your committee, organized within the meaning of section 14 of the Revised Statutes relating to the time and manner of electing United States Senators when each house has a presiding officer, authorized to ascertain and declare its will, and a method of recording its action satisfactory to and recognized by itself, subject, of course, to any constitutional provision, State or Federal, or existing statute on the subject.

In defining the term "organization," as used in section 14 of the Revised Statutes, which with subsequent sections is a reënactment of the act of July 25, A. D. 1866, the purpose of Congress in enacting the same should not be lost sight of; and such construction should be given as will best effectuate such purpose.

The intention of Congress, as is plainly evident from a consideration of the whole act, was to place it out of the power of a majority of either house to prevent a majority of the two houses acting together in joint assembly from electing a United States Senator, in a case where there had been such an organization of the legislature as will enable it to exercise the ordinary functions of a legislative body, such as enacting laws and making record thereof. This being so, is not the conclusion irresistible that whatever is a sufficient organization to enable a legislature to do the latter should be sufficient to enable it to elect a United States Senator?

Any other construction would place it in the power of each house to organize so as to enable the legislature to sit its entire session of forty, sixty, or one hundred days, as the case may be, enact laws, and perform every function of its being, save and except only that of electing a United States Senator, and then adjourn, and yet would place it in the power of a factious majority in either house, the dilatory and obstructive action of which as a minority of a whole legislature in respect of proceeding with the necessary preliminary steps toward the election of a United States Senator is the very thing above all others the legislation was aimed at, to absolutely prevent the election of a Senator by refusing to make that permanent organization which the contestant insists is necessary before the legislature can elect a Senator.

Such a construction would, in the judgment of your committee, while there is nothing in the phraseology of the statute to warrant, much less compel it, and much to the contrary, would be absolutely and fatally destructive of the statute defining the time and manner of electing United States Senators.

It must be conceded not only that it is one of the important duties of the legislature of a State, but one among the most exalted, if indeed not the very highest duty incumbent on it, to choose Senators at the time and in the manner provided by law. It is a duty impressed by the National Constitution, and in its exercise or nonexercise is involved the very existence of that machinery absolutely essential to the full and perfect exercise of the functions of the National Government.

Therefore the great purposes in the Congress in enacting the law of 1866 was to remove every obstruction that might by factious opposition be thrown in the way of an election of Senator and to facilitate the exercise on the part of the legislatures of the several States of this high constitutional duty, and to the end that States might not go unrepresented in the Senate of the United States. That such was the purpose is manifest from the character of speeches made in the Senate by such eminent Senators as Lyman Trumbull, Reverdy Johnson, and others when the bill which finally became the act of July 25, 1866, regulating the election of United States Senators, was under consideration in the Senate. On July 11, 1866, when this bill was the pending measure in the Senate of the United States, Senator Trumbull, the member of the committee who reported the bill, said:

"We think the public interest is not subserved by leaving a State unrepresented; the intention of the Constitution is that it should be represented, and it is for the public good that we should have a law that will produce uniformity in these elections and secure representation."

While Senator Reverdy Johnson, also a member of the committee, said:

"The Government of the United States can not go on without a representation in the Senate of the United States. The Constitution assumes that every State in the Union will elect Senators; and the Constitution, in its spirit, is obligatory upon every State to make such an election. The only way, as I think, to compel the State to perform that constitutional obligation is to stop the wheels of the government of the State until that higher duty is performed. It is infinitely a higher duty upon the part of the States and the members of the legislatures of the several States to elect Senators of the United States, the Government of the United States being important to all the States, than it is to go on with their ordinary legislation."

IT IS CONCEDED BY CONTESTANT'S COUNSEL THAT THE LEGISLATURE WAS SUFFICIENTLY ORGANIZED MONDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1890, TO ENABLE IT TO ENACT LAWS THAT WOULD BE VALID.

Counsel for contestant, Mr. Shellabarger, conceded on the hearing that the temporary organization effected on Monday, December 8, was sufficient to enable the legislature to enact laws, and that such laws would have been valid; while the contestant, Mr. Clagett, virtually, if we do not misinterpret his language, concedes the same thing when, in the printed brief last filed with the committee (p. 5), he says:

"Nor have I ever held that a State legislature is not organized within the meaning of section 14 until both houses have supplied themselves with all the officers and assistants which they may choose to provide for themselves during the session, nor even with all [the italics are Mr. Clagett's] official force which the laws of the State may provide where such provision is made by State law."

If the concession of Mr. Shellabarger be well founded, as your committee have no doubt, it is clear that, in the absence of the statute of 1866 or the provisions of the Revised Statutes, the legislature could at that moment—December 8, 1890—in its discretion, have proceeded to the election of a United States Senator, and such election would have been valid.

It therefore follows, if the argument of the contestant be sound, that a legislature sufficiently organized for all purposes of legislation and also sufficiently organized for the election of a United States Senator, in the absence of this statute of 1866, is without power to make such election solely by the operation of the statute, which was intended not only to facilitate it, but to compel it.

It appears clearly to your committee that one of two things must be true—either it must be held that whenever a sufficient number of officers of each house of a legislative assembly under the law as it stood as applicable to the State of Idaho when the first legislature of that State convened, are elected to enable each of such houses to exercise fully all legislative functions, or otherwise that no such organization as is contemplated by the statute relating to the time and manner of the election of United States Senators is consummated until all of the officers of every grade are elected by each of such houses which each house may in its judgment determine to elect.

Your committee are of the opinion that the true line should be drawn at the date when each house has elected such officers and they have entered upon their duty as will enable the houses, respectively, to exercise their full functions as legislative bodies, and make, preserve, and certify a record thereof. In the case under consideration it is true the two houses did not notify each other, respectively, that the permanent organization was complete until Tuesday, December 9, but this fact raises no implication whatever that a perfect temporary organization did not take place as a matter of fact the day before, and the fact that the notice of organization was not given until Tuesday can not alter the fact that the organization was had on Monday.

The statute requires that the vote for Senator be taken on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature and not on the second Tuesday after the exchange of notices of the organization of the two houses; besides, in the case we are considering, the notices exchanged on Tuesday, December 9, related to the permanent organization of the two houses, and this fact is recited in the notices themselves, the notice from the senate reading:

"I am instructed to inform your honorable body that the senate has permanently organized by the election of the following officers." * * *

While the notice from the house reads:

"I am instructed to inform your honorable body that the house of representatives has permanently organized," etc.

And it is submitted that the very fact that the notices exchanged on Tuesday recited that the organization referred to was a permanent organization clearly implied, or if there was no such implication there was certainly nothing to negative the fact that a temporary organization had existed before such permanent organization had taken place.

PRECEDENTS.

In the case of the election of Wright and Howell to the Senate of the United States from the State of Iowa in 1870, the senate of Iowa met on Monday, January 10, 1870. On that day a few temporary officers were chosen, but the senators were not sworn. On Tuesday, January 11, 1870, the senators were sworn and the permanent officers were all elected; thereupon, as the journal of the senate of that day recites:

"Senator Tuttle moved that a committee of three be appointed to inform the house that the senate is now organized and ready to proceed to business, which was agreed to; and the president appointed as such committee, Senators Tuttle, Beardsley, and Fellows."

Messrs. Wright and Howell were chosen United States Senators Tuesday, January 18, 1870, one week and one day after the temporary organization. This was a case, therefore, in which the senate met on Monday, and notified the house of its organization on Tuesday and a senator was elected on the next Tuesday thereafter, which is a precisely parallel case to that of the election of Mr. Dubois.

Again, in 1872, the senate of Iowa met Monday, January 8. A few temporary officers were chosen on that day, but the senators were not sworn. On Tuesday, January 9, the senators were sworn and all the permanent officers were chosen. The following proceedings, as shown by the journal, was then had:

"Senator McNutt moved that a committee of two be appointed to inform the house that the senate was organized and ready for business, which motion prevailed, and Senators McNutt and Boomer were appointed such committee."

The house of representatives met January 8, 1872; some temporary officers were chosen, but the representatives were not sworn. On Tuesday, January 9, the journal shows the following proceeding was had:

"On motion of Mr. Irish, Messrs. Campbell and Hewitt were appointed a committee to wait upon the senate and notify them that the house was organized and ready to proceed to business."

William B. Allison was elected United States Senator Tuesday, January 16, 1872, and in joint convention was duly declared elected Wednesday, January 17, 1872, another case parallel with that of the election of Mr. Dubois.

The same thing occurred in the Iowa legislature January 14, 1878.

OATH NOT NECESSARY.

But objection is made by the contestant that no oath of office was administered either to the secretary pro tempore of the senate or to the chief clerk of the house of representatives on Monday, December 8, 1890. But in the judgment of your committee, no oath of office was then required, either by the Constitution of the United States, by the constitution of Idaho, or by any statute, Federal or State. It is provided in the Federal Constitution that certain State officers shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. Article 6 of the Federal Constitution contains the following provision:

"The senators and representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

While this clause of the Constitution of the United States requires members of the State legislatures to be sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, it does not require them to be sworn to support the State constitution, nor is there in it any requirement whatever that any officers of either house of the State legislature shall be sworn at all. It is only "executive and judicial officers" who are required to take the oath, and the officers of a State senate and house of representatives are neither executive nor judicial officers, they are ministerial officers. There is therefore no power vested in Congress, express or implied, which authorizes that body to prescribe an oath of office for the officers of either house of a State legislature. The act of Congress of June 1, 1789, third section, provides as follows:

"And the members of the several State legislatures and all executive and judicial officers of the several States, who shall be chosen or appointed after the said first day of August, shall, before they proceed to execute the duties of their respective offices, take the foregoing oath or affirmation."

This was simply making operative as to the members of the State legislatures and executive and judicial officers of the States, the provision of the Federal Constitution on that subject, and therefore was clearly valid; but Congress having no power under the Constitution to embrace within its scope officers of the respective houses of the State legislature as such, who are not executive or judicial officers, did not include in the legislation such officers of the respective houses in the class who should be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States. Each house, therefore, of the legislature of Idaho having the power to make its own rules, possessed the exclusive power and right to determine whether its officers shall or shall not be sworn.

Your committee are therefore of the opinion that neither by the Constitution of the United States nor the constitution of the State of Idaho, nor by any statute, was the secretary pro tempore of the senate or the chief clerk of the house of representatives required to be sworn in order to make good the organization of these respective bodies or of the legislature, within the meaning of the term "organization" as used in the Revised Statutes. The lieutenant-governor presided in the senate; he had already been sworn into office. The speaker of the house of representatives was sworn in on Monday, December 8, 1890.

The only tribunal to determine whether the secretary pro tempore of the senate should or should not be sworn was the senate itself, and until the senate was organized it could not possibly pass upon the question, and the same is true of the house of representatives of the State of Idaho. If, after organization had been completed, either or both of the houses had determined, by rule or otherwise, that the respective officers of their houses should be sworn, this fact could not possibly vitiate an organization. It is a fact, therefore, as your committee find, that all the offices of each house created in accordance with the State constitution were duly filled on Monday, December 8, 1890, and these, moreover, were all the offices that were necessary or in any manner required to enable the legislature and each house thereof to exercise its and their appropriate functions.

Some other and additional officers, doubtless were necessary to enable this to be done with greater celerity, ease, and dignity; but these were not essential to the full exercise of every legislative function, nor were they necessary to an organization such as is contemplated by the statute.

THE TERRITORIAL STATUTE NOT APPLICABLE, BESIDES IT IS MERELY DIRECTORY.

It is suggested by the contestant, Mr. Clagett, that an old Territorial statute of the late Territory of Idaho requiring officers of the respective houses of the legislature of the late Territory to be sworn is still in force and applicable to the officers of the respective houses of the legislature of the State of Idaho. It is a matter of very grave doubt, in the first place, whether the statute referred to can be held to be in force and applicable to the officers of the legislature of a State. Your committee believe it can not be, for the reason that the offices of clerks of a Territorial legislative council and house are different offices from those of secretary pro tempore of a State senate and of chief clerk of a State house of representatives, and therefore the Territorial statute does not apply.

Inasmuch as each house of the State legislature has the right to determine as to its own organization, as to the number and kind of organs it shall have to represent its action, record its decrees, and aid in the transaction of its business, and as it is conceded there is no constitutional requirement, either Federal or State, such a statute, if applicable at all, must be regarded as merely directory; and your committee are clearly of the opinion that a failure of compliance with its provisions would in no manner affect the validity of an otherwise valid organization.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR, PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE, SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND CHIEF CLERK OF THE HOUSE ALL CERTIFIED THAT TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, WAS THE SECOND TUESDAY AFTER THE ORGANIZATION.

That the leading officers, respectively, of the two houses of the Idaho legislature were of the opinion that the legislature of that State was duly organized on Monday, December 8th, A. D. 1890, is made clearly apparent by the certificate of such officers accompanying and constituting a part of the credentials, respectively, of Messrs. Shoup, McConnell, and Dubois. This certificate is dated Boise City, Idaho, December 19, 1890, and recites in terms that Tuesday, the 16th day of December, 1890, was "the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature," and on the day following, Wednesday, at noon, December 17, 1890, both houses in joint assembly met and proceeded to vote for a United States Senator for the State of Idaho, and the same person not receiving a majority of the votes cast, said joint assembly adjourned and reconvened on Thursday, the 18th day of December, A. D. 1890, at noon and proceeded to ballot for a United States Senator, * * * and then and there Fred T. Dubois received a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly and was thereupon, by the presiding officer of the joint assembly, declared duly elected a Senator of the United States for the State of Idaho for the term to begin March 4, 1891. This certificate is signed as follows:

"Norman B. Willey, president of the Senate; F. A. Fenn, speaker of the house of representatives; Charles H. Reed, chief clerk of the house of representatives; M. C. Athey, secretary of the senate."

THE CONTESTANT, CLAGETT, CONCEDES THE CASE TO MR. DUBOIS BY HIS DEFINITION OF THE TERM "ORGANIZATION."

But the contestant, Mr. Clagett, it seems to us, concedes the case to the sitting member when, in his supplementary brief, page 5, he says:

"(5) Nor have I ever held that a State legislature is not organized within the meaning of section 14 until both houses have supplied themselves with all the officers and assistants which they may choose to provide for themselves during the session, nor even with all the official force which the laws of the State may provide where such provision is made by State law."

And then states his position to be as follows:

"I affirm that the word 'organized,' as used in this section 14, and as applied to a legislative body, is used to signify that the entire body had come into the condition where it was authorized and enabled to proceed according to settled parliamentary usage in enacting laws; and when it was endowed with the necessary official force provided by the laws of the State for the transaction of the legislative business."

While your committee do not deem it necessary to concede and do not concede that the foregoing definition is in all its essentials a proper one of the term "organization," as used in the statutes they submit that what was done by the two houses of the legislature of the State of Idaho, on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, brings the case within this definition. Each house had a presiding officer; each house had a recording officer; each house, in other words, was so organized as to authorize and enable the legislature to proceed according to parliamentary usage, and as such to perform the functions for which it was brought into existence.

Either house as then organized, and the two houses as then organized, had full power to legislate—to enact laws. Either house could have expelled a member, or performed any other function rightfully attaching to a legislative body.

"What is organization [says Coleridge] but the connection of parts in and for a whole, so that each part is at once end and means * * * to furnish with organs; to endow with the capacity for the functions of life."

If it be true, as claimed by the contestant, that a legislature is not organized within the meaning of the term organization as used in the Revised Statutes, where each house has a presiding officer and a recording officer de facto, if not de jure, and if it is further true as conceded by him, and as your committee agree that it is not necessary to an organization of a legislature within the meaning of that term as used in the Revised Statutes, that all the officers which the senate and house may deem proper to elect for convenience and the expedition of business, shall have been elected, then we repeat where is it, and when is it the line must be drawn between the two extremes, when the full requirement of the statute is met, and the organization is consummated within the meaning of the statute?

PRECEDENTS IN ORGANIZATION OF THE NATIONAL HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The power of the house of representatives of the State of Idaho under the constitution of that State, and also the power of the senate of the State of Idaho under such constitution, save and except as to its presiding officer, is identical with the power of the House of Representatives of the United States under the Federal Constitution. The provisions of the Federal Constitution, and the only provisions bearing upon the question as to when the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States is organized, are as follows:

"The House of Representative shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States. The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years. The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided. The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings. The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the State legislatures, and all the executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

As the constitution of the state of Idaho does not expressly create any office for either house, except the office of presiding officer of the senate, so the Federal Constitution does not expressly create any office for either House of Congress, except the office of President of the Senate. It does not indicate what officers the respective Houses shall choose, save and excepting that the House of Representatives shall choose "their Speaker and other officers."

It is nowhere prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, except in the case of the presiding officer of the Senate, what officers shall be chosen by each House, except that the House shall have a Speaker; neither is there any limitation of the power of each House, respectively, to elect just such officers, and as many of them as each House may see fit, save and except in the case of the presiding officer of the Senate, which is created by the Constitution, and the Speaker of the House, whom the Constitution requires shall be elected by the House.

The only provisions of the constitution of Idaho bearing upon the question when the senate or house of representatives of that State is organized are the following:

"The legislative power of the State shall be vested in a senate and house of representatives (Art. 3, Sec. 1). Each house when assembled shall choose its own officers (Art. 3, Sec. 9). The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate (Art. 4, Sec. 13). Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings (Art. 3, Sec. 13). All bills and joint resolutions passed shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective houses (Art. 3, Sec. 21). The members of the legislature shall, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, take or subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Idaho, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of senator (or representative, as the case may be) according to the best of my ability (Art. 3. Sec. 25). In case of the absence or disqualification of the lieutenant-governor, from any cause which applies to the governor, or when he shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the lieutenant-governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed (Art. 4, Sec. 13)."

Thus it will be seen that the provisions of the constitution of Idaho, in so far as they relate to the officers of the two houses of the legislature, are identical with those of the Federal Constitution relating to the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States. In each case the presiding officer of the senate is designated by the constitution. In the case of the constitution of Idaho the lieutenant-governor shall be the president of the senate, while under the Federal Constitution the Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate.

Under the State constitution, "each house, when assembled, shall choose its own officers;" while under the Federal Constitution it is prescribed that "the House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers." In the case of the two Houses of Congress, therefore, the only officers prescribed or designated are (1) the President of the Senate, and (2) in the case of the House, a Speaker; while under the constitution of the State of Idaho, the presiding officer of the senate is the only officer named in the constitution. As to all other officers in both cases, namely, in the House of Congress and in the two houses of the legislature of the State of Idaho, the question as to the number and character of officers to be selected by the respective houses is left entirely to the discretion of the houses themselves, except it may be very properly said, there is an implied power that each house shall elect a chief clerk or other similar officer, whose duty it shall be to keep a record of the proceedings of the house.

In this view of the case it becomes interesting to inquire what officers the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States have decided to be essential to the organization of those bodies. It appears from the record of the fifty-one Houses of Representatives which have assembled since the organization of the Government eleven declared themselves organized and ready for the transaction of legislative business before the election of any officer other than Speaker, while twenty others were ready for the transaction of business and so declared themselves before the election of any officers except Speaker and Clerk. One House declared itself organized before any officers had been elected except Speaker, Clerk, and Sergeant-at-Arms.

Only nineteen Houses of Representatives out of fifty-one have elected all their officers before announcing themselves organized and ready to proceed to business. The Senate has at different times for a period aggregating thirty-two days transacted its ordinary business with the office of Secretary vacant. On not less, therefore, than eleven different occasions has the House of Representatives of the United States decided, and in this decision the Senate and the President have acquiesced, that it is an organized House when a quorum of the Representatives have assembled, taken the oath of office, and chosen a presiding officer.

The case under consideration, it will be conceded, is infinitely stronger. Inasmuch as in the senate of the State there was a presiding officer de jure, duly installed and exercising his functions, and also a secretary, pro tempore, while in the house there were not only duly elected a speaker and a chief clerk, each of whom entered on the duties of his respective office on that date, but all the other officers of the house that ever were elected during the whole session, save and except a chaplain, were elected on December 8. The House of Representatives has decided in at least thirty-three cases that it is an organized House when a quorum of the Representatives have assembled, taken the oath of office, and chosen presiding and reporting officers. Each and every one of these decisions must be held to be an authority in opposition to the contention that the election of all the officers of each branch of a legislature is essential to the organization of such legislature within the meaning of section 14 of the Revised Statutes.

Your committee, however, do not by any means base their decision in this case solely or at all on the House precedents, but rather upon the construction your committee place upon the provisions of the statute as an original proposition now before the Senate for the first time for its decision.

THE IDEA THAT THE LEGISLATURE WAS NOT ORGANIZED ON MONDAY, DECEMBER 8, A. D., 1890, AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

So far as appears from the journals of either senate, house, or joint assembly no protest based on the ground that the legislature was not organized on Monday, December, 8, 1890, or that the organization did not occur till Tuesday, December 9, was ever made by anyone, nor was that question ever suggested by anyone opposed to the election of Mr. Dubois, or anyone else, until long after December 18, 1890, the date when he claims to have been elected. Not until February 6, A. D. 1891, was the question ever mooted, so far as appears from any record in the journal of either house of the legislature of the State of Idaho, that the organization of the legislature had not taken place until Tuesday, December 9, 1890.

Prior to that date, however, on January 10, 1891, a protest against the election of Mr. Fred. T. Dubois was presented to the Senate of the United States and on that date referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. This protest was signed by 23 members of the legislature of the State of Idaho. It contains no date, nor is there any evidence in the record tending to show the date when this protest was signed. It is fair to presume, therefore, that the same was signed at or about the time or shortly before the time when the same was presented to the Senate.

This protest contains the first intimation, so far as appears from any evidence submitted to your committee, except as hereinafter stated, that the date of the organization of the legislature was questioned, or in which it was claimed that the organization did not take place on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, as had up to that date been assumed by the whole legislature, and which fact had been certified to twice, on two different dates, by the governor and secretary of state, and also once by the speaker and chief clerk of the house and the secretary pro tempore of the senate. And even this protest virtually concedes the organization of the house of representatives on Monday, December 8, but insists that the senate did not organize on that date and claims it was not organized until Tuesday, the 9th day of December, 1890.

Nor was this protest, it will be observed, the action of the legislature or of either house thereof, nor was it ever made a part of the record proceedings of the legislature or either house thereof; and not until February 6, A. D. 1891, just fifty days after the date on which Mr. Dubois claims to have been elected, was the question ever raised by either house to the effect that the legislature of the State had not been organized on Monday, December 8, and then the question was only incidentally raised in a preamble and resolution adopted by the senate on that date—the recital in the preamble being to the effect that the legislature was organized on Tuesday, December 9, 1890.

Various other matters were recited in the preamble to the resolution, such as that the State constitution and the admission act required that two United States Senators should be elected within ten days after the organization of the legislature; that such legislature had, on the 16th day of December, 1890, voted for a United States Senator in the two houses, acting separately, and thereafter, as provided by law, met in joint assembly on December 18, and within ten days after its organization elected, in the manner provided by law, the honorables George L. Shoup and William J. McConnell United States Senators, and thereupon immediately proceeded to vote for Hon. Fred T. Dubois for the term beginning March 4, 1891, in advance of the drawing for terms by the two Senators elected in advance of the time fixed by law, and without first voting in the two houses, acting separately, and against the protest of the members of the joint assembly, the preamble finally concluding as follows: "After full consideration of the facts, it is the opinion of the legislature that if the alleged election of said Hon. Fred T. Dubois is not void, there is at least grave doubt as to its validity," after which followed the resolution, which is as follows:

"Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring): That at the hour of 12 o'clock meridian of the first legislative day after the passage of this resolution the legislature will proceed to elect a United States Senator to succeed Hon. William J. McConnell, for the term beginning March 4, 1891, and that such election shall be conducted in all respects in the manner provided in section 15 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Then followed five days subsequently, February 11, 1891, the voting for and alleged election of the contestant, Mr. Clagett.

It is very plain to your committee that even at this time no reliance whatever was placed upon the question now urged as the one on which main reliance is placed, namely: That the legislature was not organized on Monday, December 8, as claimed by Mr. Dubois.

The real ground of this protest evidently was that the legislature had no right to elect a third Senator until after the drawing had taken place between Senators Shoup and McConnell.

It is true John S. Gray, a member of the senate of the State legislature of Idaho, in an ex parte affidavit made on the 19th day of February, A. D. 1891, and attached to the memorial of Mr. William H. Clagett, the contestant, states that he, on December 18, 1890, when the joint assembly met, opposed the resolution offered by Senator Gunn to go into the election of the third Senator at that time, and urged several objections, among others, as he states, that the legislature was not organized until December 9, 1890; but the record of the proceedings of the joint assembly of that date, filed with your committee by Mr. Clagett, the contestant, fails to disclose any opposition, either on the part of Senator Gray or any other member upon such grounds. The following is the full record of the proceedings of this joint assembly, as appears from the journal filed with your committee:

"JOINT SESSION.

"The joint session of the two houses was called to order by the lieutenant-governor, the president of the senate.

"The roll of the senate then called by the secretary of the senate.

"All present.

"The chief clerk then called the roll of the house.

"All present.

"The chief clerk of the house read from the journal of the house of yesterday that portion relating to the joint assembly; which was approved.

"Senator Gunn offered the following resolution:

"'Resolved, by the joint assembly of the senate and house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho, That we proceed to elect two United States Senators to fill vacancies, and that after such elections we immediately proceed to elect one United States Senator to fill vacancy occurring March the 4th, 1891.'"

"Senator Gray then offered the following amendment:

"I move to amend the resolution to read as follows: "That we do now proceed to elect one Senator from North Idaho, and then proceed to elect one Senator from South Idaho, to fill vacancies now existing.'"

"Senator Gunn raised the point of order that the amendment was not in order; which was sustained by the chair.

"Senator Gray then withdrew his amendment, and offered the following as a substitute for the original resolution:

"I move that the resolution read as follows: 'That we proceed to elect two Senators to fill the vacancies now existing.'"

"The question being on the adoption of the substitute, the ayes and nays were called for and taken, with the following result:

"SENATE ROLL CALL.

"Ayes—Branstetter, De Lamar, Dempsey, Finch, Gray, Jewell, Langrishe, White; total, 8.

"Nays—Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells, Wing; total, 10.

"HOUSE ROLL CALL.

"Ayes—Armstrong, Ballentine, Cameron, Casey, Dryden, Emory, Hanley, Hawkins, Irwin, Jones, Martin, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., Smith, B. H., Sperry, Steunenberg; total, 17.

"Nays—Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, King, Lyons, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Suydam, and Swanger; total, 19.

"Total ayes in all, 25.

"Total nays in all, 29.

"And so the substitute was rejected.

"The question recurring on the original resolution, the ayes and nays were taken, with the following result:

"ROLL CALL OF SENATE.

"Ayes—Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells, Wing; total, 10.

"Nays—Branstetter, De Lamar, Dempsey, Finch, Gray, Jewell, Langrische, White; total, 8.

"ROLL CALL OF HOUSE.

"Ayes—Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, King, Lyons, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Suydam, Swanger; total, 19.

"Nays—Armstrong, Ballentine, Cameron, Casey, Dryden, Emery, Hanley, Hawkins, Irwin, Jones, Martin, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., Smith, B. H., Sperry, Steunenberg; total, 17.

"Total ayes in all, 29.

"Total nays in all, 25.

"And so the resolution was adopted.

"The president directed that the joint assembly proceed to the election of a United States Senator to fill an existing vacancy by a viva voce vote of each member present.

"The rolls of the respective houses were then called, with the following result:

"Total number of votes, 54; of which George L. Shoup received 31, William H. Clagett received 12, Alexander E. Mayhew received 10, W. J. McConnell received 1.

"Those voting for George L. Shoup were: Messrs. Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, and Wells, of the senators; and Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Emery, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, King, Lyon, Martin, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Smith, W. A., Suydam, and Swanger, of the house—31.

"Those voting for William H. Clagett were: Messrs. De Lamar, Finch, Gray, and Langrische, of the senate; and Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Casey, Hanley, Hawkins, Porter, Scofield, and Sperry, of the house—12.

"Those voting for Alexander E. Mayhew were: Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsay, Jewell, and White, of the senate; and Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, Irwin, Jones, Smith, B. H., and Steunenberg, of the house—10.

"Mr. Wing of the senate voting for William H. McConnell.

"George L. Shoup having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared duly elected United States Senator.

"Mr. Emery moved to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays were called and taken, with the following result:

"ROLL CALL OF SENATE.

"Ayes—Branstetter, De Lamar, Dempsay, Finch, Gray, Jewell, Langrische, White; total, 8.

"Nays—Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells, Wing; total, 10.

"ROLL CALL OF HOUSE.

"Ayes—Armstrong, Ballentine, Cameron, Casey, Dryden, Emery, Hanley, Hawkins, Jones, King, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., Smith, B. H., and Steunenberg; total, 15.

"Nays—Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, Lyons, Martin, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Sperry, Suydam, Swanger, Mr. Speaker; total, 20.

"Ayes in all, 23.

"Nays in all, 30.

"And so the motion to adjourn was lost.

"The joint assembly then proceeded to the election of a United States Senator to fill the other existing vacancy.

"SECOND BALLOT.

"The rolls of the respective houses were then called with the following results:

"Total number of votes cast, 54; of which W. J. McConnell received 29, Wm. H. Clagett received 15, and Geo. Ainslie received 10.

"Those voting for W. J. McConnell were: Messrs. Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells, and Wing, of the senate; and Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, Lyon, Martin, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Suydam, and Swanger, of the house—29.

"Those voting for W. H. Clagett were: Messrs. De Lamar, Finch, Gray, Langrische, of the senate; and Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Casey, Emery, Hanley, Hawkins, King, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., and Sperry, of the house—15.

"Those voting for Mr. Ainslie were: Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsay, Jewell, and White, of the senate; and Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, Irwin, Jones, Smith, B. H., and Steunenberg, of the house—10.

"Mr. McConnell having received a majority of all the votes cast was declared duly elected United States Senator.

"Senator Gray moved to adjourn, upon which the ayes and nays were called for and taken, with the following result:

"ROLL CALL OF SENATE.

"Ayes—Branstetter, De Lamar, Dempsay, Finch, Gray, Jewell, Langrische, White, and Wing; total, 9.

"Nays—Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells; total, 9.

"HOUSE ROLL CALL.

"Ayes—Armstrong, Ballentine, Cameron, Casey, Dryden, Emery, Hanley, Hawkins, Irvine, Jones, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., Smith, B. H., Sperry, Steunenberg; total, 16.

"Nays—Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, King, Lyons, Martin, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Suydam, and Swanger; total, 20.

"Total of all ayes, 25.

"Total of all nays, 29.

"And so the motion to adjourn was lost.

"The joint assembly then proceeded to the election of a United States Senator, whose term should begin March 1, 1891.

"By request of Senator Gray his objection to the election of a third United States Senator is entered on the journal.

"THIRD BALLOT.

"The rolls of the respective houses were called with the following result:

"Total number of votes cast, 54; of which Fred T. Dubois received 32, Wm. H. Clagett received 12, and John Haley received 10.

"Those voting for Mr. Dubois were: Messrs. Brigham, Gunn, McPherson, Rogers, Shoup, Smith, Underwood, Weiler, Wells, and Wing, of the senate; and Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Casey, Ethel, Fenn, Frederickson, Goodnight, Green, Hixon, King, Lyons, Martin, Merrell, Mills, Monroe, Price, Pyeatt, Ramsey, Scattaboe, Sperry, Suydam, and Swanger, of the house—32.

"Those voting for Wm. H. Clagett were: Messrs. De Lamar, Finch, Gray, and Langrische, of the senate; and Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Emery, Hanley, Hawkins, Porter, Scofield, Smith, W. H., of the house—12.

"Those voting for Mr. Haley were: Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsay, Jewell, and White, of the senate; and Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, Irwin, Jones, Smith, B. H., and Steunenberg, of the house—10.

"Mr. Dubois, having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared duly elected United States Senator for the term commencing March 1, 1891.

"On motion of Mr. Wells the joint assembly dissolved.

"HOUSE IN SESSION.

"Mr. Speaker in chair.

"On motion of Mr. Green the house adjourned.

"F. A. FENN,
"Speaker.

"Attest:
"CHAS. H. REED, Chief Clerk."

It will be seen from this record that the only protest against the resolution of Senator Gunn, made by Senator Gray, was first, he moved to amend the resolution by providing that the joint convention should then proceed to elect one Senator from north Idaho, and then proceed to elect one Senator from south Idaho to fill vacancies then existing. This amendment was ruled out of order by the chair and was thereupon withdrawn by Senator Gray, who then offered as a substitute the following:

"That we proceed to elect two senators to fill vacancies now existing."

This subtitute was rejected—25 ayes, 29 noes. Senator Gunn's resolution was then adopted. This seems to be the only protest offered to the resolution of Senator Gunn by Senator Gray, and no other protest or objection seems to have been made by any other member of the joint assembly.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF IDAHO CERTIFIED TWICE UNDER HIS HAND AND THE GREAT SEAL OF STATE THAT MR. DUBOIS WAS DULY ELECTED SENATOR THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, A. D. 1890, AND THAT THE PRECEDING TUESDAY WAS THE SECOND TUESDAY AFTER THE ORGANIZATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

But the governor of the State of Idaho, Hon. Norman B. Willey, although he on the 14th day of February, 1891, signed the credentials of the contestant certifying to his election as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891, had previously to that, first on the 19th day of December, 1890, in connection with the speaker of the house, and the chief clerks, respectively, of each house certified that the election of Mr. Dubois for the same term had taken place on Thursday, the 18th day of December, A. D. 1890, and that the preceding Tuesday was the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature, and also had on the 23d day of December, 1890, certified over his own signature as follows:

"That at a joint session of the senate and house of representatives of said State, duly convened and held at Boise City, Idaho, the capital of said State, on the 18th day of December, 1890, a majority of the members of the senate and house of representatives being present and voting, Fred. T. Dubois received a majority of all the votes cast at said joint session for Senator for the State of Idaho for the full term, commencing March 4, A. D. 1891, and was duly elected and so declared elected as said Senator for said term by the presiding officers of said joint session as provided by law.

"Given under my hand and the seal of the State of Idaho the day and year first above written.

NORMAN B. WILLEY,
"Governor.

"By the governor:
"A. J. PINKHAM,
"Secretary of State."

THERE WAS A VOTE IN THE SEPARATE HOUSES ON THE SECOND TUESDAY AFTER THE ORGANIZATION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Some objection is made that a vote was not taken in the houses separately prior to the convening of the joint assembly. This is incorrect. The record filed with your committee shows that senate concurrent resolution No. 3 was adopted by both houses. This resolution was as follows, having been offered by Mr. Gunn in the Senate:

"Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the senate and house of representatives proceed to elect, as provided by law, United States Senators at the hour of 12 o'clock m., on Tuesday, the 16th day of December, 1890;"

Which was on that date, December 12, on motion of Mr. Gunn, referred to the committee on judiciary, of which Senator Gray was chairman. On the following day, December 13, 1890, Senator Gray, from the committee on judiciary, submitted the following report:

"SENATE CHAMBER, December 13, 1890.

"Mr. PRESIDENT: The judiciary committee, to whom was referred senate concurrent resolution No. 3, that the senate and house of representatives proceed to elect, as provided by law, United States Senators at the hour of 12 o'clock m., on Tuesday, December 16, 1890, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

"GRAY, Chairman.

The resolution was then, December 13, 1890, taken up, considered, and on motion of Senator Gunn adopted, and, so far as the record shows, without any opposition. It was sent to the house on December 16, and at 11:30 o'clock a. m. the same came up for consideration. Mr. Stenuenberg moved that the rules be suspended and the resolution read a third time and placed on its final passage. On this motion 35 votes were cast in the affirmative, the votes of all the members constituting the house of representatives, save and except one, Representative Mills, who was noted absent.

So the rules were suspended, the resolution was read a third time, and the question being, "Shall the resolution pass?" the ayes and noes were taken, with the following result: Ayes 35, being the votes of all the members present, and all the members constituting the house of representatives except 1; noes 0.

The hour of 12 o'clock meridian then having arrived on December 16, 1890, the speaker announced as the next business in order the balloting for United States Senators, and directed the clerk to call the roll. The following is the journal proceedings of the house of that date:

"The roll being called, 35 votes were cast, of which

"Wm. H. Clagett received 6.

"Fred T. Dubois received 13.

"Edward A. Stevenson received 6.

"Wm. J. McConnell received 5.

"Geo. L. Shoup received 5.

"The members voting for Mr. Clagett were: Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Hanley, Porter, Scofield, and Sperry—6.

"Those voting for Mr. Dubois were: Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Frederickson, Goodnight, Hixon, King, Lyon, Merrell, Monroe, Price, Ramsey, and Mr. Speaker—13.

"Those voting for Mr. Stevenson were: Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, Irwin, Jones, Smith, B. H., and Steunenberg—6.

"Those voting for Mr. McConnell were: Messrs. Casey, Green, Hawkins, Martin, and Scattaboe—5; and "Those voting for Mr. Shoup were: Messrs. Emery, Porter, Pyeatt, Smith, W. H., and Swanger.

"Mr. Mills being absent.

"And so the speaker announced that the house of representatives has failed to give a majority of the whole number of votes cast to any person.

"On motion of Mr. Emery, the house took a recess until 2:30 o'clock p. m.

"On motion of Mr. Caldwell, the house adjourned.

"F. A. FENN, Speaker.

"Attest:

"CHAS. H. REED, Chief Clerk.

The record discloses the following proceedings of the separate vote in the Senate on December 16 at 12 o'clock meridian, the time fixed by the foregoing resolution:

NINTH DAY.

"SENATE CHAMBER,
"Boise, December 16, 1890.

"The senate met at 11:30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment.

"Mr. President in the chair.

"Prayer by the chaplain.

"Roll called.

"All present except Mr. De Lamar, who was excused.

"Journal of yesterday was read, corrected and approved.

* * * * * *

"At 12 o'clock meridian the president announced the business before the senate to be the consideration of the subject contained in senate concurrent resolution No. 3, to wit, the election of United States Senators.

"After the reading of that portion of the United States Revised Statutes relating thereto, the senate proceeded to vote for United States Senator. Upon calling the roll, the vote stood as follows:

"Those who voted for Fred T. Dubois were Messrs. Rogers, Smith, Underwood, and Weiler—4.

"Those who voted for George L. Shoup were Messrs. Gray, McPherson, and James M. Shoup—3.

"Those who voted for W. J. McConnell were Messrs. Brigham, Gunn, Wells, and Wing—4.

"Those who voted for Wm. H. Clagett were Messrs. Finch and Langrische—2.

"Those who voted for Mr. Ed. A. Stevenson were Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsay, Jewell, and White—4.

"Whole number of votes cast, 17. Necessary to a choice, 9.

"The president announced that not a majority of all the senators elected having voted for United States Senator, therefore there has been no election.

"Mr. Gunn moved that the senate do now proceed to elect a second United States Senator to fill the existing vacancy.

"Mr. Weiler moved that the senate take a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.;
"Which motion prevailed.
"Senate resumed its session at 2 o'clock p. m.,
"Mr. President in the chair.
"Roll called.
"All present except Messrs. De Lamar and Weiler.

"MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

"OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"Boise City, December 16, 1890.

"Mr. PRESIDENT: I am instructed to inform your honorable body that the house of representatives has had under consideration and has passed senate concurrent resolution No. 3, requiring the senate and house of representatives to proceed to elect United States Senators as provided by law, which are herewith transmitted.

"CHARLES H. REED,
"Chief Clerk.

"At 4:30 o'clock p. m., on motion of Mr. Gunn, the senate adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

"N. B. WILLEY,
"President of the Senate.

"Attest:
"M. C. ATHEY, Secretary."

It will be observed, therefore, that a separate vote for the United States Senators was taken in each house of the legislature of Idaho separately on Tuesday, December 16, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian; Mr. Clagett, Mr. Dubois, Mr. Shoup, and Mr. McConnell each receiving votes in each house, the voting being in pursuance of senate resolution No. 3, aforesaid, which provided not for the election of a Senator or Senators for any given or specified term, but which provided simply for the election of United States Senators as provided by law.

No person having received a majority of all the votes cast in both houses, or in fact in either house, the two houses, as provided in the Revised Statutes, met in joint assembly in the hall of the house of representatives on December 17, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian, and were called to order by the lieutenant-governor, acting in his official capacity as the president of the senate. The roll of the senate was then called by the secretary of the senate, all the senators being present. The chief clerk then called the roll of the house, all the members being present except Mr. Mills, who had been excused. The president then read from the Revised Statutes of the United States that portion relating to the election of United States Senators. The further proceedings of the joint assembly, as appears from the journal, were as follows:

"The secretary of the senate read from the journal that portion of the proceedings of yesterday relating to the ballot taken for United States Senators, and the chief clerk of the house read from the journal of the house yesterday that portion relating to the ballot for United States Senators.

"It appearing therefrom that the same person has not received a majority of all the votes in each house, the president directed that the joint assembly proceed to choose, by a viva voice vote of each member present, a Senator.

"The rolls of the respective houses were then called, with the following result:

"Total number of votes cast were 53, of which William J. McConnell received 9, William H. Clagett received 8, Geo. L. Shoup received 9, Fred T. Dubois received 17, Alexander E. Mayhew received 3, Edward A. Stevenson received 7.

"Those voting for Mr. McConnell were Messrs. Brigham, De Lamar, Gunn, Wells, and Wing, of the senate; and Messrs. Casey, Green, Martin, and Scattaboe, of the house—9.

"Those voting for Mr. Clagett were: Messrs. Finch and Langrische, of the senate; and Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Hanley, Porter, Scofield, and Sperry, of the house—8.

"Those voting for Mr. Shoup were: Messrs. Gray, McPherson, and Shoup, of the senate; and Messrs. Emery, Hawkins, Pyeatt, W. H. Smith, Suydam, Swanger, of the house—9.

"Those voting for Mr. Dubois were: Messrs. Rogers, Smith, Underwood, and Weiler, of the senate; and Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Frederickson, Goodnight, Hixson, King, Lyon, Merrell, Monroe, Price, Ramsey, and Mr. Speaker—17.

"Those voting for Mr. Stevenson were: Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsey, Jewell, and White, of the senate; and Messrs. Irwin, Jones, and B. H. Smith, of the house—7.

"And those voting for Mr. Mayhew were: Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, and Steunenberg, of the house—3.

"Absent: Mr. Mills, of the house.

"No person having received a majority of all the votes cast, Mr. Wells moved that a second vote be taken; which motion prevailed.

"SECOND BALLOT.

"The rolls of the respective houses were then called, with the following result:

"Total number of votes cast, 53; of which William J. McConnell received 5, Fred T. Dubois received 17, William H. Clagett received 8, Geo. L. Shoup received 13, Alexander E. Mayhew received 5, and Edward A. Stevenson received 5.

"Those who voted for Mr. McConnell were: Mr. Brigham, of the senate, and Messrs. Casey, Green, Martin, and Scattaboe, of the house—5.

"Those who voted for Mr. Dubois were: Messrs. Rogers, Smith, Underwood, and Weiler, of the senate; and Messrs. Briggs, Caldwell, Ethel, Frederickson, Goodnight, Hixson, King, Lyon, Merrell, Monroe, Price, Ramsey, and Mr. Speaker, of the house—17.

"Those voting for Mr. Clagett were: Messrs. Finch and Langrische, of the senate; and Messrs. Armstrong, Cameron, Hanley, Porter, Scofield, and Sperry, of the house—8.

"Those voting for Mr. Shoup were: Messrs. De Lamar, Gray, Gunn, McPherson, Shoup, Wells, and Wing, of the senate; and Messrs. Emery, Hawkins, Pyeatt, W. H. Smith, Suydam, Swanger, of the house—13.

"Those voting for Mr. Mayhew were: Messrs. Ballentine, Dryden, Irwin, Jones, and Steunenberg, of the house—5.

"Those voting for Mr. Stevenson were: Messrs. Branstetter, Dempsay, Jewell, and White of the senate; and Mr. B. H. Smith, of the house—5.

"No person having received a majority of all the votes cast, the president declared there was no election.

"On motion of Mr. Gray, of the senate, the joint assembly adjourned."

* * * * * * *

Two ballots having been taken without an election, the joint assembly of the two houses adjourned, and met again in joint assembly in the hall of the house of representatives the next day, Thursday, December 18, 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian, and proceeded to elect, and did elect, three United States Senators—Messrs. Shoup, McConnell, and Dubois. The proceedings of such joint convention are set out supra.

But conceding, for the argument, that no action was taken on the second Tuesday after the organization of the Idaho legislature by a vote separately in the two houses in regard to the third Senator who was to be elected, then such omission could in nowise affect the validity of the election of Mr. Dubois in the joint assembly if in all other respects there was a compliance with the provisions of the statute. This is made clear by the express words of the statute of July 25, 1866, now section 15 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the duty of the joint assembly, which reads as follows:

"But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, * * * etc."

This precise question was presented and decided in the case of Hart v. Gilbert in the Forty-first Congress. Senator Trumbull submitted the report of the committee, which was agreed to. The following is an abstract from this report:

"The only ground for the other objection arises from the fact that the legislature failed to take action on the 'second Tuesday after its organization,' in regard to the third Senator who was to be elected; but it took action on the subject of electing Senators, and actually voted, though unsuccessfully, on that day for persons to fill the two existing vacancies.

"The object of the act of Congress was to insure the election of Senators by the proper legislature, and to fix a time when proceedings for that purpose should be commenced and continued till the elections were effected.

"The legislature, by which the sitting members were elected, was the one chosen next preceding the term which would commence on the 4th of March, 1869, and was, therefore, the proper legislature to elect. 'The second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature,' was the time prescribed by the act of Congress for initiating the election of Senators, and that was the time when the legislature proceeded to that business. There being three Senators to elect, it took action on that day only in reference to two of them. Did its failure to take action on that day, and the two subsequent days (which were occupied in electing the first two Senators), in reference to the third Senator, render his election, in all other respects regular, invalid? The committee think not.

"The language of the law is: 'In case no person shall receive such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock meridian, of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature, and take at least one vote till a Senator shall be elected.' No formal adjournment from day to day, by vote of the joint assembly was necessary, but it was the duty of the members of each house to meet, in joint assembly, at noon of each day and vote at least once till all the Senators whom the legislature had the right to elect were chosen This is exactly what the legislature did.

"In no view which the committee can take would the petitioner be entitled to a seat in the Senate; for if the election of the sitting Senator was irregular, that of the petitioner, by the same legislature at a subsequent session, was equally so."

Again, the same question is substantially decided by the Senate in the case of the election of J. W. Flanagan and M. C. Hamilton as United States Senators from the State of Texas. That State was admitted to representation in Congress March 30, 1870. On the 22d day of February, 1870, without any previous authority from Congress, the legislature of the State elected Mr. Flanagan United States Senator for the term ending March 3, 1875, and also at the same time elected M. C. Hamilton United States Senator for two terms, namely, the term ending March 3, 1871, and the term ending March 3, 1877. Senator Stewart of Nevada, submitted the report of the committee, declaring Mr. Hamilton legally elected for the term ending March 3, 1877, and he was admitted without debate or division.

THE ELECTION OF MR. DUBOIS WAS WITHIN THE TIME FIXED BY THE ACT OF ADMISSION AND THE STATE CONSTITUTION, PROVIDED THESE PROVISIONS SHOULD BE HELD APPLICABLE TO HIS CASE.

While your committee are clearly of the opinion that the election of Mr. Dubois was valid under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, it is proper that the fact should be stated that in the event it should be held (and upon this point your committee being divided express no opinion) that an election of a Senator for the full term commencing March 4, A. D. 1891, could have been legally had under the provisions of the constitution of the State of Idaho, and of the act of Congress admitting that State into the Union, then your committee agree that Mr. Dubois's election is also valid under those provisions. These constitutional and statutory provisions changed the law as to the time within which at least the first two Senators from the State of Idaho could be elected from the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislsture, as provided in the Revised Statutes, to within ten days after its organization.

The legislature met and organized, as found by your committee, on Monday, December 8, while contestant claims the organization was not effected until Tuesday, December 9; so, in any event, inasmuch as the election of Mr. Dubois took place on Tuesday, December 18, it was within ten days after the organization of the legislature, and therefore valid, under the provisions of the State constitution and those of the act of Congress admitting the State in the Union provided they should be made applicable, as some members of your committee believe they should be, to this election.

WHEN THE ORGANIZATION TAKES PLACE ON A TUESDAY, WHEN SHOULD THE VOTING IN SEPARATE HOUSES TAKE PLACE?

In this case the claim has been made upon the part of the sitting member, Mr. Dubois, that in the event it should be held that the organization contemplated by section 14 of the Revised Statutes means necessarily a permanent organization, which in this case it is conceded did not take place until Tuesday, December 9, although consummated prior to 12 o'clock meridian of that day, that still the next Tuesday following would be, within the meaning of the fourteenth section of the Revised Statutes, the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature.

While under the view taken of this case by the committee it is not necessary to decide this question, your committee are clearly of the opinion that this contention upon the part of Mr. Dubois is not well founded. It is the opinion of your committee that in the computation of time in respect of the provisions of this statute the first day, that is, the day of organization, must in the count be excluded; consequently, where the organization takes place on a Tuesday, the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization provided in the statute would be two weeks from that date.

IMMATERIAL ISSUES.

An immaterial issue was raised in the hearing before your committee, and both parties were permitted to argue it, involving the good faith of Mr. Dubois and others in connection with certain resolutions in each of the State platforms of the two political parties in the State of Idaho in the campaign preceding the election of the first legislature in the State of Idaho, and under and in pursuance of which it is claimed that one Senator should have been chosen from northern Idaho and another from southern Idaho, the State being thus geographically divided. This, however, being a wholly immaterial matter, one which can have no possible bearing upon the legal and constitutional questions involved, and which can properly have no influence whatever in determining the legality of the election of either the sitting member or the contestant, your committee do not feel called upon to express any opinion whatever on the issue thus presented.

Counsel for Mr. Dubois has also argued in his printed brief at some length that even conceding Mr. Dubois was not legally elected, and that therefore there existed a vacancy on February 11, 1891, the date when the contestant, Mr. Clagett, claims to have been elected, that the alleged election of the latter, for sundry reasons suggested, was not legal. But as your committee find that Mr. Dubois was legally elected December 18, 1890, for the same term for which Mr. Clagett claims to have been elected February 11, 1891, it follows there was no vacancy on the latter date and it is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the questions involved in the alleged election of Mr. Clagett.

THE CONCLUSION.

In conclusion it is now conceded on all sides, and of this there can be no question, that it was not only the right but the duty of the legislature of the State of Idaho which convened Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, to elect, not only two Senators for the two then existing vacancies, but also a third Senator for the full term commencing March 4, A. D. 1891, as it was then certainly known to the legislature that there would be a vacancy for such term, and it was also known that such term would commence before another legislature of the State would be convened. Senators Shoup and McConnell were, as all concede, duly elected to fill the two then existing vacancies, while in the judgment of your committee Mr. Fred T. Dubois was at the same time, on December 18, A. D, 1890, duly and legally elected Senator for the full term commencing March 4, A. D. 1891.

It was a legal certainty from the moment of the election of Messrs. Shoup and McConnell that the term of one or the other of these Senators would expire March 4, 1891. It was at that time a legal certainty that the three classes of Senators whose terms were to expire March 4, 1891, 1893, and 1895, respectively, were required by the Federal Constitution to be equal in number as nearly as possible, and it was a legal certainty that when Senators Shoup and McConnell were sworn as Senators the classes of Senators whose terms were to expire March 4, 1893, and March 4, 1895, respectively, contained each 29 Senators, while the class of Senators whose terms were to expire March 4, 1891, contained only 28. It was therefore a legal certainty that one of the two Idaho Senators was a member of the latter class, and that, too, not by virtue of any act of the Senate, but by the operation of the Constitution itself. The function of the Senate of the United States was not to determine whether one of the two terms expired March 4, 1891, but to determine which one of the two terms expired on that day.

Your committee hold, both on construction and precedent, that the first legislature of the State of Idaho was organized on Monday, December 8, A. D. 1890, within the meaning of the term "organization," as used in the constitution of the State of Idaho, in the act of admission, and in the Revised Statutes. The election of Mr. Dubois took place on Thursday, the 18th day of December, A. D. 1890.

Tuesday, the 16th day of December, A. D. 1890, was, in the judgment of your committee, the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature of the State of Idaho. On that date a separate vote for Senator was taken viva voce in each house of the legislature as provided by the Revised Statutes. There being no election, the two houses met in joint assembly Wednesday, on the 17th day of December, A. D. 1890, at 12 o'clock meridian in pursuance of the Revised Statutes, and took two ballots for United States Senator.

There being no election, the joint assembly again reconvened at 12 o'clock meridian Thursday, December 18, A. D. 1890, all the members of the two houses save one being present and voting, at which time Mr. Fred T. Dubois received the viva voce votes of 10 senators, the whole number of senators constituting the senate of the State of Idaho being 18. He received 22 votes from as many members of the house of representatives, the whole number of members constituting the house being 36, making in all 32 votes that were cast for the sitting member, Mr. Dubois, the whole number of members of the legislature of the State of Idaho being 54.

Your committee therefore report back the following resolutions and recommend their adoption:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That Fred T. Dubois is entitled to retain the seat he now holds as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891.

Resolved, That William H. Clagett is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1891.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

It is admitted that the election held by the Idaho legislature on the 16th of December, 1890, for two Senators to fill existing vacancies from that State in the United States Senate was properly and lawfully held on that day, the application of the general regulation of such elections contained in the act of Congress of 1866 being superseded by the language of the constitution of Idaho, ratified and approved by the act of Congress admitting said State into the Union, and permitting the election of those Senators "within ten days" after the organization of the legislature.

It seems to be further admitted that the election of a third Senator by the same legislature to fill a vacancy to occur in the future, to wit, on the 3d of March, 1891, necessarily arising from the expiration of the term of the one of the two Senators elected on the said 16th day of December, 1890, which should draw the short term, was required to be held, not within ten days as prescribed above, but under the provisions of the act of Congress of 1866. The real question at issue then is whether the alleged election of F. T. Dubois was held in compliance with that act as to time and manner. If it was, Mr. Dubois is entitled to retain his seat. If not, then either W. W. Clagett is entitled to occupy the seat or else it is vacant.

The following is a copy of the statute of 1866 referred to:

"SEC. 14. The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

"SEC. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from such State, and the name of the person so voted for who receives a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house shall be entered on the journal of that house by the clerk or secretary thereof; or, if either house fails to give such majority to either person on that day, the fact shall be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house, he shall be declared duly elected Senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, and the person who receives the majority of all the votes of the joint assembly—a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting—shall be declared duly elected. If no person receives such majority on the first day the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the legislature, and shall take at least one vote until a Senator is elected.

"SEC. 16. Whenever on the meeting of the legislature of any State a vacancy exists in the representation of such State in the Senate, the legislature shall proceed on the second Tuesday after meeting and organization to elect a person to fill such vacancy in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a Senator for the full term."

It will be seen that, in pursuance of the Constitution, Congress by this act has provided regulations both for the time and the manner of electing United States Senators. The time at which the elections are to begin is "on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization" of the legislatures; the manner is prescribed to be by a viva voce vote of each member of each house of the legislature taken separately, and on failure of any candidate to receive a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take the required proceedings of voting separately, then the two houses are convened in joint assembly and proceed with the election, etc.

The members of the legislature of Idaho assembled in compliance with law at Boise

City, on Monday, the 8th of December, 1890. There can be no doubt, therefore, but that Tuesday, the 16th of the same month, was the second Tuesday after the meeting of the legislature. But the legislature is required to elect Senators on the second Tuesday, not after the meeting alone, but after "the meeting and organization." Now, let us inquire if the Idaho legislature was organized, as well as had met, on Monday, the 8th of December, 1890; for, if it was not organized until Tuesday, the 9th, both reason and authority unite to say, and in part the report admits, that Tuesday, the 16th, was not the second Tuesday after organization, but the first.

In adopting the language of the statute we have no reason to suppose that Congress attached any abstruse or unusual meaning to the word organization. On the contrary, we are to presume that they used it in its ordinary and common-sense application, such as is understood to be its universal meaning by all American communities in the formation of every class and character of representative assemblies, whether official and legal or merely popular or social. It is the comprehensive and familiar term used to describe that process by which collective bodies of the people emerge from the chaos of mere numbers into that combined unity which is necessary to efficient and concerted action.

A number of men entertaining certain opinions or desiring to do certain things meet at a certain time and place, and by common consent choose a mouthpiece who shall represent them and give utterance to their collective will, and a scribe or recording officer to record that will. We then speak of such a body as "organized," and not until then. There is, perhaps, no exception whatever to this.

No one probably ever heard of an assembly of any kind in our country being spoken of as organized until it had some one to preside over its deliberations, collect its will by an appeal to the members present, and a proper officer to record and perpetuate that will when collected and announced. To suppose an instance to the contrary would be to imagine an absurdity. We must conclude, therefore, that when Congress fixed the time from which should be computed the "second Tuesday after organization" it meant so much and such complete organization as is usually understood to be necessary for the efficient action and practical working of legislative bodies in all the American States.

It is not necessary to aver that Congress meant that the legislature should have elected and installed in office every possible officer that in its discretion it might deem necessary to its efficiency or convenience, but we hold that Congress must have meant that the organization should include, together with a presiding officer to collect and announce its will, a recording officer to preserve and perpetuate that will. And as the presiding officer was required to be sworn, so was the recording officer, and until both of these things had been done there was no organization within the meaning of the act.

The records of the two houses of the Idaho legislature show that on the first day of the session, to wit, the 8th of December, the senate took no steps toward electing any of its officers, being called together by the lieutenant-governor, who, under the constitution of the State, was ex officio its president, and a secretary pro tempore being appointed, or assuming to act by a common consent. The members were sworn in, committees were appointed to provide rules for the government of the senate, arrangements were made for the distribution of seats among the members, a resolution was adopted providing for the application of the rules of the fifteenth session of the legislative council to the government of the senate until the report of the committee on rules was adopted, and finally a committee on "organization to designate and determine the number and order of offices to be filled" was appointed, whereupon the senate adjourned until the next day.

This comprised substantially the whole of the first day's proceedings, not one act of which constituted organization, but every one of which was a step in the process of organization; which condition of disorganization is fully and explicitly acknowledged by the adoption of a resolution for the appointment of a committee for the express purpose of providing for and determining that organization.

On the next day, to wit, on Tuesday, the 9th of December, that committee on organization made the following report:

"SECOND DAY.

"SENATE CHAMBER,
"Boise City, December 9, 1890.

"Senate met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 o'clock a. m.
"Senate was opened by prayer by Rev. Mr. Gowan.
"Roll called; all present.
"The committee on organization made the following report:
"'MR. PRESIDENT: We, your committee on organization appointed to designate and determine the number and order of the offices to be filled by the senate, ask lief to report as follows:

"'1st. President pro tempore of the senate.
"'2d. Secretary of the senate.
"'3d. Assistant secretary of the senate.
"'4th. Engrossing clerk.
"'5th. Assistant engrossing clerk.
"'6th. Enrolling clerk.
"'7th. Assistant enrolling clerk.
"'8th. Two pages.
"'10th. Doorkeeper.
"'11th. Janitor.
"'12th. Chaplain.
"'Respectfully submitted.

"'J. W. BRIGHAM, Chairman.'

"Mr. Weller moved that the report be adopted.
"Which motion prevailed.
"Mr. Wells moved that the senate now proceed to the election of the officers as designated in the report of the committee on organization.
"The motion prevailed."

The officers here provided for were all elected on the same day; they were notified of their election; were required to be present in the chamber at 2 o'clock to take the oath of office; they appeared and were sworn in. Whereupon, and not before, it was moved and carried that a message be sent to the "house of representatives, informing them that the senate is now organized and ready for the transaction of business." Thus it appears that the senate of the Idaho legislature did not consider itself "organized," and, in fact, was not organized, until the afternoon session of Tuesday, December 9, 1890, when, and for the first time, it had in office the proper and necessary officers, duly sworn; whereupon it not only announced its organization to the lower branch, but announced it as well to the coördinate or executive branch of the lawmaking power of the State.

In the house of representatives almost exactly similar proceedings were had; a speaker and principal officers were elected on Monday, the 8th, but none except the speaker were sworn or inducted into office that day. On Tuesday, the 9th, the officers of the house were completed by the election of a chaplain; a committee was appointed to draft rules for the government of the house; the officers and attachés elected on the previous day were caused to appear, and the oath of office was administered to them; and then immediately, as appears by the record, and not until then, on motion of Mr. Jones, it was ordered—

"That the chief clerk notify the council (senate) that the house was permanently organized and ready to proceed to the transaction of legislative business."

Nothing can be plainer than the fact that neither house of the legislature considered itself organized until the moment when it so announced, and the attempt to evade the force of this fact by saying that the official and customary announcement of organization on a certain day does not forbid the conclusion that that organization had taken place the day previous, is the merest begging of the question, and is nothing short of trying to make an unsupported inference contradict the positive assertions of the record.

This method of announcing the formal organization of legislative bodies immediately succeeding the selection of its permanent officers has for its precedent the example of the United States House of Representatives. In the manual and digest of its rules, after providing for the method of electing a speaker, and after his election, it is stated on page 423:

"The organization of the House is then completed by the election of the officers named in Rule 2, after which the Delegates from the Territories are then called and sworn."

Rule 2 is as follows:

"There shall be elected by a viva voce vote at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States."

The manual continues—

"At this stage (immediately after such election and swearing in of officers) it is usual for the House to adopt the order that a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that ———, one of the Representatives from the State of ———, has been chosen Speaker, and that ———, a citizen of the State of ———, has been chosen Clerk, and that the House is now ready to proceed to business."

That is to say:

"Having a presiding officer to collect and announce the will of the body and a clerk to record that will, we are now ready to proceed to business—we are now organized."

Is it possible to mistake the meaning of Congress in the language of the act of 1866, in fixing the time for the election of Senators on the second Tuesday "after the meeting and organization" of the legislature? Could they have meant anything else than that that organization should consist at least of the election of speaker and clerk, both duly sworn and inducted into office, when Congress itself required not only this much, but that all the other officers mentioned in Rule 2 to have been elected, sworn, and inducted into office before formally announcing to all concerned that their organization was complete and that they were ready to proceed to business?

It must be borne in mind, too, that the evidence of the organization of the two houses of the Idaho legislature furnished by their records here referred to is not only possessed of all the ordinary weight attached to the solemn records of legislative or judicial bodies, but is peculiarly convincing by reason of the fact that its statements were written down before any of these contentions, disreputable combinations and bitter feuds growing out of the Senatorial elections had arisen, and before their significance could have in any way been anticipated; and in this unbiased way, in this natural way, the truth incontestably appears that neither house of that legislature was organized on Monday, the 8th of December; that neither house treated itself as organized or claimed that it was organized, or attempted to do any act except those which would lead up to "organization" until Tuesday, the 9th of December, 1890.

Then, having elected and sworn in the officers which they thought necessary, in obedience to the recommendations of a special committee appointed for that very purpose, then, and not till then, did they declare themselves organized and ready to proceed with the public business.

An attempt is made to show that the language of the statute is complied with by maintaining that a temporary organization is sufficient and equivalent to permanent organization. This we do not think is tenable. The law only speaks of organization; one state or condition of readiness for the legal transaction of business. It must mean the real, the complete.

It is not possible for any body to put itself into shape for effective action without going through some preliminary steps which must be permitted by sufferance and common consent. For example, a multitude desires to resolve itself into a deliberative body. The only possible way by which this can be done is for some one of the number to propose that A. B. be requested to take the chair, or to preside. Now, the mover of this proposition does so by virtue of no legal right or authority, all in the assemblage being upon an absolute equality. But some one must take the initial step or organization will never be effected. So by common consent he puts the machine in motion and calls for an expression of opinion or the will of the multitude on his own authority, and announces the result. A. B. is chosen chairman and organization is begun.

Now, as well might it be said that the meeting was organized when this volunteer assumed to control its proceedings and take the sense of its members, as to say that an officer called upon temporarily to perform certain duties in the legislature, for the purpose of testing the sense of the body as to who its officers should be, constituted an organization within the meaning of the act of Congress. This was not organization, but only one further step toward it. A temporary organization, as its name imports, is merely a makeshift, a tide-over, a stepping-stone to the real organization which the act of 1866 contemplated; a mere mold to hold the soft material in shape until it hardens into self-sustaining consistency.

Viewed in another sense, a temporary organization is in terms an incomplete organization, and an incomplete organization is no more an "organization" contemplated or required by the act than is a part of anything the thing itself. A body can not be said to be organized when it is admittedly only partly organized; and if there be no distinction between the organization of a body and the necessary unavoidable initial steps which lead up to it, then the whole force and purpose of the act of Congress is rendered indefinite and worthless, since there are a score of such preliminary steps, each one of which might be counted as "organization," and from which the time required by the statute might be computed.

Nor do we think that the capacity of a legislature to enact a law a fair test of its condition of "organization" within the meaning of the act of Congress. If such had been its meaning there would have been no necessity for the insertion of that word. In fact, it would have been quite as effective and much more definite if the words had been "on the second Tuesday after the meeting of the legislature," for the body of men elected for that purpose would not in fact become the "legislature" until they had put themselves in shape to discharge their constitutional functions.

This was the original language of the bill, but on the suggestion of Mr. Fessenden, Mr. Clark, who had the bill in charge, agreed to add the words "and organization," in order to meet the cases where organization did not immediately ensue after the meeting of the legislature. (See Globe, first session, Thirty-ninth Congress, pages 3727, 3728.)

Congress, therefore, saw fit to use the words, "meeting and organization," and they must have meant by it to fix the time of electing Senators to depend upon some other stage of legislative existence than that of its first capacity to enact a law.

Organization as applied to all deliberate assemblies in our country had a well-known meaning of universal use, and designated a stage in the existence of the assembly where it was supplied with all the necessary adjuncts of legislation, and nothing more was required to enable it to discharge its functions. Again, if the capacity to enact a law was a sufficient organization to comply with the statute, then the obvious intention of the lawmakers could be easily defeated. For it is not to be denied that a legislature has the power to enact a law without either a speaker or a clerk, unless required to have such officers by the State constitution.

Yet, in requiring that there should be an organization as well as a meeting of the legislature at least two Tuesdays prior to its election of Senators, Congress plainly precluded such an idea, and described the event from which the time was to be computed as the organization of the legislature in the plain, simple, and usual manner of such bodies.

WHO HAS THE RIGHT TO DECIDE WHEN A LEGISLATURE IS ORGANIZED?

The Constitution of the United States provides that Senators shall be chosen by the legislatures of the States, respectively, and grants to Congress the power of regulating the "time" and "manner" of so choosing them. The act of Congress of July, 1866, has fixed the time for initiating the proceedings for such choosing as the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the legislature next preceding, etc. Clearly the duty imposed by the Constitution is upon a lawmaking body; upon that department of the government having the legislative function, and when the act speaks of the organization of that body, it must, by every reasonable intendment, mean that systematized arrangement of constituent and independent parts, or organization of each house, which by the determination of each house shall be appropriate and necessary for the discharge of its legislative function.

What stage, or degree, or kind of organization may be appropriate and necessary for this purpose is not for the Senate of the United States to decide. That must belong to the two houses, respectively, of the legislature, and is necessarily exclusive. It is competent for either house to decide that an organization less complete than that sanctioned by the universal usage of American Commonwealths shall be the organization through and by which it will discharge its legislative duties. It might be determined that a presiding officer and clerk elected de novo each day should be the final method of organization. Or, if the constitution did not otherwise provide, that it would impose on the presiding officer the duty of keeping the journal.

Such organization, it is true, would be anomalous, violation of established usage, and demoralizing, and not to be presumed as the will of a legislative body, except upon the clearest proof that such was its determination.

But the point we are making is that it is exclusively within the competence of each branch of a State legislature, except so far as it is restrained by the constitution or laws of the State, to decide for itself what its final or legislative organization shall be. When that determination clearly appears, either by express declaration or by conduct of business, or by both, then it is not competent for any other body or person or department of Government to determine otherwise.

It is a clearly established fact in the present case that both houses of the legislature of Idaho were merely proceeding on the 8th of December in orderly fashion towards a final legislative organization, such an organization as they considered necessary and appropriate for the performance of their legislative functions. The evidence is overwhelming that neither branch considered the so-called temporary organization made on the 8th as anything more than a proper and necessary step in the process of reaching that final legislative organization which was accomplished on Tuesday the 9th. What either branch might have considered this first stage in the proceeding is not the question, but what did it consider it?

Not only do we have the conduct and action of each branch, as set forth in their respective journals, as evidencing its determination in this regard, but we have their declarations, as set forth in resolutions adopted by each house, expressing and confirming that determination.

In addition to the resolutions adopted by each house separately on Tuesday, December 9, to inform the other that it was permanently organized, we have the resolutions of the two houses passed on Tuesday, December 9, after the reception of the messages from the houses, respectively, pursuant to the resolutions referred to, as follows:

"Mr. Mills offered the following resolution; which was adopted:

"'Resolved, That a committee of three (3) members be appointed by the speaker to join a like committee which may be appointed by the senate to wait upon his excellency, the governor, and inform him that the legislature is organized and now in session and ready to receive any communications he may be pleased to transmit.'

"The speaker appointed as such committee Messrs. Monroe, Porter, and Ballentine.

"Mr. Wells moved that a committee of two be appointed to act with a like committee of the house to wait upon his excellency, the governor, to inform him that the legislature is now organized and ready to receive any communication he desires to make.

"The motion prevailed."

It is idle, therefore, to contend that the partial and incomplete organization o either house on Monday was sufficient to enable it to perform legislative business if it chose to do so, in the face of the fact that both houses determined that a further and more complete stage of the process, not attained until Tuesday, was necessary for that purpose.

INCIDENTAL REFERENCES NOT CONCLUSIVE OF THE FACT OF ORGANIZATION.

It can not surely be maintained with seriousness that the incidental recital of a conclusion by a presiding or other officer of the body is entitled to greater weight than the direct and solemn resolution of the body itself. Yet the committee insist that the recitals of President Willey and Speaker Fenn, contained in their certificate, made on the 19th of December, 1890, that the houses were organized on Monday, the 8th, are conclusive, although the two houses themselves announced their organization on the 9th at the moment of its accomplishment, and subsequently, on the 9th of February, 1891, by a joint resolution, solemnly declared that their organization was made on Tuesday, the 9th of December, 1890.

THE AFTERTHOUGHT CONCERNING THE WRONG DAY NOT MATERIAL.

In answer to the allegations of the report that the charge that the election of Dubois as Senator was held on the wrong day was merely an afterthought and was not suggested by anyone at the time, it seems to the undersigned to be sufficient to simply remind the Senate that when a time and place are fixed by law for holding an election the election must be held then and there, and nowhere else, or it is void. Consent of all the voters can not change it, and the fact that no one objected makes not the slightest difference if in fact the time was not the day prescribed by the law.

CONGRESSIONAL AND STATE PRECEDENTS.

The conclusion reached by the committee that Mr. Dubois was elected is based entirely upon the contention that the Idaho legislature was organized within the meaning of section 14, on Monday, December 8, because on that day each house had a permanent presiding officer, duly chosen and qualified, and a permanent clerk in the house, duly chosen but not qualified, and a secretary pro tempore in the senate, who was never, as secretary pro tempore, qualified by being sworn into office. In other words, that each house was organized within the meaning of section 14, because it had a permanent presiding officer and acting clerk in the house, and a permanent presiding officer and temporary secretary in the senate. To support this contention the committee in its report cites certain alleged precedents in the House of Representatives and the legislature of Iowa in the years 1870 and 1872.

We regret that the committee did not make a more careful examination from the original records of these alleged precedents. Had it done so it would have discovered that instead of being precedents in favor of the sitting member when tested by conceded legal principles and examined as to facts in detail, they are without exception precedents in favor of contestants. These alleged precedents are all dwelt upon at length in the printed brief of Mr. Paine, counsel for Mr. Dubois, submitted to the committee, and which the majority of the committee seems to have accepted without examination as being correctly stated as to fact and conclusion.

We will examine the alleged precedents in Iowa first. In the years 1870 and 1872, when Senators were elected in that State, the legislature elected such Senators on the second Tuesday after the meeting of the legislature on Monday, the day appointed by law for holding its regular sessions. In both of those years, as also in every year thereafter, down to 1890, the uniform practice adopted on Monday, the day of meeting, was to elect a speaker and clerk pro tempore in the house, and then adjourn until the next day, after appointing a committee on credentials in some cases, and in others without appointing such committee.

On Tuesday (the next day) where the committee on credentials had been appointed the day before, the report of this committee was first received, and where not appointed the day before, a committee was appointed on Tuesday to ascertain from their credentials who were the members elect, and therefore entitled to take part in the organization of the body. This being ascertained, in every instance, the members elect were sworn into office on Tuesday, and immediately thereafter proceeded to elect their regular officers, which being done, notice was given to the senate that the house was organized.

In those two years the legislature elected Senators on the second Tuesday from this Monday, and the credentials of those Senators presented to the Senate certified that they were elected on the second Tuesday after the temporary organization of the legislature. It will not be disputed that the qualification of the members by being sworn into office (as required by the Constitution of the United States) is absolutely essential to transform a body of members elect into members, and change such body of members elect into a legislative house. In the two cases above mentioned this was not done until the Tuesday after the day of meeting. Until such Tuesday, therefore, there was not even a house of representatives in existence, to say nothing about there being a house duly organized. Nevertheless, the Iowa legislature, in electing Senators in those years, assumed that each house was organized within the meaning of section 14 on Monday, the day of meeting, when there was not a legislative house in existence, but only a body of men claiming that they had a right to sit as members when it should be ascertained they were so entitled and they should be duly sworn in as members.

The simple statement of these facts disposes of those two alleged precedents, unless it can be shown that a violation of all law becomes law from the mere fact of such violation.

At the next five ensuing Senatorial elections in that State, made in the years 1876, 1878, 1882, 1884, and 1888, respectively, the legislature of Iowa followed the course taken by its predecessors in 1870 and 1872 and elected Senators on the second Tuesday after Monday, its day of meeting, and before a single member had been sworn in in either house. This action seems to have been taken in deference to the example set prior to 1876. Those five legislatures, however, beginning with 1876, evidently concluded that the idea of treating the two houses as being organized when there was not any house in existence was radically wrong, because while following the practice in 1870 and 1872 and electing the second Tuesday after the temporary organization, they also held a double election in each case one week after the permanent organization and elected the same person over again.

This deliberate action by the Iowa legislature at five successive elections is proof that those legislatures considered that the action taken in 1870 and 1872 was without warrant of law. And at the last election held in that State in 1890 the legislature deliberately overturned those two alleged precedents and distinctly declared, not only by its action, but by formal resolution also, that it was the permanent and not the temporary organization that is referred to in section 14. We now refer to the facts relating to the last election in 1890, as shown by the journals of the two houses.

The legislature met Monday, January 13, 1890. In the house nothing was done on that day, except that a person was authorized to "act as temporary reading clerk." (H. J., p. 1.)

Beginning with Tuesday, January 14, the house balloted daily and without success down to January 27, when a temporary speaker and speaker pro tempore and a temporary clerk and a clerk pro tempore were elected. Immediately upon their election a committee on credentials was appointed, and the members being ascertained were duly sworn into office. Balloting then began for permanent officers and continued without success from January 27 to February 19, when a permanent speaker, chief clerk, and other officers were elected and sworn. (J., pp. 83–87.)

After the election of such permanent officers, and not before, the house in the usual form notified the senate "That the house has completed its organization and is ready to receive any communication from the senate." (J., pp. 87, 88.) From the meeting of the legislature, on January 13, to February 19, when the permanent officers were elected, the house transacted no legislative business whatever.

The senate on the day of meeting elected a temporary secretary, sergeant-at-arms, and other officers (S. J., p. 1), and adjourned until the next day. January 14 the members were sworn, and on the same day thereafter, the permanent officers elected and qualified, and the governor thereupon notified that the senate was organized. January 15 the senate notified the house of its organization.

Thus on January 27 the senate had a permanent and the house a temporary organization. If the legislature had followed the practice in 1870 and 1872, it would have initiated the election of Senator on the second Tuesday after January 27. Instead of doing so, however, it waited until the 4th of March, being the second Tuesday after February 19, on which day both houses had secured a permanent organization.

On March 3, 1890, the legislature of Iowa passed a concurrent resolution which in terms settled the construction in that State of section 14, and removed for the future the doubts which had theretofore prevailed as to whether the temporary organization could legally answer the requirements of that section, in the election of a Senator. The concurrent resolution, found in House Journal, page 153, is as follows:

"That at 12 o'clock meridian on Wednesday, March 5, 1890, that being the day following the second Tuesday after the organization of the general assembly, the members of the general assembly will meet in joint convention in the hall of the house to compare the journals of the two houses and to declare the result thereof with reference to the election of a United States Senator for the State of Iowa for six years from the 4th day of March, 1891."

On the day following the passage of this resolution, viz, on March 4, the two houses voted separately for Senator, said day being the second Tuesday after the permanent organization, and on the next day, viz, on March 5, met in joint assembly, as provided in the concurrent resolution, and Mr. Allison was duly declared elected Senator.

Thus, after twenty years of confusion and doubt, the State of Iowa has at last distinctly settled for itself the construction of section 14 by adopting the construction which has uniformly prevailed in every other State of the Union on that subject. So that now we have a uniform legislative exposition of all the States to the effect that it is the permanent and not the temporary organization which is the event from which to compute the second Tuesday.

We have heretofore shown that the adoption of the construction claimed by the majority of the committee would make universal in all the States the same doubt and confusion which prevailed in Iowa for twenty years, and absolutely destroy the value of the act of 1866 by substituting for a certain day, and hour of the day, when an election is held, a shifting, indefinite, and uncertain time, under which every evil would be greatly increased to prevent which that act was passed; not only increased in States where the evils existed prior to the passage of that act, but extended to every State of the Union which prior to that time had held regular and orderly elections under the safeguards of State laws, which State laws were abrogated and all others prohibited when Congress legislated on this subject.

To the above statement, that the construction in all the States is now to the effect that it is the permanent organization created by the election of permanent presiding and recording officers that is mentioned in section 14, there would appear to be an exception in the South Carolina case cited in Mr. Paine's brief (p. 19). This citation is made in such terms as to cause it to appear that in 1868 the legislature of that State voted that it was permanently organized, by the election and qualifications of a permanent speaker only, the clerk and other officers being such pro tempore. As stated, this case would seem to support the claim of the committee; and, although not referred to by it in the report, we deem it proper to consider it, as it has been called to the attention of the Senate by the distribution of Mr. Paine's brief.

The legislature of 1868 was the first one convened under the State constitution adopted in that year, at the close of the period of reconstruction, and the manner in which the first legislature should be organized is prescribed in an ordinance attached to the constitution, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That each house shall be temporarily organized by the election of a presiding officer, to whom the oath of office shall be administered by the president of this convention, and which presiding officer shall then administer the said oath to the other members.

"SEC. 3. That as soon as the house of representatives has permanently organized by the election of a speaker, and shall have appointed a date for the purpose, the governor shall be installed into office in the presence of both houses, and the oath of office shall be administered to him by the president of this convention, and who shall thereafter administer the said oath to the lieutenant-governor in the senate chamber. (Constitution S. C., 1868, p. 43.)"

It is thus seen that at that session, specially provided for in the constitution, the house was declared permanently organized by the election of a speaker only, and the proceedings in the organization of that legislature were strictly in accordance with the constitution. At subsequent elections held in that State in the years 1870, 1872, and 1878, and when it was not proceeding under this special constitutional provision, the legislature of that State, by its action and vote, held that the house was not organized until the permanent speaker and clerk were both elected and qualified.

THE CONGRESSIONAL PRECEDENTS REFERRED TO IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

The eleven Congressional precedents in the House of Representatives cited in the committee's report [page 681, ante] are cited to show that in these eleven cases the House of Representatives has voted that it was organized and ready to proceed to business when it had a permanent presiding officer only, and when it had no regularly chosen and qualified recording officer.

This appears from the language of the report [p. 682, ante], as follows:

"On not less, therefore, than eleven definite occasions has the House of Representatives of the United States decided, and in its decision the Senate and the President have acquiesced, that it is an organized House when a quorum of the Representatives have assembled, taken the oath of office, and chosen a presiding officer."

The conclusion reached by the committee, that in these eleven Houses the House had no regularly chosen and qualified recording officer, is based upon the fact that after the election of Speaker, and before the election of the Clerk, the House has notified the Senate that it was organized and ready to proceed to business, and in many instances has transacted legislative business during the time intervening between the election of the Speaker and the election of a Clerk.

The alleged precedents are no precedents at all in favor of Mr. Dubois, but are precedents of the most conclusive character in favor of contestant, for the reason that since the beginning of the Twenty-fifth Congress (1839) the House has had a standing rule by which its Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms, and at a later date its Doorkeeper and Chaplain, when once elected, hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified. Prior to 1839 the practice of the House is thus summarized by Mr. Barclay:

"On the 1st of April, 1789, being the first day of a quorum of the House assembled under the new Constitution, the House immediately elected a Clerk by ballot, without a previous order being passed for that purpose, although in the case of a Speaker, who was chosen on the same day, an order was previously adopted. A Clerk has been regularly chosen at the commencement of every Congress since. The provision for the election of all officers of the House by viva voce vote was adopted December 10, 1839. (See Barclay's Digest, p. 163.)"

In 1839 the following rules were adopted by the Twenty-fifth Congress:

"The Clerk of the House shall take an oath for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office to the best of his knowledge and ability, and shall be deemed to continue in office until another be appointed. (Constitution, Rules, and Manual, Twenty-fifth Congress, p. 67.)

"A Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed to hold his office during the pleasure of the House, whose duty it shall be to attend the House during its sittings; to execute the commands of the House from time to time, together with all such powers issued by authority thereof as shall be directed to him by the Speaker. (See Constitution, Rules, and Manual, Twenty-fifth Congress, p. 59.)"

These rules were adopted, by special order, by the Twenty-sixth Congress (Congressional Globe, Vol. 6, p. 56), by the Twenty-seventh Congress (Congressional Globe, Vol. 8, p. 4), by the Twenty-eighth Congress (Vols. 12 and 13, p. 335), by the Twenty-ninth Congress (Vol. 15, pp. 4 and 428), by the Thirtieth Congress (Vol. 18, pp. 3 and 49), by the Thirty-first Congress (Vol. 21, p. 78), by the Thirty-second Congress (Vol. 26, p. 10), by the Thirty-third Congress (Vol. 32, p. 4), by the Thirty-fourth Congress (Vol. 38, p. 35), and by the Thirty-fifth Congress (Vol. 4, p. 3).

At the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress, on March 16, 1860, these old rules were changed to read as follows:

"There shall be elected at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are appointed, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, each of whom shall take an oath for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office to the best of his knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House; and the appointees of the Doorkeeper and Postmaster shall be subject to the approval of the Speaker; and in all cases of election by the House of its officers the vote shall be taken viva voce. (Rule 10, Constitution, Rules, and Manual, 1876, p. 163.)"

This rule 10 remained the standing rule of the House until the present rule 2 was adopted, which rule is as follows:

"There shall be elected by a viva voce vote at the commencement of each Congress to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified, a Clerk, a Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, for the true and faithful discharge of their duties to the best of their knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House, and each shall appoint all of the employés of his department provided for by law. (Rule 2, Constitution, Manual, and Digest Fifty-second Congress.)"

It thus appears that the entire period covered by the eleven Congressional precedents referred to by the committee the Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives after being once chosen and qualified, continued in office as the regular officers of the House until their successors were chosen and qualified.

It results, therefore, that in every instance referred to by the committee to show that the House had no clerk when it notified the Senate that it was organized after the election of the Speaker, is incorrect, because in every case the Clerk elected at the last preceding Congress was in office, holding over under the Rules of the House.

To make it absolutely clear that at every period of its existence the House has considered the election and qualification of a Clerk equally as essential to the organization of that body as the election and qualification of its Speaker, attention is called to the fact that in the Thirty-first Congress the Clerk's office became vacant during the session by the death of the incumbent. The proceedings taken thereon by the House (Mr. Howell Cobb, Speaker) are inserted herein in full, as follows:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Tuesday, April 16, 1850.

"The Speaker called the House to order at 12 o'clock.

"One of the assistants of the late Clerk of the House, Mr. J. C. Walker, proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

"Mr. Hall interposed and said that he had risen to inquire by what authority any person prepared the Journal here, under what authority the individual now at the desk was reading the Journal. The House had had a Doorkeeper and a Postmaster foisted upon it and he, for one, was not willing that a Clerk should be put upon the House in the same way. He objected to the Journal being read until the House had authorized some individual to read it.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that the Journal has been prepared as usual under the direction of the Speaker. The individual at the desk, who was reading the Journal, was one of the subordinate officers of the late Clerk of the House of Representatives. The positions occupied by these officers previous to the death of the Clerk are still, in the judgment of the Chair, occupied by them. They are not authorized, however, to discharge the duties of Clerk. In the opinion of the Chair until a Clerk shall have been elected the House is not organized and no business can be transacted until an election shall have taken place. But this state of things does not prevent the preparation or the reading of the Journal. The Journal has been regularly read even before the election of the Speaker in the original organization of the House, and the Chair is not able to perceive any objection against the reading.

"Mr. HALL said he wished to remark that he considered the present state of things very different from that which existed when the House was organized. Under the rule of the House the Clerk of each Congress held over until his successor was elected. If the gentleman who read the Journal did so merely at the discretion of the House and not as clerk, he (Mr. Hall) had no objection to it. But he understood that the gentleman was acting as clerk.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that no person was authorized to discharge the duties of clerk.

"The Journal was then read and approved.

"Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois, rose and moved that the House proceed to the election of a Clerk.

"Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, moved to amend the motion by adding after the word 'Clerk' the words 'and Doorkeeper.'

"The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not in order.

"Mr. BROWN. Then I offer the following resolution:

"The resolution was read as follows:

"'Resolved, That the order heretofore passed by the House, postponing the election of Doorkeeper, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded; and that the House of Representatives proceed to the election of Clerk and Doorkeeper.'

"The resolution having been read:

"The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, no resolution, no business is in order until a Clerk shall have been elected, and the House can take action upon no subject whatever until the election of a Clerk—that being necessary to the organization of the House.

"Mr. BROWN. I suppose some motion is necessarily in order?

"The SPEAKER. No motion is in order except the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Harris) that the House proceed to the election of a Clerk.

"Mr. KAUFMAN rose to inquire whether the motion of the gentlemen from Illinois (Mr. Harris) was debatable; because, if it was so, he had risen for the purpose of moving the previous question.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the motion to go into the election of a Clerk is debatable. If it is so, the debate must be confined within very narrow limits. But the Chair thinks that the question is not debatable at all.

"Mr. KAUFMAN. Then it is unnecessary for me to move the previous question.

"Mr. BROWN. That I may have the sense of the House on that question, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I would like to submit a remark.

"The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that the resolution of the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. Brown) is out of order, upon the ground that the House is not organized until a Clerk shall have been elected, and that no business is in order until the House shall have been organized by the election of a Clerk. From this decision the gentleman from Mississippi appeals. And the question is:

"'Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?'

"And the question thereon was taken and decided in the affirmative without a division.

"So the judgment was affirmed.

"The question then recurred and was taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Harris), that the House do now proceed to the election of a Clerk; and it was decided in the affirmative without a division.

"So the motion was agreed to. And thereupon the House proceeded to the election viva voce of a clerk.

"(Congressional Globe, vol. 21, part 1, 1849–'50, pp. 740, 741.)"

It results, therefore, that the House of Representatives, from the foundation of the Government, has by its action uniformly held that the election and qualification of its permanent presiding and recording officers were absolutely essential to its organization and to authorize it to proceed with legislative business. And in the only instance in which there was a vacancy in the office of Clerk, it (upon the question being directly raised) formally decided that all legislative and other business must stop until this vacancy was filled.

When we consider that the rules of the House of Representatives, in connection with Jefferson's Manual, constitute the generally, if not universally, accepted parliamentary law governing the State legislatures, the above facts are conclusive to the effect, first, that a regularly chosen and qualified permanent clerk is essential to the organization of a legislative body; and, secondly, that a temporary designation of a speaker and clerk is not an organization of the body, but only the preliminary stages in such organization, especially when the body immediately and universally follows the so-called temporary organization by the election of its permanent officers, and postpones until then all legislative business and the notification to the other house that it is organized and ready to proceed with the public business.

SENATORIAL PRECEDENTS REFERRED TO IN COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

The committee is equally unfortunate in the statement [p. 682, ante] that:

"The Senate has at different times for periods aggregating thirty-two days transacted its ordinary business with the office of Secretary vacant."

As this statement is made in the same terms in the brief of Mr. Payne (pp. 17, 18), the committee doubtless refers to the two cases mentioned in that brief (p. 15), where it is alleged that the Senate, in 1814 and again in 1861, decided that the formal election of a Secretary was not indispensable to its organization.

If it were true that in case of a vacancy in the office of Secretary his duties were performed by an acting clerk it still would not follow that the election and qualification of a Secretary was not essential to the organization of the Senate. The Senate is a continuous body. It has never been organized but once—namely, in 1789. If the Senate had then voted that a Secretary was not essential such vote would be a precedent here. It would be as absurd to say that when a continuous body has become organized by the election of the necessary officers it becomes disorganized and resolved into its original elements by the death of one of those officers as it would be to hold that where a newly created county had been organized by the appointment of the county officers it ceased to be an organized county upon the death of one of them.

We, however, deny the facts upon which this portion of the committee's report is based. The facts in the case cited in 1814, as shown by the records, are as follows, to wit:

The Secretary having died during the recess prior to the convening of the special session held that year, on the assembling of the Senate it was—

"Resolved, As the former Secretary of the Senate has departed this life, that the Chief Clerk do act as the Secretary thereof until one shall be appointed,

"And thereupon such clerk was regularly sworn in as the Secretary of the Senate. (Senate Journal, 1814, vol. 5, p. 523.)"

On being so appointed and sworn in the person who therefore had been the Chief Clerk became the Secretary of the Senate and acted as such until it pleased the Senate to elect another, on October 11. The Journal shows that no legislative business was transacted by the Senate after convening until the Secretary was sworn in on September 19.

In the case in 1861 there never was a vacancy in the office of Secretary. When the Republicans obtained the control of the Senate in the Thirty-seventh Congress they removed the Secretary, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper by electing their successors under special resolutions passed at different dates.

The Senate Journal, Thirty-seventh Congress, 1861, p. 1, shows that the Senate had a Secretary in office when it convened in special session July 4, 1861. The officers first removed were the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper (pp. 6, 7). Their successors were elected and sworn in July 5. July 6 an assistant doorkeeper was elected (p. 20). July 10 a Chaplain was elected (p. 25). July 15 a new Secretary was elected (p. 41).

None of the several resolutions to elect the above officers mentioned the fact that such elections were for the purpose of removing the then incumbents. But that such was the purpose is shown by the remarks of Mr. Hale (who made all of the several motions to elect) immediately after the removal of Mr. McNair, Sergeant-at-Arms, as follows:

"As an act of justice and courtesy to Mr. McNair, who is removed without any cause affecting his moral character, etc. (Congressional Globe and Appendix, first session Thirty-seventh Congress, p. 11.)"

It thus appears that from the foundation of the Government the Senate has never assumed to transact any legislative business, except where it had a regularly chosen and qualified Secretary.

We have had examined the Journals since 1866 of one-half of the States, and in no instance has a case been found, first, where any legislative house has ever considered itself organized so as to authorize it to transact legislative business until the permanent organization was completed by the election in all cases of at least a permanent presiding and recording officer; in most cases of a permanent presiding, recording, and executive officer, and in very many cases of all the permanent officers which it deemed necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business; and, secondly, no case where a legislative house has ever notified the other branch of the legislature that it was organized when it had a temporary organization only; or when it had a permanent presiding officer and a temporary secretary, or while it was engaged (as in the case in Idaho), in the election of its officers. In every case the notices have been formally exchanged after the permanent officers have been chosen and qualified and not before, and upon such exchange being made the house has, for the first time, proceeded to legislative business.

We are now having prepared a tabulated statement showing the above facts, which we hope to have completed before the determination of this case by the Senate so that the Senate may have the same before it as an aid to a correct decision.

When it is considered that in every state of the Union it is now the accepted practice to compute the second Tuesday from the permanent organization of both houses of the legislature, and that it is the universal practice in the States to treat the election and qualification of a permanent presiding and recording officer as essential to the organization of a legislative house, and that the same rule has from the foundation of the Government prevailed in the Senate and House of Representatives, it becomes clear that to seat Mr. Dubois the Senate will have to overturn the State and Congressional precedents of more than a hundred years.

The undersigned are further of the opinion that the present occupant of the seat was not duly elected Senator from Idaho, for the reason that, supposing the legislature had been duly organized on Monday, December 8, yet on the second Tuesday thereafter, to wit, on December 16, the two houses did not, as required by law, proceed to vote separately for a Senator to fill the term beginning March 4, 1891. This fact appears by the record of their proceedings on that day.

We think in this respect the language of the act of Congress is mandatory to the extent that at least one house must comply. Had the intention of Congress been to include both houses by the use of the words "either house" it is inconceivable to suppose a reason why they did not say so. If they had said so it would be scarcely possible to avoid the conclusion that they were attempting an absurdity. Unmistakably they were striving to remedy the evil, then too common, of a failure of one branch of the legislature to coöperate with the other branch, when, on joint ballot, the party having the control of the one house was in the minority, and, not being able to elect their candidate, were determined to defeat any election.

In this view of the action of Congress the legislation of July, 1866, was wise and timely. Surely they were not attempting to force the election of Senators where both houses should determine to hold no election. Surely they did not contemplate a remedy for a case where both houses having a majority of the same political faith and able to elect their candidate should yet refuse to do so. Such an idea we submit is not for a moment to be entertained. And where both houses, as in this case, failed to take the initial step of a separate vote on the day required, and failed to produce their journals as demanded by the act, it is impossible to see what gave jurisdiction to the joint assembly.

The condition precedent not having been performed, all powers and proceedings dependent thereon failed, as it seems to us.

It is true that the two houses did vote separately on Tuesday, the 16th, for Senators, and it is true that the record shows that Mr. Dubois was voted for, but it is respectfully submitted that the record, imperfect as it is, plainly discloses the fact that these votes were cast for the election of two Senators to fill the two then existing vacancies.

In addition to what is disclosed by the record it is a matter of notoriety that the elections gone into on Tuesday (16th) were to fill these existing vacancies simply, and it was not until after the failure of two ballots in joint assembly to fill those two vacancies that a resolution was suddenly sprung upon the assembly to fill the other at the same time. The following is a copy of the said resolution:

"Resolved by the joint assembly of the senate and house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho, That we proceed to elect two United States Senators to fill existing vacancies; and that after such election we immediately proceed to elect one United States Senator to fill the vacancy occurring March 4, 1891."

So far as we have been able to ascertain this resolution adopted on the 18th was the first attempt or even mention of the election of a Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1891. In the case of Hart vs. Gilbert, Forty-first Congress, cited by the committee, it is true that no vote was taken in the separate houses for the election of a third Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1869, but the two houses did take separate action in regard to the election of that third Senator by the passage of a joint resolution that they would meet in joint assembly on a day named for the purpose of electing such Senator.

They did not ignore the act of Congress altogether. But whatever may have been the conditions which influenced the admission of Gilbert to his seat, we can not believe that in the passage of the act Congress intended to say that the two houses of the legislature in proceeding to the election of a Senator should ballot separately on a given day, but that both as well as either one were at liberty to disobey the law if they saw fit.

Unable therefore for the foregoing reasons to concur in the committee's report, and believing that the alleged election of Fred T. Dubois was not held in compliance with law, either as to the time or manner thereof, submit the following:

Resolved, That Fred T. Dubois is not entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891.

Resolved, That William H. Clagett is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho for the term commencing March 4, 1891.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,
The Senate proceeded, etc. [For the debate see Cong. Record, 1st sess. 52d Cong., pp. 1202–1209.]

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,
The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1229–1244.]

WEDNESDAY, February 24, 1892.

Mr. Stewart submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That William H. Clagett, the contestant for the seat in the United States Senate now occupied by Hon. Fred. T. Dubois, have leave to occupy a seat on the floor of the Senate pending the discussion of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that he have leave to speak to the merits of his right to the seat, and on the report of the committee.

* * * * * * *

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,
The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1384–1401.]

THURSDAY, February 25, 1892.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. Stewart, granting William H. Clagett, contestant for a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho, leave to speak on his right to the seat; and having been amended on motion of Mr. Mitchell, by inserting after the word "speak" the words not exceeding two hours,

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended as follows:

Resolved, That William H. Clagett, the contestant for the seat in the Senate now occupied by Hon. Fred T. Dubois, have leave to occupy a seat on the floor of the Senate pending the discussion of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that he have leave to speak not exceeding two hours, to the merits of his rights to the seat, and on the report of the committee,

It was determined in the affirmative. Yeas 48, nays 1.

On motion by Mr. Platt,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Barbour, Bate, Berry, Brice, Call, Carey, Casey, Chandler, Chilton, Cockrell, Coke, Cullom, Daniel, Davis, Dawes, Dubois, Felton, Frye, Gallinger, Gorman, Hale, Harris, Hawley, Hiscock, Kyle, Mitchell, Morgan, Morrill, Paddock, Pasco, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Proctor, Pyle, Ransom, Sanders, Sherman, Squire, Stanford, Stewart, Teller, Vance, Vest, Washburn, Wolcott.

Mr. Platt voted in the negative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

[For the debate on this resolution see Record, ib., 1430–1432.]

The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1445–1448.]

FRIDAY, February 26, 1892.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho; and

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. Morgan,

Ordered, That the limitation as to time allowed the contestant, William H. Clagett, to speak be withdrawn.

After further debate. [See Record, ib., 1473–1486.]

On motion by Mr. Sherman,

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

MONDAY, February 29, 1892.

The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1538–1551.]

TUESDAY, March 1, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1584–1598.]

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

The Senate resumed, etc. [See Record, ib., 1622–1636.]

THURSDAY, March 3, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho; and

The question being on the first resolution reported by the committee, viz:

Resolved, That Fred T. Dubois is entitled to retain the seat he now holds as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891, after debate,

On motion by Mr. Morgan to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and in lieu thereof inserting:

Resolved, That the vote or other proceeding that constitutes a choice of a Senator of the United States must be had by the legislature of the State in which such Senator is chosen, and until the houses of such legislature have met and organized as legislative bodies, they can not choose a Senator of the United States.

2. The Constitution of the United States requires that the choice of a Senator shall be, when made, the act of the legislature of the State, and not the act of the Senate or of Congress.

3. That in regulating the time and manner of choosing a Senator, a new electoral body, which is not the legislature, and is not acting by its authority, can not be substituted so as to act in the place and stead of the legislature, and so to deprive the legislature of its power to elect a Senator.

4. That if it is lawful in regulating the time and manner of electing Senators, to transfer the power to choose a Senator from the two houses, in their organized capacity, to a number of the members of the two houses, such electoral power is secondary to the right of the legislature to choose a Senator, and can only be exercised when the houses of the legislature, or either of them, has made default in considering the subject of choosing such Senator, or having made an effort, has failed to make, or to proceed to make such choice.

5. When, as in the case of the claim of Hon. Fred T. Dubois, the members of the legislature of Idaho who, on the 18th day of December, 1890, voted for Hon. Fred T. Dubois sat in their respective houses on Tuesday, the 16th day of December, 1890, a quorum being present in each house, and voted for two Senators from Idaho, who were, on subsequent days, chosen as such, and failed to take any action upon the question of electing a third Senator to the seat now occupied by Hon. Fred T. Dubois, they can not claim or exert the power to choose such Senator in default of action on that subject, which was the result of their own delinquency in public duty.

Mr. Mitchell raised a question of order, viz: That the amendment is simply a declaration of principles and decides nothing; that it is offered as a substitute for a resolution which relates to a question of the highest privilege, namely, whether the sitting member was or was not duly elected a Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891; and that it neither declares the contestant elected nor does it declare there was no election.

The Vice-President submitted the question of order for the decision of the Senate, and

On the question, Is the amendment in order?

It was determined in the negative, { Yeas ..... 9 / Nays 51

On motion of Mr. Mitchell,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

Messrs. Berry, Cockrell, Coke, George, Gorman, Harris, Hill, Jones of Arkansas, Morgan.

Those who voted in the negative are—

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Bate, Blodgett, Call, Carey, Carlisle, Casey, Chandler, Chilton, Cullom, Daniel, Davis, Dawes, Dolph, Felton, Gallinger, Gibson of Maryland, Hansbrough, Hawley, Higgins, Jones of Nevada, Kenna, Kyle, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Palmer, Pasco, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Platt, Proctor, Pugh, Sanders, Sawyer, Sherman, Shoup, Squire, Stanford, Stockbridge, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Vilas, Voorhees, Warren, Washburn, White, Wolcott.

So it was decided that the amendment was not in order.

On motion by Mr. Vance, to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and in lieu thereof inserting:

That Fred T. Dubois is not entitled to retain the seat he now occupies as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891.

Resolved, That William H. Clagett is entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho for the term commencing March 4, 1891.

It was determined in the negative, { Yeas ..... 7 / Nays 55

On motion by Mr. Vance,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

Messrs. George, Gorman, Harris, Kyle, Morgan, Pasco, Stewart.

Those who voted in the negative are:

Messrs. Allen, Allison, Bate, Berry, Call, Carey, Carlisle, Casey, Chandler, Chilton, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Cullom, Daniel, Davis, Dawes, Dolph, Felton, Frye, Gallinger, Gibson of Maryland, Hansbrough, Hawley, Higgins, Hill, Jones of Nevada, Kenna, McPherson, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Palmer, Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Platt, Proctor, Pugh, Sawyer, Sherman, Shoup, Squire, Stanford, Stockbridge, Teller, Turpie, Vest, Vilas, Voorhees, Walthall, Warren, Washburn, White, Wolcott.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Fred T. Dubois is entitled to retain the seat he now holds as Senator from the State of Idaho for the full term commencing March 4, 1891.

It was determined in the affirmative, { Yeas ..... 55 / Nays 5

On motion by Mr. Mitchell,

The yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are—

Messrs. Those who voted in the negative are—

Messrs. George, Harris, Kyle, Pasco, Stewart.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On the question to agree to the second resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That William H. Clagett is not entitled to be admitted to a seat in the Senate from the State of Idaho for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1891.

It was determined in the affirmative.

COMPENSATION OF CONTESTANTS.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1892.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid to Fred T. Dubois, Senator from the State of Idaho, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, in full compensation for his expenses incurred in connection with the contest inaugurated by William H. Clagett, involving his right to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Idaho.

Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid to William H. Clagett, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for his time and expenses in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Idaho.

[First session—Fifty-second Congress.]

WILKINSON CALL,

Of Florida.

December 7, 1891, R. H. M. Davidson presented the credentials from the governor of Florida described in the following case, at the same time a transcript of the proceedings of the two houses of the legislature of Florida in a joint convention, composed of a majority of the members of the two houses, but not of a majority of the members of each, recording what purported to be the election of Wilkinson Call. Mr. Call presented himself on the same day, claiming the right to take the oath by virtue of the proceedings of that joint convention. The facts set forth in the transcript were undisputed. The matter went over under objection to the next day, when Mr. Call was admitted to take the oath, on motion by Mr. Hoar, and the credentials were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the Journal of the Senate in relation to it.

MONDAY, December 7, 1891.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the credentials of Wilkinson Call, being a transcript* of the proceedings of the legislature of the State of Florida, in joint assembly, certifying to the election of Mr. Call as Senator from that State for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1891; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

Mr. Harris presented the credentials of Robert H. M. Davidson, appointed a Senator by the governor of the State of Florida to fill a vacancy alleged to exist in the term commencing March 4, 1891; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

* * * * * * *

On motion by Mr. Hoar, that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Wilkinson Call as Senator from the State of Florida,

Ordered, That the consideration of the motion be postponed to to-morrow.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1891.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion yesterday submitted by him, that the oath of office be administered to Wilkinson Call as a Senator from the State of Florida; and

The motion was agreed to.

Whereupon

Mr. Call appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President, he took his seat in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. Hoar,

Ordered, That the credentials of Wilkinson Call and also the credentials of R. H. M. Davidson, claiming a seat in the Senate by appointment of the governor of Florida, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

---

* The transcript of the proceedings of the legislature of Florida in joint assembly, resulting in the election of Mr. Call, is printed in the Record, 1st sess. 52d Cong., p. 2. The credentials of Mr. Davidson may be found in the same place.

[First session—Fifty-second Congress.]

R. H M. DAVIDSON v. WILKINSON CALL,

Of Florida.

In April, 1891, the legislature of the State of Florida met and was duly organized at the time and place appointed by law. On the second Tuesday after such organization, being the 21st day of April 1891, the two chambers of which it was composed held a session and voted, each separately, for the election of a United States Senator. No one was chosen at this election, and it was so declared and entered upon the journals of the respective houses. On the following day, being Wednesday, the 22d of April aforesaid, the legislature met at noon in joint assembly, and one vote was taken for Senator which resulted in no election. And on every succeeding day, except Sundays, until the 26th day of May, 1891, they met and took one vote in the same manner, with the same result. On the 26th day of May, 1891, the joint assembly met as before, and upon a vote being taken for United States Senator it was found that Wilkinson Call had received a majority of the votes of those present and voting, the same being also a majority of all the members elected to both houses of the legislature. Thereupon Mr. Call was declared duly elected.

The validity of this election was questioned upon the ground that there was not a quorum of the State senate present and voting at the time it occurred. This objection was based upon the proposition that the joint convention or assembly in such cases is composed of the two houses as such, and that therefore a quorum of each must attend to properly form such convention.

The governor being of the opinion that this position was sound appointed Robert H. M. Davidson to be Senator from the State of Florida until the next meeting of the legislature, and issued credentials in the usual form under date of September 22, 1891, to which the secretary of State affixed the great seal of the State in obedience to a peremptory writ of mandamus issued by the supreme court of Florida, November 17, 1891. The credentials of both claimants were presented to the Senate December 7, 1891. On the following day Mr. Call was sworn and his credentials, as well as those of Mr. Davidson, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The committee reported, February 1, 1892, finding the facts set forth in the preceding paragraph, and holding that "This act [of July 25, 1866] provides that 'the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly,' etc. The joint assembly is thus composed not of the two houses, but of the members thereof. The joint assembly is not a junction or union of the two houses as such; it is not a merger of the two houses into one of either, but it is a body distinct and separate from either as such, and has by the words of the enactment a quorum of its own prescribed and defined, to wit, 'a majority of all the members elected to both houses,' without any reference to a quorum either of the senate or the house. * * * The term legislature in this clause is not to be construed technically with reference to the separate chambers which may exist within it, but as designating the collective number of all the persons composing it," and that therefore Mr. Call was duly elected.

February 4, 1892, the Senate considered the report of the committee and declared Mr. Call "lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate."

The history of the case here given consists of a transcript of the Journal of the Senate relating to it with the report of the committee, No. 106, Parts 1 and 2, 1st sess., 52d Cong.

The decision of the supreme court of Florida was rendered in the case of The State of Florida ex rel. Francis P. Fleming, governor, v. John L. Crawford, secretary of State, 28 Fla. 441.

[For the first proceedings in this case see the case of Wilkinson Call, supra, p. 805.]

MONDAY, January 25, 1892.

Mr. Turpie, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the papers, evidence, and certificates in the case of Wilkinson Call, and of the contestant R. H. M. Davidson, respecting the question of the title to a seat in the Senate, submitted a report (No. 106) with the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Hon. Wilkinson Call, of Florida, was duly elected by the legislature of the said State on the 26th day of May, 1891, a Senator of the United States from the said State for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March 1891, and that he is lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate.

[The resolution may also be found in the Record, 1st sess. 52d Cong., p. 512. There was no discussion at this time.]

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Teller (chairman), Hoar, Mitchell, Chandler, Higgins, Vance, Pugh, Gray, Turpie.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 1, 1892.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Turpie, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the papers in the case of R. H. M. Davidson, contestor, against Wilkinson Call, contestee, concern ing the right to a seat in this body for the State of Florida, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to make the following report:

In April, 1891, the legislature of the State of Florida met and was duly organized at the time and place appointed by law. On the second Tuesday after such organization, being the 21st day of April, 1891, the two chambers of which it was composed held a session and voted, each separately, for the election of a United States Senator. No one was chosen at this election, and it was so declared and entered upon the journals of the respective houses. On the following day, being Wednesday, the 22d of April aforesaid, the legislature met at noon in joint assembly, and one vote was taken for Senator, which resulted in no election. And on every succeeding day, except Sundays, until the 26th day of May, 1891, they met and took one vote in the same manner, with the same result. On the 26th day of May, 1891, the joint assembly met as before, and upon a vote being taken for United States Senator it was found that Wilkinson Call had received a majority of the votes of those present and voting, the same being also a majority of all the members elected to both houses of the legislature. Thereupon Mr. Call was declared duly elected.

The validity of this election is questioned upon the ground that there was not a quorum of the State senate present and voting at the time it occurred. This objection is based upon the position that the joint convention or assembly in such cases is composed of the two houses as such, and that therefore a quorum of each must attend to properly form such convention. The law of the case is found in the act of Congress of July 25, 1866, being chapter 1, title 2, of the Revised Statutes, concerning the election of United States Senators, an act adopted by the constitution of the State of Florida in respect to such elections, and so in a double sense to be regarded as the law of this case. But if the constitution of Florida had provided in express terms that a quorum of both houses was necessary to constitute a joint assembly this would not be the law unless the same is required by said act of 1866. The Federal law is paramount.

This act provides that "the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly," etc. The joint assembly is thus composed not of the two houses, but of the members thereof. The joint assembly is not a junction or union of the two houses as such; it is not a merger of the two houses into one of either; but it is a body distinct and separate from either as such, and has by the words of the enactment a quorum of its own prescribed and defined, to wit, "a majority of all the members elected to both houses," without any reference to a quorum either of the senate or the house. The joint assembly is authorized and created by the act of Congress, and when the circumstances have transpired which make it necessary to convene the same, all the members of both houses, without any reference to the further action of either house as such, are entitled to seats in it, and may join together and coöperate as members in the choice of a Senator until one is elected. It has always been conceded that the object of the statute of 1866 was to prevent the inaction or neglect of either house—that is, of a majority or quorum of either house—from delaying or defeating the will and voice of the majority of the whole legislative body.

The two houses, as such, are given their day in court—are given, under a previous provision of the act, an opportunity to make the choice of Senator. After they have failed to make a choice, to hold that a quorum of each is necessary to make a joint assembly is to give them a chance to repeat this failure—it is to vitiate the very purpose of the enactment and to reinstate the evil which it was designed to remedy. It was not the intention of the makers of the law of 1886 to place or leave it in the power of any minority of the whole number, or of a quorum in either house, as such, to prevent or postpone the representation of the State in this body. For this reason the law operates, so far as it relates to the joint meeting, upon members as individuals, not as component parts of the respective bodies to which they may belong; and for this reason also a majority of the whole number of members is constituted the quorum of the joint assembly; that is, the number requisite to transact its business in the senatorial election. If the minority of the members, absent at the time of Mr. Call's election, had all been present and voted, this would not have changed the result. It seems unreasonable, under the provisions of this statute or any other, to give a greater effect to the absence and nonaction of this minority than to their presence and action.

It seems yet more unreasonable to hold that a quorum of the senate, in Florida 17 members, should defeat the action of thrice their number under a statute designed expressly to provide for the permanent and, as far as practical, the continuous representation of the States in the Senate of the United States.

It is implied in the argument made against the right of the contestee that this construction of the act is in conflict with the section of the Constitution which provides that Senators shall be chosen by the legislature—that this is composed of two houses—and that a quorum of each is practically and legally the house; that without a quorm there is no house. We grant that the quorum is in legal effect the house. But the term legislature in this clause is not to be construed technically with reference to the separate chambers which may exist within it, but as designating the collective number of all the persons composing it. This is clear from the fact that one of the States at least, Pennsylvania, had at the time of the adoption of the Constitution only one legislative chamber. Besides this the word legislature is commonly used in this way—as the word magistracy is used and indeed is defined to mean "the body of magistrates" in a State or country. Legislature in this section means the body of legislators of the State, without reference to the different chambers, as such, in which they may serve. The joint assembly created by the act of 1866 is thus in the fullest sense of the term the legislature of the State, its whole number being equal to that of all the persons elected to either branch of the legislature and its quorum being a majority of that number.

In these views the recent decisions of the Senate agree.

The legislature of Florida is composed of a house of 68 and a senate of 32 members, in all 100. Fifty-two members attended the joint assembly of the 26th of May aforesaid; were present and voted. Mr. Call received of this number the votes of 51. So that the joint assembly contained and the person chosen received the votes of a majority of all the members elected to both houses.

We are therefore of the opinion that Mr. Call was duly elected.

The appointment by the governor thereafter of Mr. Davidson, under the erroneous supposition that a vacancy existed in the office of United States Senator, was an act of mere irrelevancy which it is not necessary further to notice.

THURSDAY, February 4, 1892.

On motion by Mr. Turpie,

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the question of the title to a seat in the Senate from the State of Florida; and,

After debate,

The resolution reported by the committee was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Wilkinson Call, of Florida, was duly elected by the legislature of said State on the 26th day of May, 1891, a Senator of the United States from said State for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1891, and that he is lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate.

[The debate may be found, Cong. Record, 1st sess. 52d Cong., pp. 833–846.]

EXPENSES OF CONTESTANTS.

WEDNESDAY, February 10, 1892.

Mr. Vance submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $1,258 to the Hon. R. H. M. Davidson for expenses in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate under the appointment of the governor of Florida.

THURSDAY, March 31, 1892.

Mr. Chandler, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Vance February 10, 1892, to pay R. H. M. Davidson for expenses in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate under the appointment of the governor of Florida, reported the following amendment, intended to be proposed in the general deficiency bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay R. H. M. Davidson the expenses incurred by him in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate under the appointment of the governor of Florida, $1,250.

[Special session of the Senate, March 4, 1893.]

WILLIAM N. ROACH, Senator from North Dakota.

On the 28th day of March, 1893, Mr. Hoar submitted a resolution providing for an investigation of certain allegations charging William N. Roach, a Senator from the State of North Dakota, with the offense of criminal embezzlement. On the 10th day of April, 1893, a substitute for this resolution was introduced by Mr. Hoar, and on the 14th day of April, 1893, a substitute for the resolutions then pending in said matter was introduced by Mr. Gorman. The resolution and the substitutes were the subject of debate in the Senate, but no action was had or taken thereon.

It appears from the debates that the case presented the question as to the right of the Senate to take cognizance of an accusation against a Senator of an offense committed before his election to the Senate.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate in relation thereto, as published in the Congressional Record, with a reference to the debate as contained in the Congressional Record, and extracts from remarks by Mr. Chandler in such debate, with the statement made by Mr. Roach in the Senate in reference to the matters referred to in such resolution and substitutes.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 28, 1893.

Mr. Hoar submitted the following resolution, which was read:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to investigate the allegations recently extensively made in the public press, charging William N. Roach, a Senator from the State of North Dakota, with the offense of criminal embezzlement, to report the facts of the transactions referred to, and further to report what is the duty of the Senate in regard thereto. For that purpose the committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer, and to act through a subcommittee."

The resolution was ordered to lie over and be printed.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 25, p. 37.)

MONDAY, April 10, 1893.

Mr. Hoar submitted the following resolution, which was read:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to examine the allegations recently made in the public press, charging William N. Roach, a Senator from the State of North Dakota, with certain criminal offenses committed while cashier or officer of a bank in the city of Washington, and to ascertain the facts and circumstances so far as to enable the committee to determine and report what are the duty and power of the Senate in regard thereto; and for that purpose the committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, to sit during the recess of the Senate, and to act through a subcommittee; and its expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

Mr. HOAR. This resolution is proposed as a substitute for one introduced by me the other day, and has been agreed upon after a conference between several Senators on both sides of the Chamber as the proper form. I will let it lie over, however, one day in order that it may be seen by Senators.

The resolution was ordered to lie over and be printed.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 25, pp. 111, 112.)

FRIDAY, April 14, 1893.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

My colleague, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hansbrough], is reported to have said, referring to the charges alleged in the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, that I told him I desired to offer a resolution for investigation, or that I thought it was the best thing to do. I rise now to confirm that statement, and to say further that as far as that investigation is concerned I desire it and am perfectly willing that it shall be proceeded with.

After the conversation referred to by my colleague, I yielded to the advice of friends in the Senate and did not act upon my own impulses in the matter. Hence I did not offer the resolution that I desired and intended to offer. New to this body and entirely unfamiliar with the customs and usages of the Senate, I naturally attached weight to the advice and opinion of those older in the service and versed in the practices and precedents of the Senate. I was given to understand that, however much I might desire or demand an investigation, it was not the practice of the Senate to take jurisdiction of alleged acts or conduct prior to the election of a Senator and having no connection with the legality thereof. If this practice is to be now changed, I have no protest to make; on the contrary, I repeat I am willing and desirous that the investigation be made. I seek no shelter and shrink from no scrutiny into my public and private character.

I desire to say at this time that I am perfectly willing and desirous that this investigation shall be proceeded with. That has been my position from the beginning. I stand here now to say that much and to repeat it.

With reference to my rising at this time, I will state that I have been blamed for not speaking. I have also been criticised because it is alleged that I did say something. In justice to my colleague and myself with reference to what has been said in the newspapers (because these things so far are proceeding from newspaper allegations) I thought it my duty to say this much at this time.

After further discussion Mr. Gorman offered a substitute for the resolution offered by Mr. Hoar; which substitute offered by Mr. Gorman was read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to inquire into and consider the question whether the Senate has authority or jurisdiction to investigate charges made against a Senator as to conduct or offenses occurring or committed prior to his election, not relating to his duty as Senator or affecting the integrity of his election."

(Cong. Rec., vol. 25, pp. 137, 138.)

The resolution and the substitute therefor introduced by Mr. Hoar and the substitute introduced by Mr. Gorman were the subject of debate in the Senate April 14, 1893, and April 15, 1893 (Cong. Rec., vol. 25, pp. 137, 138, 140–154, 155–159, 160–164), but no vote was taken thereon.

[Extracts from remarks of Mr. Chandler in support of the substitute offered by Mr. Hoar for the resolution directing an inquiry into the charges against Senator Roach. Found in the Congressional Record, vol. 25, pp. 148, 149.]

* * * * * * *

"Mr. President, I know I have taken too much of the time of the Senate in bringing the precedents in England and in this country to the notice of Senators. I believe that upon all these precedents that it can not be fairly contended that it is a principle of American constitutional law that under no circumstances shall there be an investigation into the conduct of members committed before their election to Congress.

* * * * * * *

"The facts in relation to Mr. Roach are to be found, in the first place, in the New York Recorder of March 14, 1893. The same facts are stated in the Philadelphia Press of March 15, 1893. The facts narrated in those two newspapers are taken from an interview in the Evening Star of August 15, 1879, with Mr. J. A. J. Creswell, then president of the Citizens' National Bank, of Washington, D. C. There is an interview in the Recorder with Mr. Jacob Tome, an owner of two-thirds of the stock in the bank, which corroborates the statements made in that paper.

"There is also contained in the Recorder an interview with Mr. Thomas C. Pearsall, who succeeded Mr. Roach as cashier of the Citizens' National Bank, and he confirms the narrative.

"Moreover, the facts are to be found upon the records of the Government in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, in the reports made by the Citizens' National Bank to that officer. Further, there has been published in the newspaper interviews with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Roach]. There is an interview in the Recorder, and also one in the New York Sun of March 21, 1893. In the Recorder interview the Senator from North Dakota first said he had nothing to say; later he said he remembered the Creswell interview in the Star, but had forgotten the details; that if he had had any controversy with the bank it had all been settled. Then the following questions and answers appear:

"'It is stated that the larger part of the money taken was returned to the bank?

"'Yes, I believe it was.

"'Has it all been returned?

"'I think so, but it was a long time ago and I can not say positively.

"'No indictment was ever brought?

"'No; there was never any attempt to prosecute.'

"The New York World of March 15, 1893, has a half-column interview with the Senator from North Dakota, where he says nothing pertinent to the issue presented by the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, except that he has not been a fugitive from justice and that the printed story is 'full of absurdities and extravagances.' There is no other denial.

"The New York Sun is, I suppose, recognized as a Democratic paper, friendly to the Democratic party, to the majority upon this floor, and to the present Administration, and in an editorial in this Democratic paper, the Sun, of Tuesday, March 21, 1893, all the facts in reference to the Senator from North Dakota are reiterated, and the question whether or not he ought to hold his seat in the Senate is discussed.

* * * * * * *

"I will take occasion to read from the New York Sun, not the full statement which is there contained, because I do not wish and I have not wished to anticipate the facts, but this portion of the Sun's statement:

"'In October, 1879, the report of the Comptroller of the Currency presented the sworn statement of the officers of the Citizens' National Bank containing this item: "Defalcation of late cashier, $18,483.54."'

* * * * * * *

"I ask again, are not these facts sufficient to require an investigation by the Senate if they are to be taken as true? Here is a grave breach of trust alleged; here is a large embezzlement alleged upon the part of an officer of a national bank.

* * * * * * *

"I do not believe that even my State's rights friend from Texas [Mr. Mills], who I see is honoring me with his attention, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler], who have hitherto announced their belief in the doctrine that it is beyond the power of the Senate of the United States to inquire into the acts of Senators before they are members, will be willing, when they come to consider the subject, to affirm it as a proposition of constitutional law that there can be no investigation, under any circumstances, into the acts of a Senator committed before he was a Senator.

* * * * * * *

"The elevated character of the Senate forbids the announcement of any such fatal doctrine as this. A few short weeks ago the Vice-President, upon taking the chair as presiding officer of the Senate, uttered a high tribute to the Senators before him. With his advent to the position came also a great political change, but I do not believe that the majority which now prevails here will be any less solicitous than the minority to maintain the reputation and character of the Senate.

"We shall differ on questions of finance and tariff and on measures of public administration; not, I trust, on questions which are to determine the estimation in which the Senate is to be held by the wise and the good men of all countries. But to refuse even to investigate the facts alleged against the Senator from North Dakota will turn into a sarcasm and a mockery the eulogium of the Vice-President when he came to preside over the Senate and declared it to be 'the most august deliberative assembly known to man.'"

[Special session of the Senate, March 4, 1893; first session Fifty-third Congress and third session Fifty-third Congress.]

JOSEPH W. ADY v. JOHN MARTIN, of Kansas.

The credentials of John Martin as a Senator from the State of Kansas being in due form he was admitted to a seat in the Senate at the beginning of the special session of the Senate, March 4, 1893. Subsequently, a memorial signed by seventy-seven members of the Kansas legislature was presented in the Senate relating to the election of a United States Senator from the State of Kansas to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Preston B. Plumb. The memorial set out the facts from which it was claimed that the proceedings in the election of Mr. Martin to fill the vacancy aforesaid were irregular and illegal, and also set forth the subsequent election of Joseph W. Ady in a legal and formal manner. The grounds on which it was claimed that the proceedings of the legislature of Kansas in the election of Mr. Martin were illegal, are fully set forth in the remarks of Mr. Chandler in the debate on the case in the Senate as hereinafter set forth.

A resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the right of Mr. Ady to a seat in the Senate was introduced in the Senate and agreed to. Subsequently a resolution was introduced declaring that Mr. Martin was not entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Kansas. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Still another resolution of the same import as the one last referred to was afterwards introduced in the Senate and debated, but the Committee on Privileges and Elections made no report on the subject, nor was the matter brought to a vote in the Senate.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate relating to it as published in the Congressional Record, with a reference to the debate thereon as contained in the Congressional Record, and extracts from remarks by Mr. Chandler in the course of such debate.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 4, 1893.

Mr. Peffer presented the credentials of John Martin, recently elected a Senator from the State of Kansas for the term ending March 3, 1895.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

"STATE OF KANSAS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

"This is to certify that on the 25th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1893, John Martin was duly elected by the legislature of Kansas, a Senator to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of six years, commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1889, and ending March 4, 1895, and to fill the vacancy in said term happening by the decease of the Hon. Preston B. Plumb.

"Witness his excellency, our governor, and our seal hereunto affixed, at Topeka, this 25th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1893, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and seventeenth.

"[SEAL.]

L. D. LEWELLING.

"By the governor:

"P. S. OSBORNE, Secretary of State."

Mr. HOAR. The credentials of Mr. Martin seem to be in due form and to entitle him prima facie to be admitted to a seat in the Senate. If there be any question as to his title upon the merits, the Senate can deal with it afterwards. I ask that the oath be administered to Mr. Martin.

Mr. Martin was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. Peffer, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

WEDNESDAY, April 12, 1893.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a resolution, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the right of Mr. Joseph W. Ady, who claims a seat in this body as Senator from Kansas; and, if in their judgment it be necessary, to employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to sit during the recess of the Senate."

The resolution was ordered to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 25, p. 133.)

THURSDAY, April 13, 1893.

Mr. Sherman presented a memorial of seventy-seven members of the Kansas legislature, relating to the election of a United States Senator from Kansas to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Preston B. Plumb.

The memorial was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and to be printed as a document.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 25, p. 135.)

FRIDAY, April 14, 1893.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the resolution introduced by Mr. Vance April 12, 1893, in regard to the investigation of the right of Mr. Joseph W. Ady to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Kansas.

The resolution was reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, to add:

The expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 25, p. 139.)

MONDAY, August 21, 1893.

Mr. Chandler submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

"Resolved, That there was no lawful election of a United States Senator from Kansas by the joint assembly which met on January 25, 1893; and that John Martin is not entitled to a seat as Senator from the State of Kansas."

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 25, p. 535.)

THURSDAY, January 31, 1895.

Mr. Chandler offered the following resolution as a privileged resolution:

"Whereas, at the time of the alleged election of John Martin as Senator from Kansas the legislature of the State had not been duly organized; and

"Whereas, at the joint convention which made such election no majority of the legally elected members of the legislature voted for Mr. Martin: Therefore,

"Resolved, That there was no lawful election of a United States Senator from Kansas by the joint assembly which met on January 25, 1893, and that John Martin is not entitled to a seat as a Senator from the State of Kansas."

The Vice-President ruled that said resolution was not a privileged resolution under the circumstances connected with its presentation; and on appeal the decision of the chair was sustained by a vote of 40 yeas to 6 nays.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 27, pp. 1566, 1567.)

WEDNESDAY, February 6, 1895.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the resolution offered by Mr. Chandler January 31, 1895; which resolution was read and the question of its status was discussed, and thereupon the resolution was withdrawn. Subsequently, and on the same day, Mr. Chandler offered the same resolution; which was read and ordered to go over and be printed.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 27, p. 1816.)

THURSDAY, February 28, 1895.

The resolution submittted by Mr. Chandler February 6, 1895, was read and debated, but no vote was taken thereon.

(Cong. Rec., Vol. 27, pp. 2912–2918, 2920, 2922–2925.)

[Extracts from remarks by Mr. Chandler in support of the resolution submitted by him that Mr. Martin was not entitled to a seat as a Senator from the State of Kansas. Found in the proceedings of February 28, 1895, in the Congressional Record, vol. 27, pp. 2916, 2917.]

"Mr. President:

* * * * * * *

"It is impossible successfully to contend that this case has been fairly and justly dealt with by the Senate and its Committee on Privileges and Elections. The prolonged sickness and the death of Senator Vance may have been an excuse for some delay, but on that very account extraordinary diligence should have been afterwards used to hear and determine the important question of the right of a Senator to a seat in this Chamber.

"That the refusal was decided upon the face of facts which, if they had been confronted, would have required the ejectment from his seat of the sitting member [Mr. Martin], it is the purpose of my additional remarks to show. The facts are not complicated.

"A Kansas legislature was chosen November 8, 1892—40 senators, 125 representatives, 63 being a majority in the house and 83 a majority of the whole 165.

"On Tuesday, January 10, 1893, the members assembled at Topeka. The senate was duly organized as one body without controversy; but two houses were organized, each claiming to be lawful.

"The Douglass house had 64 members holding certificates from the secretary of State. Three other members, holding certificates, afterwards appeared, making 67 members.

"The Dunsmore house had 58 members holding certificates and 10 persons without certificates. These 10 claimed the places of 10 certified members who were in the Douglass house, asserting that of the latter 4 were ineligible because they were postmasters when elected, and that the rest had not been legally elected.

"The senate recognized the Dunsmore house and refused to recognize the Douglass house, and so did the governor of the State.

"On February 25, 1893, the Kansas supreme court decided that the Douglass house was the lawful body, and on February 28 the members of the Dunsmore house joined the lawful body and the Dunsmore house ceased to exist, none of the 10 unlawful members of that house either being admitted or claiming seats in the lawful body at any time.

"On Tuesday, January 24, 1893, the senate voted for United States Senator, no person receiving a majority. The Douglass and Dunsmore houses each voted for United States Senator, Joseph W. Ady receiving a majority in the first and John Martin receiving a majority in the second body.

"On Wednesday, January 25, there was a joint assembly, Lieutenant-Governor Daniels presiding. The senate roll was called; 15 senators did not vote; 24 voted for John Martin and 1 for M. W. Cobun.

"The lieutenant-governor then directed B. C. Rich, clerk of the Dunsmore house, to call the roll. Fifty-six members of the Dunsmore house who had held certificates from the secretary of state voted—51 for John Martin, 3 for Cobun, 1 for Mr. Close, 1 for Mr. Snyder, 1 was absent, and 1 did not vote, making the 58.

"Ten members of the Dunsmore house who did not have certificates from the secretary of state voted—9 for Martin and 1 for Hanna.

"After the call thus made had been completed 2 members of the Douglass house, Wilson and Rosenthal, asked to vote; were allowed to do so and voted for Martin.

"The vote then stood: Martin, 86; Cobun, 4; Close, 1; Snyder, 1; Hanna, 1, making 93.

"Before the result of the vote was announced Senator Lucien Baker arose, and in behalf of 15 senators and 65 representatives asked the right to vote. The lieutenant-governor refused to allow them to vote, declared the result to be as above stated, and that John Martin was elected, and then he left the chair.

"Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question. I have been following the Senator's remarks. Does he mean to say that in the joint convention, where there were rival bodies, two houses of representatives, both present, that the presiding officer, after the roll call of one house had been completed, in order to get votes enough to make a quorum, allowed two members of the other house, which he had not recognized, to vote, and that then after doing that, when other members of that house requested the privilege of voting, he excluded them?

"Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator correctly understands the case. That is exactly what took place, as the language I have read very clearly indicates.

"Mr. HALE. Is that an undisputed fact; and if so, what followed upon that?

"Mr. CHANDLER. I will show the Senator if he will listen a moment. The fact is undisputed that 24 senators voted for Martin; 1 for Cobun; that the roll was then called, and only members of the Dunsmore house voted. I again read:

"After the roll call thus made had been completed two members of the Douglass house, Wilson and Rosenthal, asked to vote; were allowed to do so, and voted for Martin.

"The Senator is correct in the suggestion that it took these two votes to make in joint assembly up to that time 83, being a majority of the whole legislature. I proceed:

"The excluded senators and members continued in session, elected George L. Douglass presiding officer, and proceeded to cast their votes as follows

"Joseph W. Ady, 77; present and not voting, 3.

"And thereupon Mr. Douglass declared that there had been no election of United States Senator, and the assembly adjourned.

"The total votes cast, which justify the conclusion that there was no choice, appear above, as follows:

	Votes.
John Martin	86
Cobun	4
Close	1
Snyder	1
Hanna	1
J. W. Ady	77
	170
Deduct the surplus and illegal votes, being	10
Total legal votes	160
Necessary for a choice	81
Martin received	86
Deduct his illegal votes, being	9
Total legal votes cast for Martin	77

"Or 4 less than were necessary for an election.

"An attempt has been made to show that Martin in the assembly as cut short by the lieutenant-governor was elected without counting the 10 illegal votes, as follows:

	Votes.
Martin	77
Cobun	4
Close	1
Snyder	1
Giving in all	83

"votes cast by legal members; and being exactly a majority of the whole 165 legal members of the legislature.

"But to make this calculation it is necessary to count the 2 votes of Wilson and Rosenthal from the Douglass house, while excluding the 65 other members of that house and the 15 Senators.

"To justify taking in the 2 while excluding the 80 is impossible.

"From the foregoing facts it is not difficult to reach two conclusions: First, the time had not arrived when the legislature of Kansas could lawfully elect a United States Senator. The legislature had not been organized within the meaning of the United States law, which is as follows:

"'SEC. 14. The legislature of each State * * * shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.'

"It is true that there was a lawful senate, and it is true, as appears from the subsequent decision of the supreme court of Kansas, that there was a lawful house. But it is also true that there was, in addition to the lawful house, an unlawful house, and that unlawful house was recognized by the senate and by the governor, while the lawful house received no recognition as such, either from the senate or from the governor.

"Manifestly there was no organization of a legislature within the meaning of the national statute, so that the time began to run at the end of which, by the national law, it was the right and the duty of the members of the legislature to elect a United States Senator. In no just sense could the legislature be said to be organized under the conditions above described. It is not contended that in all cases where a lawful senate and a lawful house are organized it must be shown that they communicate with each other and recognize each other. That fact is to be presumed in the absence of counter proof; but as soon as such counter proof appears and the anomalous condition is shown that the lawful house has made no connection with the senate, but that the senate, on the other hand, is in connection with an unlawful house, there can not be said to be in any proper sense an organization of the legislature within the meaning of the United States statute. This point I do not intend to enlarge upon. I am thoroughly convinced of its validity.

"But, conceding that there was an organized legislature on Tuesday, January 10, 1893, entitled, on the second Tuesday thereafter, namely, on January 24, and on the day after, the 25th, to elect a United States Senator, it seems clear that there was no lawful election. Review the facts. The members of the three houses met in one room. The voting began. A part of the senators voted, the other part omitting to vote. The members of the unlawful house voted, the members of the lawful house omitting to vote when the roll was called by the clerk of the unlawful house, whom they did not recognize as clerk. Then two members of the legal house asked to vote, and their votes were received. Next, the senators who had not voted and the members of the legal house asked to vote, but the lieutenant-governor refused to receive their votes, although he had received the two votes from the members of the legal house, and then he declared Mr. Martin elected.

"Can it be by any possibility contended that the lieutenant-governor had any right so to deal with the joint assembly; to receive the votes of the members of the illegal house; to receive at his discretion the votes of two members of the legal house, and then to exclude the remaining 62 members of the legal house and 15 senators? The idea is preposterous. The case is clear. Either there was no lawful joint assembly on that day, because the legislature was not organized, or it was the duty of the lieutenant-governor to receive the votes of all the members of the two houses. To base the right of a Senator to a seat upon this floor, as Senator Martin's right is based, solely upon the assumed authority of the lieutenant-governor, as exercised in this case, to receive votes enough to elect Mr. Martin and make a majority of the legal votes of the whole legislature, and then to arbitrarily stop the balloting and declare Mr. Martin to be elected, is as dangerous and vicious a proceeding as has ever been heard of in the history of fraudulent elections."

TUESDAY, February 12, 1895.

Mr. Gray, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Joseph W. Ady, the contestant of the seat of John Martin, a Senator from Kansas, the sum of $2,000, in full of expenses incurred by the said Joseph W. Ady in his said contest."

(Cong. Rec., vol. 27, p. 2064.)

TUESDAY, February 19, 1895.

The foregoing resolution was reported favorably, without amendment, by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 27, p. 2369.)

TUESDAY, February 26, 1895.

Mr. Gray, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to John Martin, a Senator from the State of Kansas, the sum of $1,000, in full of compensation and all expenses incurred by him in the contest for his seat in the Senate by Joseph W. Ady."

(Cong. Rec., vol. 27, p. 2748.)

THURSDAY, February 28, 1895.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution in the case of Mr. Ady.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hill in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the following resolution reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on the 12th instant [error for 19th instant]:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Joseph W. Ady, the contestant of the seat of John Martin, a Senator from Kansas, the sum of $2,000, in full of expenses incurred by the said Joseph W. Ady in his said contest."

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 27, p. 2901.)

THURSDAY, February 28, 1895.

Mr. Jones, of Arkansas, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution submitted by Mr. Gray on the 26th instant, reported it without amendment:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to John Martin, a Senator from the State of Kansas, the sum of $1,000, in full of compensation and all expenses incurred by him in the contest for his seat in the Senate by Joseph W. Ady."

Mr. HOAR. I now ask for the consideration of the resolution relating to the payment of the expenses of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Martin].

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

[Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

WARREN T. REESE, of Alabama.

During the third session of the Fifty-third Congress and on the 1st day of February, 1895, the credentials of Warren T. Reese were presented to the Senate, certifying to the election of said Warren T. Reese as a Senator from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1895, being the same term which was afterwards filled by Hon. John T. Morgan in due course. After discussion the credentials of Mr. Reese were ordered to lie on the table, but were not afterwards taken from the table, debated, or acted upon.

The history of the case as here given consists of a statement of the proceedings in the Senate as published in the Congressional Record.

FRIDAY, February 1, 1895.

Mr. ALLEN. I present the credentials of Warren T. Reese, a Senator elect from the State of Alabama, and ask that they be read and placed on the files.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The Secretary read as follows:

"STATE OF ALABAMA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

"This is to certify that on the 28th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1894, Warren T. Reese was duly elected by the legislature of Alabama a Senator to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1895.

"Witness: His excellency our governor, R. F. Kolb, and our seal hereunto affixed, at Montgomery, Ala., this 8th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1894, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eighteenth.

R. F. KOLB, Governor.

"By the governor:

"J. C. FONVILLE, Secretary of State."

Mr. GRAY. I move that the communication just read be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope that the Senator from Delaware will withdraw that motion and allow the credentials to take the usual course.

Mr. GRAY. What is the usual course, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose it is to place them on the files the same as other credentials. I do not know that the credentials should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections unless there is some contest.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think that would be the usual course for a communication of this kind. I think the reference I propose is the proper one.

Mr. ALLEN. It does not occur to me that it is proper at this time. If a contest comes up here I suppose the Committee on Privileges and Elections will have to consider it. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not insist on his motion.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection to letting the paper lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply desire to state that there is or will be a contest regarding a seat in the Senate from the State of Alabama. That fact can not be any longer ignored.

Mr. GRAY. Such a contest can not be made in the present Congress nor at the present session.

After further discussion the credentials presented by Mr. Allen were ordered to lie on the table.

[Fifty-fourth Congress, first and second sessions.]

HENRY A. DU PONT, of Delaware.

On the third day of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress Henry A. Du Pont, of Delaware, presented to the Senate of the United States his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Delaware, duly elected to serve as such for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1895. In support of this claim Mr. Du Pont filed a certificate signed by the speaker of the Delaware house of representatives and attested by the clerk of said house, stating and asserting that on the 9th day of May, 1895, at a session of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Delaware, convened in joint assembly for the purpose of electing a Senator from said State, a ballot was duly taken for the election of a Senator, as aforesaid; that on such ballot Henry A. Du Pont received 15 votes, Edward Ridgely received 10 votes, John E. Addicks received 4 votes, and Ebe W. Tunnell received 1 vote; that one of the ten votes so received by the said Edward Ridgely in said joint assembly was given by William T. Watson; that upon the organization of the senate of said State of Delaware upon the first Tuesday of January, A. D. 1895, said William T. Watson was duly elected and qualified as the speaker of the senate, and that on the 9th day of April, A. D. 1895, the said William T. Watson duly took the oath of office as governor of said state of Delaware in place of Joshua H. Marvil, deceased; that upon his qualifying and entering upon the exercise of the office of governor, as aforesaid, the said William T. Watson ceased to have the right to act as a member of the senate of said State, or to vote in said joint assembly for the election of a Senator in Congress, as aforesaid; that said vote so given for said Edward Ridgely by said William T. Watson was given illegally and in violation of the constitution of the State of Delaware; and that Henry A. Du Pont on said ballot having received 15 votes, and Edward Ridgely having received only 9 legal votes, John E. Addicks having received 4 votes, and Ebe W. Tunnell having received 1 vote, the said Henry A. Du Pont having thereby received a majority of the votes of all the senators and representatives then constituting the legislature of the State of Delaware, they being all present and voting, was duly elected a Senator from the State of Delaware, and was duly declared elected to that office by the speaker of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware.

The claim of Mr. Du Pont and the aforesaid certificate were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Subsequently certain affidavits and portions of the senate journal of the legislature of the State of Delaware were also referred to the same committee.

The report of the committee affirmed the right of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate, and was accompanied by a resolution that Mr. Du Pont was entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895. Afterwards a minority report was filed, signed by four members of the committee, declaring that Mr. Du Pont was not legally elected to the Senate.

After a debate extending, at intervals, over a period of several months, Mr. Du Pont was declared by a vote of 31 to 30 not to be entitled to a seat in the Senate.

Subsequently, and during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, Mr. Du Pont presented to the Senate a memorial praying that all the papers and documents in the case be taken from the files and again referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with directions to reinvestigate such election and reconsider the same in all particulars. This memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which committee afterwards filed a report recommending that the case be not reopened.

The history of the case here given consists of a statement of the proceedings of the Senate in the case as published in the Congressional Record, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the views of a minority of the committee, a statement of the days on which the question was debated in the Senate, with a reference to the record of the same as published in the Congressional Record, extracts from remarks of Senators in such debate, the vote on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution submitted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the vote on agreeing to the resolution as amended, the proceedings in the Senate with reference to the memorial subsequently presented by Mr. Du Pont, and the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections recommending that the case be not reopened.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 4, 1895.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, presented the petition of Henry A. Du Pont, of Delaware, claiming a seat in the Senate for the full term commencing March 4, 1895, by virtue of his election by the legislature of the State of Delaware. He also presented a certificate of the election of Mr. Du Pont, signed by the speaker of the Delaware house of representatives and attested by the clerk of the house. Both the claim and the certificate aforesaid were read and ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, pp. 29, 30.)

WEDNESDAY, January 15, 1896.

Mr. Gray presented the affidavits of Robert J. Hanby, William T. Records, Charles A. Hastings, John B. Pennington, and Edward D. Hearne, citizens of the State of Delaware, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, presented sundry affidavits and also portions of the senate journal of the legislature of the State of Delaware, all relating to the question of the election of Mr. Du Pont by the legislature of the State of Delaware, which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed as a document.

FRIDAY, January 24, 1896.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, presented an affidavit relative to the case of Henry A. Du Pont, claiming to have been elected a Senator from the State of Delaware. It was ordered that the affidavit be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, p. 956.)

WEDNESDAY, January 29, 1896.

Mr. Gray presented certain affidavits in the matter of the claim of Henry A. Du Pont to a seat in the United States Senate; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, p. 1065.)

THURSDAY, January 30, 1896.

Mr. Gray presented the affidavit of Samuel Alrichs, of Delaware, in the matter of the claim of Henry A. Du Pont to a seat in the United States Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, p. 1096.)

THURSDAY, February 13, 1896.

Mr. Turpie presented a certified copy of the return of the election of William T. Watson as senator for the county of Kent in the general assembly of the State of Delaware.

The paper was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, p. 1675.)

MONDAY, February 17, 1896.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted a report relative to the claim of Henry A. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware. To this report was appended a resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895."

After a brief discussion the report and resolution were temporarily withdrawn.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, p. 1781.)

TUESDAY, February 18, 1896.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, in behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, presented the resolution and report submitted by him on the preceding day and temporarily withdrawn, in the matter of the claim of Henry A. Du Pont, of the State of Delaware, to a seat in the Senate from that State.

Mr. Turpie submitted the views of the minority of the committee.

It was ordered that the report and the views of the minority of the committee be printed in the Record and also printed together as a document.

(Cong. Rec., vol. 28, 1827, 1828.)

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

[The committee consisted of Messrs. Mitchell of Oregon (chairman), Hoar, Chandler, Burrows, Pritchard, Gray, Pugh, Turpie, and Palmer.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 18, 1896.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report (to accompany S. Res. 133):

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Henry A. Du Pont, of the State of Delaware, claiming a seat in the Senate from that State in virtue of an election by the legislature thereof on May 9, 1895, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

There is in this case no material contention as to the facts. It is conceded the petitioner, Henry A. Du Pont, was, at the date of his alleged election, a citizen of the United States and an inhabitant of the State of Delaware, over 30 years of age, and in all respects qualified to become a Senator.

The legislature of the State of Delaware consists of a senate, composed of 9 senators, 3 of whom are elected from each of the three counties of the State, and a house of representatives of 21 members, 7 of whom are elected from each of the three counties of the State. When there are no vacancies in the membership, and all are present in joint assembly of the two houses for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, such joint assembly is composed of 30 members, thus requiring the votes of 16 members to elect.

In the event of one vacancy caused either by death, resignation, inability to act, or for any other reason, then the joint assembly, all others being present, would be composed of 29 members, in which event the votes of 15 members would be sufficient to elect.

At the meeting of the joint assembly of the legislature of Delaware on the 9th day of May, 1895, which assembly, it is conceded, was in all respects regularly called and held in pursuance of law, the final vote was as follows:

"Joint meeting proceeded to another ballot, which resulted as follows:

Mr. Alrichs, of the senate, voted for	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Fenimore	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Hanby	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Harrington	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Moore	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Pierce	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Pyle	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Records	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Speaker	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Ball, of the house, voted for	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Brown	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Burton	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Daly	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Davis	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Fleming	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Jolls	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Killen	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Money	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Moore	John Edward Addicks.
Mr. Morgan	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Mustard	Ebe W. Tunnell.
Mr. Pyle	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Reybold	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Robbins	J. Edward Addicks.
Mr. Sypherd	Edward Ridgley.
Mr. Townsend	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Walker	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Watson	Ed. Ridgley.
Mr. Wilson	H. A. Du Pont.
Mr. Speaker	H. A. Du Pont.

"The vote as above ascertained having been announced, as follows:

	Votes.
H. A. Du Pont had	15
Ed. Ridgley had	10
J. Edward Addicks had	4
Ebe W. Tunnell had	1

There being present in such joint assembly, and each casting a vote, 30 persons, each claiming to be a member of the legislature of the State of Delaware and entitled to vote for United States Senator.

It is conceded by Mr. Du Pont, and by your committee, that if this contention is true—that is, if each of the 30 persons so present in such joint assembly, and each of whom cast a vote for Senator, was a duly qualified member of the legislature of the State of Delaware, and under no disability, as such, which would deprive him of his right to a seat in such assembly, and to cast a vote for Senator—then Mr. Du Pont was not elected Senator, and is not entitled to a seat in the Senate.

It is admitted upon the part of Mr. Du Pont, and such is the fact, that of the 30 persons so present and claiming a right to vote as aforesaid, 29 of them were so qualified. It is contended, however, that 1 of the 30, namely, William T. Watson, claiming to be a senator from the county of Kent, and claiming to be the speaker of the senate, and claiming the right, as such senator, to be present and participate in the proceedings of such joint assembly, and to cast his vote for Senator, was not entitled, under the constitution of the State of Delaware and the laws of the land, to be present in such joint assembly, had no right to be counted therein in making up the number present, and had no right to cast his vote in such assembly for any person for senator.

If this contention upon the part of Mr. Du Pont is correct, then it is conceded, provided the right to inquire into Watson's qualifications to vote in such assembly now exists, that, inasmuch as in that event there were but 29 members of the legislature of the State of Delaware present entitled to vote, and as it is conceded Mr. Du Pont received the votes of 15 of such members, no one of which was that of Mr. Watson, thus receiving a clear majority of all the votes cast, entitled to be cast, he was duly elected Senator, and is entitled to his seat.

The whole question involved, then, in this case is as to the right of Watson to be present in such joint assembly, and to be counted therein in making up the number present, so as to require the votes of 16 members to make an election.

The ground upon which it is claimed upon the part of Mr. Du Pont that Mr. Watson was ineligible to a seat in such joint assembly, and should not have been counted therein in making up the number constituting the same, is based on the fact that, although he had been duly elected a senator from the county of Kent, and from the commencement of the session in January, 1895, until April 9 of that year, had held and occupied a seat in the senate, and had been elected speaker thereof, and served in that capacity, he had, on the 9th day of April, 1895, the governor of the State of Delaware, Joshua H. Marvil, having died the day previous, succeeded to the governorship of the State in virtue of a provision of the constitution of that State, and from that date until the 9th day of May following had continued to exercise the functions and duties of executive of the State, and has ever since and still continues to exercise the office of governor of said State, and that, therefore, on that date, May 9, 1895, he, then holding the office of and being the governor of the State of Delaware, was ineligible to a seat in said joint assembly, and had no right whatever, under the provisions of the constitution of the State and of the laws of the land, to be present, either to participate by his vote or otherwise, or to be counted therein.

Your committee hold that this contention on the part of Mr. Du Pont is well founded.

The clause in the Delaware constitution in pursuance of which Mr. Watson, as speaker of the senate, became governor on April 9, 1895, and which will be commented on later in this report, is found in section 14 of Article III, and is as follows:

"Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

It is conceded a vacancy in the office of governor occurred on April 8, 1895, by the death of the then governor of the State, Joshua H. Marvil; also that Senator Watson was then and on April 9, 1895, speaker of the senate, and that on this latter date he took the required oaths, was inaugurated, and entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, and has continued to hold and exercise such office ever since.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The legislature of the State of Delaware met in biennial session on the first Tuesday of January, 1895, and on that day organized by the election of speakers and other officers for the senate and house of representatives. There were at that time 9 members of the Senate and 21 members of the house of representatives, 3 senators and 7 representatives having been chosen from each of the three counties in the State. At the organization of the senate William T. Watson was duly elected speaker and continued in the discharge of his official duties as speaker of the senate, save during occasional absences, until the 9th day of April, 1895, the day following that on which Joshua H. Marvil, governor of the State of Delaware, died.

This legislature being charged with the duty of electing a Senator of the United States for the constitutional term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1895, and having failed to elect such Senator on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of such legislature, convened in joint assembly on the next day, being the 16th day of January, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress," approved July 25, 1866, and proceeded to vote for a United States Senator.

No one having been elected to that office on that day, the legislature, pursuant to the provisions of said act, convened in joint assembly on the following and succeeding days, Sundays excepted, until and including Thursday, the 9th day of May, 1895. No one was elected United States Senator prior to the day last named. On the 9th day of April aforesaid, immediately after the joint assembly of the two houses had separated, Senator William T. Watson, who at the time of the death of Governor Marvil, which occurred on the preceding day, had been speaker of the senate, took the official oaths prescribed for the governor of the State of Delaware, and forthwith entered upon the exercise of that office.

It is conceded that from the commencement of the voting for a United States Senator until and including the 9th day of April, Senator William T. Watson took part in such voting except during occasional absences.

Furthermore it is a conceded fact, and if not conceded, fully borne out by the journal entries and other testimony, that from the time he took the oaths of office and assumed the functions of governor in the exercise of such office until the final joint assembly of the two houses on the 9th day of May, Governor Watson did not upon any occasion take any part either in the proceedings of the senate or of the joint assembly.

And, further, it is clear to your committee from the record and other evidence submitted that from the hour of his inauguration as governor, by taking the constitutional oaths required of a governor, his name was dropped from the roll call of the senate and was never once called, either as of speaker or as of a senator, on any roll call had on any bill, resolution, or motion until the final adjournment of the senate. Senator Alrichs, in his affidavit of date January 28, 1896 (Doc. 9, part 6, p. 1), shows this conclusively, and it is not contradicted by any affidavit filed in the case. The following is Senator Alrichs's affidavit in full:

AFFIDAVIT OF SAMUEL ALRICHS.

"STATE OF DELAWARE, Newcastle County, ss:

"On this 28th day of January, A. D. 1896, before me, Edward G. Cook, a notary public for the State of Delaware in and for Newcastle County, personally comes Samuel Alrichs, who, being by me first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"That he is a member of the senate of the State of Delaware, as stated by him in a previous affidavit made in the above matter; that he took his seat in said senate on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895, for a term of four years; that, after William T. Watson took the oath of office as governor of the State of Delaware upon the death of Governor Marvil, to wit, on the 9th day of April, A. D. 1895, to the expiration of the last session of the senate on the 9th day of May of said year, the clerk of the senate did not call the name of William T. Watson as a member of the senate. He was neither on the call of the roll at the assembling of any session, nor upon the taking of any roll call upon bill, resolution, or other motion. He was not reported by the clerk as either present or absent; neither was his name called or recorded upon the taking of any yea or nay vote as being present or absent. William T. Watson's name was thus dropped from the rolls after he became governor by reason of no special order, or action, or motion, or otherwise, taken in respect thereto by the senate. It must have been done by the order of the speaker pro tempore. It was, however, in accordance with the general understanding of the members of the senate that William T. Watson was no lonyer a member of that body.

"SAMUEL ALRICHS.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me the day and year first above written, as witness my hand and official seal.

"[SEAL.] EDWARD J. COOK, Notary Public."

It is conceded, however, that Governor Watson did, on the 9th day of May aforesaid, enter the final joint assembly and assume the right to be counted as a member of such assembly, and the right to vote therein for a United States Senator. During this final assembly 28 ballots were had for United States Senator. The vote upon each ballot as shown by the record of such assembly was as follows:

	Votes.
Henry A. Du Pont	15
Ed. Ridgely	10
J. E. Addicks	4
E. W. Tunnell	1

Willliam T. Watson, then governor of the State of Delaware, as aforesaid, cast his vote each time for Ed. Ridgely.

THE VITAL QUESTION.

It will be seen, therefore, the whole question of the right of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate, as claimed, turns upon the single question: Had William T. Watson, then holding and exercising the office of governor of the State of Delaware, a right under the constitution of that State and the laws of the land, to exercise the office of State senator, and as such to sit in the joint assembly on May 9, 1895, to be counted therein in making up the number constituting such joint assembly, and to vote therein for a United States Senator? Your committee are clearly of the opinion he had not.

PROPOSITIONS INVOLVED.

In determining this question three different propositions are presented for our consideration:

First. Did the offices of senator and speaker of the senate, held by William T. Watson from the commencement of the session of the Delaware legislature in January, 1895, until April 9, 1895, become absolutely vacant on the inauguration of said William T. Watson as governor of the State by taking the oaths of office required of a person entering upon the exercise of that office? Or,

Second. If such offices of senator and speaker of the senate did not become absolutely vacant upon such inauguration as governor, was the right of Watson to exercise the functions of both speaker of the senate and senator held in abeyance and suspended for and during the time he should continue to hold and exercise the office of governor. Or,

Third. While holding and exercising the office of governor did said William T. Watson not only continue to hold the offices of senator and speaker of the senate, but did his right to exercise all the functions of such senator and speaker of the senate while holding and excercising the office of governor continue to exist?

The answer to either or both of the first two propositions in the affirmative settles the question in favor of the right of Mr. Du Pont to a seat, while an affirmative answer to the third proposition, which of course negatives the other two, would be a denial of his right to a seat.

In discussing these several propositions, therefore, it becomes, in the view taken by your committee, wholly unnecessary, in reaching a correct conclusion as to the merits of the present controversy, to determine the question as to whether the offices of senator and speaker of the senate became absolutely vacant upon the accession of the speaker of the senate to the office of governor, so as to entitle the electors of Kent County to fill such vacancy by election, or so as to prevent his resuming his place as senator and speaker at the termination of his term of office, and of his right to exercise the office of governor, as it is clear, if the right of Watson, while holding the office of governor and exercising that office, to exercise the functions of a senator, whether for the reason that his office as such senator had ipso facto become vacant, or for any other reason, based on a fair construction of the various provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware, and the well-known rule of law relating to incompatible offices, was suspended, then in either of such events the presence of Governor Watson in the joint assembly May 9, 1895, and his voting for a United States Senator therein while holding and exercising the office of governor, were wholly illegal, and in such event his vote in such joint assembly should not be counted.

WHETHER THE OFFICES HELD BY MR. WATSON AS SENATOR AND SPEAKER OF THE SENATE DID OR DID NOT BECOME ABSOLUTELY VACANT ON HIS BECOMING GOVERNOR, IT IS CLEAR THAT WHILE HOLDING AND EXERCISING SUCH EXECUTIVE OFFICE HIS RIGHT TO EXERCISE ANY OF THE FUNCTIONS, EITHER OF THE OFFICE OF SENATOR OR SPEAKER OF THE SENATE, WAS ABSOLUTELY SUSPENDED.

Whether the offices held by Mr. Watson as senator and speaker of the senate did or did not become absolutely vacant on his becoming governor, it is clear that while holding and exercising such executive office his right to exercise any of the functions, either of the office of senator or speaker of the senate, was absolutely suspended.

This conclusion is based on what seems to your committee to be—

First. The only reasonable and fair construction of various provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware;

Second. Because it is sustained and supported by the well-recognized rule of the common law which inhibits either the holding or exercising simultaneously by the same person two incompatible offices, and also by the principles of our American system that legislative and executive offices are incompatible; and,

Third. Because the uniform unbroken usage observed in Delaware by its governors, legislators, and people for more than one hundred years is to this effect, that is to say, that the right to exercise the offices of senator and speaker of the senate is suspended and held in abeyance during the time he is exercising the office of governor, and that both offices can not by such person be exercised simultaneously, and in perfect harmony with the constitutional provisions of the State which, in our judgment, expressly forbid the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the offices of governor and State senator.

LEGAL PROPOSITIONS.

Before proceeding to analyze these various constitutional provisions in their application to the present controversy, your committee respectfully submit the following propositions, the soundness of which it will endeavor to maintain:

First. It is a well-settled rule of the common law that the same person shall not exercise simultaneously two incompatible offices; and further, the acceptance of one is ipso facto a resignation of the other.

Second. Under the American system, executive and legislative offices are incompatible, and the same person can not exercise both simultaneously in the absence of either express or clearly implied statutory or constitutional authority, and the acceptance of a second such is ipso facto a resignation of the first.

Third. There is no express or implied authority in the Delaware constitution for the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the offices of governor and senator; on the contrary, the constitution expressly interdicts such exercise of those two offices, and therefore at the time when Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes in the joint assembly, Mr. Watson being then governor of the State, holding and exercising that executive office, was incapable of exercising the office of senator.

Fourth. The theory that Mr. Watson can exercise the office of governor of the State and State senator simultaneously involves innumerable constitutional repugnancies, perplexing difficulties, and endless absurdities, while the opposite theory reconciles and harmonizes all the provisions of the Delaware constitution relating to the subject under consideration.

Fifth. Whether or not the offices of State senator and speaker of the senate became absolutely vacant when Speaker Watson took the oaths of office, was inaugurated governor of the State, and entered upon the exercise of that office, there can be no doubt on a fair construction of the several constitutional provisions of the State of Delaware, that his right to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate, or any of the functions connected therewith while he continued to hold and exercise the office of governor, was absolutely suspended.

Sixth. That Governor Watson's exercise of the office of senator in the joint assembly, and of the office of president of the joint assembly, was illegal, and his vote for United States senator a nullity.

Seventh. The journal entries of the proceedings of the Delaware senate on May 9, 1895, are conclusive as to the number and names of senators present, the motions submitted, the votes cast, and of all the proceedings had, and can not be contradicted by ex parte affidavits.

Eighth. The right which undoubtedly belongs exclusively to the Delaware senate to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, does not vest in such senate any such exclusive right as would conclude the Senate of the United States, to determine by construction whether the constitution of the State does or does not recognize a certain seat as subject to occupation, nor does it include the power to admit members to seats not recognized by the constitution of the State as subject to occupation, or if subject to occupation, to fill them in a manner or by a person which the State constitution forbids.

This latter proposition will receive first consideration at the hands of your committee.

PROVISIONS OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION.

The following are the several more important provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware, which have, as it is believed, any bearing upon this controversy. They are all, for convenience of the Senate, inserted here, and will be considered and construed in pari materia. Certain other clauses will be cited and commented on later in this report:

"ART. 2. SEC. 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives.

"ART. 3. SEC. 1. The supreme executive powers of the State shall be vested in a governor.

"ART. 6. SEC. 1. The judicial power of this State shall be vested in a court of errors and appeals, a superior court, a court of chancery, an orphan's court, a court of over and terminer, a court of general sessions of the peace and jail delivery, a register's court, justices of the peace, and such other courts as the general assembly, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of both houses, shall, from time to time, establish."

Section 14, of Article III, is as follows:

"SEC. 14. Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If the person elected governor shall die, or become disqualified before the commencement of his term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, the person holding the office shall continue to exercise it until a governor shall be elected and duly qualified. If, upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor, there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If a vacancy occur in the office of governor, or if the governor-elect die or become disqualified before the commencement of his term, or refuse to take the office, an election for governor shall be held at the next general election, unless the vacancy happen within six days next preceding the election, exclusive of the day of the happening of the vacancy and the day of the election; in that case, if an election for governor would not have been held at said election without the happening of such vacancy, no election for governor shall be held at said election in consequence of such vacancy. If the trial of a contested election shall continue longer than until the third Tuesday of January next ensuing the election of a governor, the governor of the last year, or the speaker of the senate or of the house of representatives, who may then be in the exercise of the executive authority, shall continue therein until a determination of such contested election. The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature."

Section 12, Article II, provides as follows:

"SEC. 12. * * * No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor Member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States, except the Attorney-General, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia holding no disqualifying office shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a Senator or Representative."

Section 5 of Article III:

"SEC. 5. No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States, or this State, shall exercise the office of governor."

The following is the oath of office taken by each of the governors of the State of Delaware upon his accession to office. It is prescribed by Article VIII of the constitution.

"Members of the general assembly and all officers, executive and judicial, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the constitution of this State and to perform the duties of their respective offices with fidelity."

The following are the journal entries of the Delaware senate of proceedings therein on April 9, 1895:

"The Hon. James L. Wolcott then administered, in the presence of the members of the senate, to Hon. William Tharp Watson, speaker of the senate, the following oaths of office as governor, to wit: 'I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear, on the holy evangels of Almighty God, that I will support the Constitution of the United States of America. So help me God.'

"'I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear, on the holy evangels of Almighty God, that I will support the constitution of the State of Delaware. So help me God.'

"'I, William T. Watson, do solemnly swear, on the holy evangels of Almighty God, that I will perform the duties of the office of governor of the State of Delaware with fidelity. So help me God.'

"Thereupon the speaker called Mr. Pyle to the chair and retired from the senate chamber."

Section 1, Article VI, of the constitution is as follows:

"SEC. 1. The judicial power of this State shall be vested in a court of errors and appeals, a superior court, a court of chancery, an orphans' court, a court of oyer and terminer, a court of general sessions of the peace and gaol delivery, a register's court, justices of the peace, and such other courts as the general assembly, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of both houses, shall from time to time establish."

It is provided in Article III, section 3, that—

"The governor shall hold his office during four years from the third Tuesday in January next ensuing his election, and shall not be eligible a second time to said office."

And in Article III, section 4, that—

"SEC. 4. He shall be at least thirty years of age, and have been a citizen and inhabitant of the United States twelve years next before the first meeting of the legislature after his election, and the last six of that term an inhabitant of this State, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this State."

Article III, section 11, provides as follows:

"He shall, from time to time, give to the general assembly information of affairs concerning the State, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge expedient."

It is further provided in section 9, of Article III of the constitution, as follows:

"SEC. 9. He shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures and to grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment. He shall set forth in writing, fully, the grounds of all reprieves, pardons, and remissions, to be entered in the register of his official acts and laid before the general assembly at their next session."

The following are the provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware bearing upon the election of senators and the constitution of the senate of that State:

"ART. 2. SEC. 3. The senators shall be chosen for four years by the citizens residing in the several counties. * * *

"There shall be three senators chosen in each county. When a greater number of senators shall by the general assembly be judged necessary, two-thirds of each branch concurring, they may by law make provision for increasing their number; but the number of senators shall never be greater than one-half nor less than one-third of the number of representatives.

"SEC. 2. The representatives shall be chosen for two years by the citizens residing in the several counties. * * *

"There shall be seven representatives chosen in each county, until a greater number of representatives shall by the general assembly be judged necessary; and then, two-thirds of each branch of the legislature concurring, they may by law make provision for increasing their number."

The qualifications of a senator of the legislature of the State of Delaware are prescribed by section 3 of Article II of the constitution of that State, as follows:

"No person shall be a senator who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-seven years, and have, in the county in which he shall be chosen, a freehold estate in two hundred acres of land, or an estate in real or personal property, or in either, of the value of one thousand pounds at least, and have been a citizen and inhabitant of the State three years next preceding the first meeting of the legislature after his election, and the last year of that term an inhabitant of the county in which he shall be chosen, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States or of this State."

While the qualifications of a representative in the legislature of the State of Delaware are set forth in section 2 of Article II, as follows:

"No person shall be a representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-four years, and have been a citizen and inhabitant of the State three years next preceding the first meeting of the legislature after his election, and the last year of that term an inhabitant of the county in which he shall be chosen, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this State."

While section 1 of Article IV provides that—

"All elections for governor, senators, representatives, sheriffs, and coroners shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November of the year in which they are to be held, and be by ballot."

Section 2 of Article II provides that—

"The representatives shall be chosen for two years by the citizens residing in the several counties."

Section 3 of Article II provides that—

"That senators shall be chosen for four years by the citizens residing in the several counties."

Section 4 of Article II provides that—

"The general assembly shall meet on the first Tuesday of January, biennially, unless sooner convened by the governor. The first meeting of the general assembly under this amended constitution shall be on the first Tuesday of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-three, which shall be the commencement of biennial sessions."

It is provided in Article II, section 6, that—

"Each house shall judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

While Article V, sections 1 and 2, are as follows:

"ARTICLE V.

"SECTION 1. The house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeaching; but two-thirds of all the members must concur in an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the senate; and when sitting for that purpose the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to the evidence. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of all the senators.

"SEC. 2. The governor, and all other civil officers under this State, shall be liable to impeachment for treason, bribery, or any high crime or misdemeanor in office. Judgment in such cases shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under this State; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law."

It is provided in Article III, section 14, as follows:

"The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature."

Article II, section 5, provides that—

"Each house shall choose its speaker and other officers; and also each house, whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor, may choose a speaker pro tempore."

Article II, section 7, provides that—

"Each house may, * * * with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, etc."

Article VII, section 3, provides that—

"The legislature, two-thirds of each branch concurring, may vest the appointment of sheriffs and coroners in the governor."

Article III, section 14, is as follows:

"If upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect, by joint ballot of both houses, a person to exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified."

A PRELIMINARY QUESTION.—THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES MAY INQUIRE INTO THE RIGHT OF GOVERNOR WATSON TO A SEAT IN THE JOINT ASSEMBLY AND TO VOTE FOR A UNITED STATES SENATOR THEREIN.

At the threshold in this investigation we are confronted with the question, Has the Senate of the United States the constitutional power to inquire into the question as to the right of Watson, then governor of the State, to a seat in the State senate, and to be present in the joint assembly, and to vote for a United States Senator?

Those opposing the claim of Mr. DuPont insist no such power exists, and the reason advanced in support of this contention is that the senate of Delaware passed judgment upon Watson's qualifications as a member of that body, and that such decision is conclusive.

Counsel, in opposition to the claim of Mr. DuPont, cite section 6, Article II, of the constitution of the State of Delaware, as follows:

"Each house shall judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Then, conceding that in order to conclude the United States Senate, the State senate must have either actually or constructively acted, and rendered judgment upon the question of his right to a seat therein, it is by the opposition assumed, and the declaration is made, that such action was had, such judgment in this case was rendered, and hence the Senate of the United States is concluded.

Your committee deny this contention. They deny that the Delaware senate ever at any time after Watson became governor, either actually or constructively, passed upon his qualifications to a seat in that body. And it is upon this branch of the case there is any controversy whatever as to the facts.

It is conceded by your committee that Governor Watson, after having studiously refrained from attempting to exercise any of the functions of senator or speaker of the senate from the date of his inauguration as governor, April 9, 1895, until May 9, 1895, a fact also conceded by those opposing the claim of Mr. Du Pont, did on this latter date, May 9, 1895, the legislature being about to adjourn sine die, enter the senate chamber a few minutes before the hour of 12 o'clock meridian, at which time the senate was to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to meet the members of the house in joint assembly for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, and after conversing with two or more members until a few moments before 12 o'clock meridian, did then, the president pro tempore leaving the chair, take the chair of speaker of the senate, all the business of the senate having been concluded, and immediately made this announcement:

"The hour of 12 having arrived, the senate will proceed to take part in the joint assembly."

That, while occupying the chair as speaker of the senate, Governor Watson took no part whatever in any of the legislative functions of the senate, other than what related to proceeding to the hall of the house of representatives by the senate for the purpose of attending the joint assembly to elect a United States Senator. These are the facts and all the facts in reference to this matter, as found by your committee.

THE SENATE JOURNAL ENTRIES ARE CONCLUSIVE AS AGAINST EX PARTE AFFIDAVITS AS TO WHAT OCCURRED IN THE SENATE MAY 9, 1895.

This brings us to a consideration of the seventh proposition hereinbefore stated, namely: That the journal entries of the proceedings of the Delaware senate on May 9, 1895, are conclusive as to the number and names of senators present, the motions submitted, the votes cast, and of all the proceedings had, and can not be contradicted by ex parte affidavits.

The law is well settled by more than 120 adjudicated cases in the courts of last resort in more than twenty of the States in the American Union, as also by the Supreme Court of the United States, that where a State constitution prescribes such formalities in the enactment of laws as require a record of the yeas and nays on the legislative journals, those journals are conclusive as against, not only a printed statute published by authority of law, but also against a duly enrolled act. The principle now contended for falls far short of going to this extent.

The question involved in the case under consideration is not whether the legislative journals are conclusive against a printed statute or an enrolled act, but whether they are conclusive as against ex parte affidavits by which such journals are sought to be contradicted.

Your committee, without indulging in argument upon this point, beg to attract attention to the following authorities, national and State, which hold to the doctrine that legislative journals are conclusive as against a duly enrolled act. Surely, if this be so, it can not be otherwise than they are conclusive against ex parte affidavits, the reason for this application of the rule being infinitely stronger than for the other.

The following is a list of the authorities, 124 in number, relied on. It is believed few Federal or State authorities can be found to conflict with these. Decisions can be found, as, for instance, in Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649–678), to the effect that where the constitution contains no provision requiring entries on the journal of particular matters, such, for example, as calls of the yeas and nays on a measure in question, the enrolled acts can not in such case be impeached by the journals. That, however, is a very different proposition from the one involved here.

The constitution of Michigan contained the following clause:

"No public act shall take effect or be in force until the expiration of ninety days from the end of the session at which the same is passed, unless the legislature shall otherwise direct, by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house."

In People v. Mahany (13 Mich., 481, 492) Mr. Justice Cooley, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"As the court are bound judicially to take notice of what the law is, we have no doubt it is our right, as well as our duty, to take notice not only of the printed statute books, but also of the journals of the two houses, to enable us to determine whether all the constitutional requisites to the validity of a statute have been complied with. The printed statute is not even prima facie valid, when other records, of which the court must equally take notice, show that some constitutional formality is wanting."

The constitution of California contained the following provision:

"No bill shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house."

In the Railroad Tax Case (8 Sawyer, 238, 293) Judge Sawyer, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Field, said:

"On March 4 the house considered the senate amendment, and, upon a call of the yeas and nays, as required by the constitution, thirty-nine members voted for the amendment, and thirty-two against it, there being four paired and not voting; thus the votes in favor of the amendment were two less than a majority of members elected to the house, and the bill failed. * All this appears upon the journal. * The bill, therefore, was never constitutionally passed, and never became a law. Under the decisions of the courts, upon constitutional provisions in all respects similar to that in the present constitution of California, it is settled that the court, to inform itself, will look to the journals of the legislature."

In Spangler v. Jacoby (14 Ill., 297, 300) the court said:

"The act in question was signed by the speakers of the two houses, and it received the assent of the executive. Prima facie, therefore, it became a law. But the journal of the house of representatives fails wholly to show that it was ever put upon its final passage in that house; in other words, it does not appear that it passed with the concurrence of a majority of the members elect of that body. The act did not become a law in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution, and it is therefore null and void. The judgment is reversed."

In Berry v. R. R. Co. (41 Md., 446, 463, 465), Judge Alvey, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The question has repeatedly arisen in several of the State courts of the highest authority, and in all cases, with but few exceptions, it has been held that neither the printed statute book nor the ordinary authentication of the statute after its passage would preclude the inquiry into the fact whether the statute, as published, had in truth passed the legislature; and, as evidence upon the question, the legislative journals and the bills as acted upon by the legislative assemblies have been consulted. * We can have no doubt whatever that the third section of the act in question, as that act was sealed and approved by the governor, is materially different from the third section of the act as it passed the two houses of the legislature, and we must therefore declare that particular section of the act to be null and void."

The constitution of the State of Delaware, Article II, section 17, contains the following clause:

"No act of incorporation, except for the renewal of existing corporations, shall be hereafter enacted without the concurrence by two-thirds of each branch of the legislature."

This provision requires the yeas and nays to be recorded in the journals on the passage of every new act of incorporation.

THE DELAWARE SENATE DID NOT, EITHER ACTUALLY OR CONSTRUCTIVELY, JUDGE OF THE QUALIFICATIONS OF GOVERNOR WATSON TO A SEAT IN THE SENATE AT ANY TIME SUBSEQUENT TO HIS BECOMING GOVERNOR OF THE STATE.

As bearing upon the question as to what occurred either of a legislative or quasi judicial character in the Delaware senate on May 9, 1895, Mr. Du Pont presents a certified copy of the senate journal entries of the proceedings of the senate of that date (Doc. 9, Part II, pp. 431), and insists such journal entries are conclusive upon that question. Mr. Du Pont, however, as is his right, presents also the ex parte affidavits of certain State senators and others, not for the purpose, however, of contradicting but confirming such journal entries; while those opposing Mr. Du Pont present certain ex parte affidavits tending strongly to impeach and contradict such journal entries in certain respects.

Should these affidavits tending to impeach the journal entries be considered as competent evidence, then there is a slight conflict of testimony in respect to the exact time and manner in which Governor Watson attempted to resume and did resume his seat as speaker of the senate on said 9th day of May, 1895.

Your committee, however, while protesting such ex parte affidavits can not be considered in so far as they tend to impeach the journal entries, regard this conflict as immaterial and as not in any manner materially affecting the merits of the case, whatever view may be taken of the testimony.

Upon the part of those opposing Mr. Du Pont and denying his right to a seat in the senate it is contended, which contention it is sought to maintain by these ex parte affidavits contradictory of the senate journal entries, and which is, in the judgment of your committee, not sustained, but, on the contrary, clearly contradicted by the senate journal entries and other evidence submitted, except so far as hereinbefore conceded, that Governor Watson entered the senate chamber on said 9th day of May "between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock"—just how long before 12, whether fifty-nine minutes or five seconds before, is not stated in any of the affidavits filed—the senate being in session, and took the chair as speaker of the senate; that he presided over the senate until 12 o'clock m., the hour for the two houses to convene in joint assembly; how long he so presided, whether fifty-nine minutes or one minute or one second, is not stated in any of the affidavits filed, nor is it disclosed by the record; that while he presided over the senate, it is claimed in one or more of these affidavits, he "voted in the affirmative upon at least one corporation bill," and declared that such bill had passed the senate, it having received the required constitutional majority. What corporation bill it was which it is alleged he so voted on is not disclosed, either by the affidavit of Governor Watson himself, which is filed in the case, or by any other testimony.

It is further claimed he, while presiding in the senate, "put motions made by senators;" but what motion or motions he so put si not stated either in briefs of counsel or in any of the evidence submitted. In so far as these several affidavits filed in opposition to Mr. Du Pont relate to the exact time when Governor Watson assumed the speaker's chair in the senate they are not contradictory of the affidavits filed by Mr. Du Pont. The latter say it was after all the legislative business was ended and just as the senate was about to proceed to the hall of the house of representatives to take part in the joint assembly (which all agree was 12 m.), while the former are to the effect that he entered the senate chamber between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock—how many moments before 12 m. is not stated—and that he, of course, subsequently took the chair.

That precisely what Governor Watson says on this subject may be readily seen, your committee present herewith his affidavit in full:

"AFFIDAVIT OF WILLIAM T. WATSON, SPEAKER OF THE SENATE OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE.

"STATE OF DELAWARE, Kent County, ss:

"Be it remembered that on this 28th day of January, A. D. 1896, personally came before me, William E. Riggs, jr., a notary public of the State of Delaware, resident in Kent County, William T. Watson, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, did depose and say that he was elected speaker of the senate on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1895, and on the 9th day of April of the same year, after the death of Joshua Marvil, the duly elected and qualified governor of the State of Delaware, assumed the exercise of the office of governor; that on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1895, between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock m., this affiant entered the senate chamber, whereupon William T. Records, speaker pro tempore, vacated the chair, and he, this affiant, took the same and presided over the senate until the hour for the two houses to assemble in joint meeting arrived, and then announced the same and proceeded at the head of the senators into the hall of the house of representatives, where he presided over the joint assembly from the beginning to the end thereof and voted upon all questions which arose during the session, no objection having been made to his so presiding or voting until at or about the time the last ballot was taken, when Senator Alrichs read a written protest against his right to so vote and preside; that while he presided over the senate on that day in its chamber he voted upon one bill at least and announced its passage by the senate; that he received and put motions made by senators and was addressed as speaker of that body, and that no objection from any quarter was made to his acting as presiding officer of the senate and otherwise participating in the proceedings thereof while in session during the hour aforesaid.

"WILLIAM T. WATSON.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me the day and year aforesaid.

"[SEAL.] "WILLIAM E. RIGGS, JR.,
"Notary Public."

It will be seen Governor Watson admits in this affidavit his right to vote and preside in said joint assembly was challenged in writing.

SENATE JOURNAL ENTRIES AND EX PARTE AFFIDAVITS.

As bearing upon this question of fact Mr. Du Pont has presented the following testimony:

(1) A copy of the journal entries of the proceedings of the senate of that date. (See Senate Document No. 9, part 2, first session Fifty-fourth Congress.) And also, in corroboration of and support of senate journal entries, the following:

(2) The affidavit of John M. C. Moore, a State senator of the Delaware senate from Sussex County. (See Doc. id., 31.)

(3) The affidavit of George F. Pierce, a State senator of the Delaware senate from Sussex County. (Doc. id., 33.)

(4) The affidavit of Samuel Alrichs, a State senator of the senate of Delaware from Newcastle County. (Doc. id., 34.)

(5) The affidavit of Edgar T. Hastings, clerk of the house of representatives of the State of Delaware. (Doc. id., 35.)

(6) The affidavit of John S. Prettyman, jr. (Doc. id., 36.)

(7) The affidavit of Frank Reedy. (Doc. id., 37.)

(8) The affidavit of George L. Townsend. (Doc. id., 38.)

(9) The affidavit of William Michael Byrne. (Senate Doc. 9, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, part 4, pp. 1–3.)

(10) Second affidavit of State Senator Samuel Alrichs. (Doc. 9, part 6, p. 1.)

While in opposition to these journal entries, and contradictory thereof and of these several affidavits, those opposed to the claim of Mr. DuPont have presented the following:

(1) The affidavit of Robert J. Hanby, State senator in the senate of Delaware from the county of Newcastle. (Doc. 9, part 3, p. 1.)

(2) The affidavit of William T. Records, State senator from Sussex County and speaker pro tempore of the Delaware senate. (Doc. 9, part 3, p. 2.)

(3) The affidavit of Charles A. Hastings, clerk of the senate of the State of Delaware.

(4) The affidavit of John B. Pennington. (Doc. 9, part 3, p. 2.)

(5) The affidavit of Edward D. Hearne, assistant to Charles A. Hastings, the clerk of the senate. (Doc. 9, part 3, p. 4.)

(6) The affidavit of William T. Watson, claiming to be speaker of the senate of the State of Delaware. (Doc. 9, part 5, p. 1.)

(7) The affidavit of Cyrus Cort, chaplain of the senate of the State of Delaware for the session of 1895. (Doc. 9, part 5, p. 2.)

For the convenience of the Senate this copy of the senate journal entries of the proceedings of the senate of the State of Delaware on May 9, 1895, also these affidavits, also the certificate of the election of Mr. DuPont, signed by the speaker of the Delaware house of representatives and attested by the clerk of the house (see Doc. 9, pp. 1–5), together with the affidavits of Edgar T. Hastings, clerk of the Delaware house of representatives, Henry McMullen, speaker of said house, and Samuel Alrichs, a State senator, attached thereto (Doc. 9, pp. 3–8), are printed together in an appendix hereto attached, marked A, and made a part of the report of your committee.

It will be observed from an inspection of the journal entries of the proceedings of the Delaware senate of May 9, 1895, that at the convening of the senate at 11 o'clock a. m., Thursday, May 9, 1895, but 8 senators were present, including "Mr. Speaker pro tempore." No mention is made of the presence of Senator Watson or Speaker Watson (Doc. 9, part 2, p. 4), while the names making up the 8 senators alleged to be present are all given, as follows: Messrs. Alrichs, Fenimore, Hanby, Harrington, Moore, Pierce, Pyle, Mr. Speaker pro tempore.

It will be noticed, furthermore, that the yeas and nays were taken that date on but six different measures, as follows:

(1) On house bill entitled "An act to amend sections 5 and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the town of Frederica.'"

On this question there were, yeas, 8; nays, 0.

(2) On house bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Acetyline Light Company."

On the passage of this bill the vote was, yeas, 8; nays, 0.

(3) On house bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Silverbrook Cemetery Company," on the passage of which the vote was, yeas, 8; nays, 0.

(4) On substitute for house bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Hall Company of Lewes."

On the passage of this bill the vote was, yeas, 7; nays, 0—Senator Hanby being either absent or not voting. The 7 voting for the bill did not include the name of Watson.

(5) On house bill entitled "An act relating to certain lands of the Wellman Iron and Steel Company, in Newcastle County."

On the passage of this bill the vote was, yeas, 8; nays, 0.

(6) On house bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Calhoun-Jones Company, of Georgetown, Sussex County."

On the passage of this bill the vote was, yeas, 8; nays, 0.

The foregoing were the only bills placed upon passage in the senate on May 9, 1895, on which the yeas and nays were taken and entered on the journal; and in each instance, except one, there were but 8 votes cast in all, including the speaker pro tempore, so called, and entered on the journal; and Watson was not present, either as senator or speaker of the senate, nor is his name anywhere mentioned, nor is his vote recorded on any of these bills, nor is he named as putting any motion to the senate or transacting any other business whatever.

In the one case above mentioned—that is, on the passage of the house measure entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Hall Company of Lewes"—there were but 7 votes cast, including the speaker pro tempore, Senator Hanby not voting. Watson was not present or voting.

The only other proceedings had in the senate on that date, May 9, 1895, subsequent to the vote on the last house bill, on which the yeas and nays were called as above—that is, on the house bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Calhoun-Jones Company, of Georgetown, Sussex County" (Doc. 9, part 2, p. 7)—are best stated by quoting in hæc verba the whole of the subsequent journal entries of the proceedings of that day, as follows:

"Ordered, That the house be informed thereof, and the bill returned to that body.

"Mr. Hastings, clerk of the house, being admitted, informed the senate that the house had passed and requested the concurrence of the senate in the following house bill entitled 'An act to divorce Benjamin O. Jacobs from his wife, Victoria W. Jacobs.'

"Mr. Hastings, clerk of the house, being admitted, presented for the signature of the speaker of the senate the following duly and correctly enrolled house bills, the same having been signed by the speaker of the house:

"An act to incorporate the Silverbrook Cemetery Company.

"An act relative to bonds, undertakings, and other obligations with surety or sureties, to the acceptance as surety or guarantor thereupon of companies qualified to act as such and to provide a uniform system of procedure by and standard of qualifications for such companies.

"Mr. Hastings, the clerk of the house, being admitted, returned to the senate the following duly and correctly enrolled senate bill, the same having been signed by the speakers of both houses:

"An act to divorce Ellen Tatem Pusey from her husband, Joshua B. Pusey.

"Mr. Hastings, clerk of the house, being admitted, informed the senate that the house had passed the following senate bills:

"An act relating to certain lands of the Wellman Iron and Steel Company, in Newcastle County.

"An act to incorporate Calhoun-Jones Company, of Georgetown.

"An act to incorporate the North American Construction Company.

"An act to divorce Elzey D. Richardson from his wife, Jennie A. Richardson.

"And returned the same to the senate."

From the above record it will be observed no further measures were placed upon their passage, either by a call for the yeas and nays or otherwise. It was simply ordered that the house be advised of the passage of the above-named house bills.

The clerk of the house informed the senate—

(1) That the house had passed a bill to divorce Benjamin O. Jacobs from his wife, Victoria W. Jacobs.

(2) He presented for the signature of the speaker two bills.

(3) He announced that two certain bills had been signed by the speakers of both houses.

(4) He informed the senate that the house had passed four senate bills, and he returned the same to the senate.

From the beginning, therefore, until the end of the journal entries of the proceedings of the Delaware senate on May 9, 1895, there is not only no mention of the fact that Governor Watson was present and voted on any corporation or any other bill, either in the affirmative or negative, or that he put any motion or announced any result, but, on the contrary, the record discloses the fact that he was not present, or at least did not vote on any roll call, during that entire day.

The only other bills placed on their passage in the senate May 9, 1895, other than those above mentioned, on which the yeas and nays were taken, and not one of which was a corporation bill, and all of which were acted upon prior to the action upon any one of the bills above named, on which the yeas and nays were called, were the following:

(1) An act relating to the salary of the attorney-general. (Doc. 9, part 2, p. 4.)

(2) An act for the relief of Robert Cook, deceased. (Id.)

(3) Joint resolutions in relation to paying William T. Smithers, and John D. Hawkins, secretary of state. (Id.)

(4) An act to prevent bogus sales within the State of Delaware, etc. (Doc. id.)

Your committee, therefore, in response to the contention of those opposing Mr. DuPont, to the effect that the Delaware senate, as a matter of fact, acted upon and passed judgment May 9, 1895, on the qualifications of Governor Watson to a seat in the senate, say:

First. This is a question which can alone be determined by an inspection of the record of the journal entries of the senate, which record can not be contradicted by ex parte affidavits; and that such record is not merely silent on the subject, but affirmatively shows that Governor Watson took no part whatever, either as senator or speaker of the senate, in any of the proceedings of the senate on May 9, 1895, and furthermore that no question as to his qualifications to a seat in the senate was submitted or acted upon, either directly or constructively; and

Second. Were it proper to admit ex parte affidavits in opposition to the record, a proposition denied by your committee, even then, giving to such affidavits every consideration and weight which should be accorded to them as competent testimony in the case, and taking into consideration all the evidence presented on both sides, the preponderance of such evidence is clearly to the effect that, as a matter of fact and law, the Delaware senate did not, on May 9, 1895, in any manner act or pass judgment, either actually or constructively, upon the qualifications of Governor Watson to a seat in the senate, and hence, for this reason, the Senate of the United States is not concluded from determining, in its own right, as to his qualifications to such seat.

THE JOINT ASSEMBLY HAD NO POWER TO ADJUDICATE UPON THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE GOVERNOR TO A SEAT IN THE STATE SENATE, DID NOT ATTEMPT TO DO SO, BUT PROTESTED AGAINST HIS RIGHT.

The joint assembly for the purpose of electing a Senator had no power to judge of the right of the governor to a seat in the State senate; no power whatever resided in that body to judge of his qualifications, and his presence there and voting and presiding could not possibly have conferred any rights, even if there had been acquiescence on the part of the joint assembly. But there was no acquiescence, but, on the contrary, a vigorous protest.

The record shows (see affidavit of Senator Alrichs, supra) that he, on behalf of himself and fourteen other members of the joint assembly who had voted for Mr. DuPont, presented in said joint assembly the following protest:

"After the last ballot had been taken in said final joint assembly and before the two houses separated I, on behalf of myself and the fourteen other senators voting for the said Henry A. DuPont, arose and presented the following challenge, protest, and demand:

"'I very respectfully challenge the correctness of the announcement of this vote and divers preceding votes, and do now most respectfully insist and demand that Henry A. DuPont be now declared elected Senator for the unexpired term of six years commencing on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1895, inasmuch as it is now respectfully insisted that this joint assembly consists of twenty-nine members, the honorable gentleman now undertaking to preside and participate therein being governor of the State, and not now a senator.'

"After the presentation of the foregoing challenge, protest, and demand, and without taking any further ballot, the joint assembly finally separated, with a declaration from William T. Watson that no person had been elected Senator in Congress for said term.

"SAMUEL ALRICHS.

"Sworn and subscribed before me this twenty-fifth day of November, A. D. 1895. And witness my hand and official seal.

"[SEAL.] JOHN H. FRAZER, Notary Public."

Even had Watson been senator and speaker of the senate on May 9, 1895, both de facto and de jure, he would not from these circumstances have had any preference right over that of any other member of the joint assembly to preside over that body. He would have been there simply as a senator, without any authority whatever in virtue of any law to preside, except by the consent of his associates. This consent was not given, but protested against.

THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES IS NOT CONCLUDED BY ANY CONSTRUCTION PLACED UPON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE CONCERNING THE QUESTION AS TO WHETHER A CERTAIN SEAT IN THE SENATE IS, UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF THAT STATE, OPEN TO OCCUPATION, AND THE RESULTANT RIGHT OF THE GOVERNOR TO OCCUPY SUCH SEAT.

But your committee respectfully insist that any judgment, either actual or constructive, of the Delaware senate as to the right of a person to a seat in such senate to be conclusive on the Senate of the United States, must relate to a seat in the senate subject to occupation.

The senate of the State of Delaware, while possessing the exclusive right to determine as to the qualifications of its members to all seats open to be filled, does not include the right or power upon the part of such senate to judge as to the number of seats in that body, or as to what shall constitute a constitutional vacancy or a constitutional suspension of the right of a particular seat to be filled by anyone, either temporarily or permanently.

The authority given the senate in virtue of the constitutional provision is to judge of the qualifications of members who apply for admission to seats, which seats are provided for by the constitution, and not by the judgment of the senate.

If, therefore, the senate undertakes to determine either that there is a tenth place in the Senate open to occupation by a member, and proceeds to fill that tenth place with a member, when the constitution declares that the senate shall consist of but nine members, or if it undertakes to declare that one of the nine seats is open to occupation, and proceeds to fill that seat, when the constitution declares that, by reason of the senator who occupied that seat having under the constitution become governor, such seat is not open to occupation, and can not be held or its functions exercised by such governor while he continues to hold and exercise the office of governor, then, in either of such cases, it is respectfully submitted, the judgment of the senate of the State of Delaware, however formal and solemn such a judgment may have been, does not conclude the Senate of the United States.

THE DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN THE DUPONT CASE AND THE TURPIE CASE.

The question for consideration here is widely different from that presented to this committee in the Turpie case in the first session of the Fiftieth Congress.

In that case there was no statutory, much less constitutional, question involved as to the number of seats in the Indiana senate open to occupation. The rights of two sets of claimants to two different seats confessedly open to occupation were in issue. There was no question, constitutional, statutory, or otherwise, as to their right to be filled or as to the duty upon the part of the senate to fill them, provided persons having the requisite qualifications were legally elected and returned. It was not only the right, but the duty of the Indiana senate, under the constitutional provisions in that State, to judge as to which set of claimants was legally elected and returned, and whether these had the proper qualifications. In the performance of this duty the Indiana senate held the two sitting members were not entitled to their seats and that the two persons claiming the same were, and the sitting members were ousted and the claimants seated. And this committee and the Senate very properly held that in such case the action of the State senate was conclusive.

Here the question rises to one of infinitely greater importance, involving an inquiry not only as to the qualifications of a person claiming a seat, but the question as to whether, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, there was any seat to be occupied. Argument to show the distinction between the two cases is unnecessary. The mere statement of the difference in the cases carries with it all the argument required.

But still further. In the Indiana case it was not questioned that the senate of Indiana had actually passed upon the question and judged actually of the right of the two claimants who were admitted to the seats to which they were admitted, while here it is clear there was no judgment of the senate of the State of Delaware, either actual or constructive, upon the right of the governor of the State of Delaware to hold or exercise the duties of senator.

THE SEAT FILLED BY GOVERNOR WATSON IN THE STATE SENATE OF DELAWARE, MAY 9, 1895, WAS NOT, IN ANY CORRECT INTERPRETATION OF THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION, OPEN TO OCCUPATION ON THAT DATE.

It is clear, if under the constitution of the State of Delaware, as your committee believe it is, that one of two things is true: Either that the office of senator held by Mr. Watson became absolutely vacant on his accession to the office of governor, or, otherwise, that his right to exercise the functions of senator was held in abeyance and absolutely suspended for and during the time he should continue to exercise the functions of governor. Then, in the former case, there was a vacancy in the office of senator which could only be filled by election, and the right of the governor to fill it was one not open to the consideration or determination of the senate, because that matter is already determined by the constitution, while in the latter case there is by the provisions of the constitution no seat open to occupation. It can not in such case be filled by anyone, much less by the governor, and if the senate undertakes to fill it, either with the governor or anyone else, it is a judgment that is ultra vires and does not conclude the Senate of the United States.

In this connection it may be conceded that instances might occur where the judgment of a State senate as to the qualifications of one of its members may be binding on the Senate of the United States, although confessedly the effect of such judgment may be to admit a person to a seat who is lacking in an essential qualification. But it proceeds upon the theory that when certain facts are found to exist, although such finding may be erroneous, the judgment is binding. As, for instance, the constitution of the State of Delaware prescribes as a qualification for State senator that he shall be 27 years of age. Suppose the senate admit a person to a seat in the senate who, as a matter of fact, is but 20 years of age, but there is nothing in the record, nothing in the judgment of the senate passing upon his qualifications that discloses the fact that he was but 20 years of age. In such case it is believed the judgment of the senate would conclude the United States Senate. But in such case suppose the record, the judgment of the senate upon the question of qualification, found as a fact that the applicant was but 20 years of age, and then on such finding admitted him to a seat, is it not entirely clear that such a judgment would not be conclusive upon this body?

But three other States, namely, Pennsylvania, Maine, and Colorado, have ever had constitutions embracing in corresponding provisions the same qualifying words of the Delaware constitution, namely, "during his continuance in office." Therefore it is that in those States only can we look for judicial decisions or authorities on the question whether Governor Watson can exercise the office of senator during his incumbency of the office of governor.

On the 14th of January, 1830, Joshua Hall was chosen president of the Maine senate. Soon thereafter the governor died, and he became the governor. Sixteen senators, including Mr. Hall, had been admitted and sworn. On the 26th of January the senate decided that there were four vacancies. Under the constitution these vacancies were to be filled by a joint assembly of the two houses of the legislature. On February — the house of representatives sent a message to the senate requestiug that body to meet the house in joint assembly for the election of senators to fill the vacancies. On the 2d of February, the senate being in session, a senator moved an adjournment to enable the senate to meet the representatives in joint assembly. Mr. Hall, who was then exercising the office of governor, appeared in the senate and claimed the right to act as president. The vote was taken by yeas and nays. Hall voted in the negative. His vote being counted the result was, yeas 8, nays 8, and the motion was lost. On the 13th of February Mr. Jonathan G. Hunton, having been in the meantime elected governor, submitted certain questions to the supreme court, in pursuance of the Maine constitution. One of these questions was the following:

"2d. Has the president of the senate, when the office of governor is vacant, and when he ought to be acting as governor, a right to preside and vote at the senate board?"

The answer to this question was given by the chief justice, with the concurrence of the other justices, in the following words:

"As to the second question my opinion is that, while the president of the senate, in virtue of his office as such, is clothed with the power of exercising the office of governor, he has no right to preside over the senate or to vote as a member of that body. (Opinion of the justices, 7 Greenleaf, 483.)"

The provision of the Maine constitution, it will be seen, is in substance and effect, in fact almost literally, similar to that of the Delaware constitution.

It is as follows:

"ART. IV, SEC. 14. Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be qualified."

There is a provision of the Maine constitution which to some extent impairs, but by no means destroys, the value of the decision of the Maine court, supra, as an authority in the case now under consideration. It is to the effect that while the president of the senate exercises the office of governor his duties as president of the senate shall be suspended and a president pro tempore elected. The provision is not that his powers and duties as president of the senate shall be suspended, but merely that his duties as such shall be suspended. It is very clear, of course, that if a man's power to perform certain acts is suspended his obligation to perform them must also be suspended. He can not be charged with the obligation while stripped of the power to perform them. But it is not so clear that the suspension of the obligation is also the suspension of his power to perform the acts. He may have the power without being required to exercise it, except at his discretion or convenience. It is not clear that the suspension of the obligation to act as president of the Maine senate did not leave it in the power of the officer to perform or not perform, at his discretion or convenience, the duties, not of senator, but of president of the senate.

But if this peculiar provision of the Maine constitution does, in truth, suspend the acting governor's power and duty to preside over the senate, it certainly does not suspend or purport to suspend his power, or his duty, to vote as senator. If his power or duty to vote as senator is suspended, it must be suspended by some other provision of the State constitution. That other provision is to be found in a clause, which is common to both the Maine and the Delaware constitutions, to the effect that "no person holding any office, under the State, shall, during his continuance in office, be a senator or representative." And this gives great value and weight to the Maine decision as an authority in the case under consideration, for it makes the Maine case and the Delaware case, so far as this point is concerned, closely analogous. The prohibition against voting as senator is the same in both constitutions.

The following is the provision of the Maine constitution, which suspends the duty of the governor to preside over the senate:

"ART. 4, SEC. 14. Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified; and, in case of the death, resignation, removal from office, or other disqualification of the president of the senate so exercising the office of governor, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a president of the senate shall have been chosen; and when the office of governor, president of the senate, and speaker of the house shall become vacant, in the recess of the senate, the person acting as secretary of state for the time being shall, by proclamation, convene the senate, that a president may be chosen to exercise the office of governor. And whenever either the president of the senate or speaker of the house shall so exercise said office, he shall receive only the compensation of governor; but his duties as president or speaker shall be suspended; and the senate or house shall fill the vacancy until his duties as governor shall cease."

THE CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS OF THE OFFICE OF A DELAWARE SENATOR WHO HAS SUCCEEDED TO THE OFFICE OF GOVERNOR IS ESSENTIALLY THE SAME AS THAT OF THE OFFICE OF A SENATOR OR REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS DURING THE INTERVAL BETWEEN THE 4TH OF MARCH, THE COMMENCEMENT OF HIS TERM, AND THE DATE OF HIS RESIGNATION OF ANOTHER FEDERAL OFFICE HELD BY HIM AT THE COMMENCEMENT OF HIS TERM.

The constitutional status of the office of a Delaware senator who has succeeded to the office of governor would seem to be essentially the same as that of the office of a Senator or Representative in Congress during the interval between the 4th of March, the commencement of his term, and the date of his resignation of another Federal office held by him at the commencement of his term. In each case the office is in abeyance, whether it be characterized as a temporary vacancy or as a suspension. If in one case the office of State senator remains in abeyance during the State senator's continuance in the office of governor, so in the other case does the office of Federal Senator or Representative remain in abeyance during the Federal Senator's or Representative's continuance in the prior Federal office.

It is true that in one case the prior office has been actually exercised while in the other it has not. But this difference would not seem to affect the principle involved, for the following reasons:

First. The constitutions of Delaware and the United States are, on this point, substantially identical. The words of the Delaware constitution are—

"No * * * person holding any office under * * * this State shall, during his continuance * * * in office, be a senator or representative."

The following is the corresponding clause of the Federal Constitution:

"No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

Second, the seat in the Delaware senate which had been occupied by the governor must, during his incumbency of the latter office, be either (1) subject to occupation, or (2) absolutely vacant, or (3) in abeyance. There is no other possible status of the senatorial office from which the speaker of the senate is transferred to the office of governor. So also the seat of the Federal Senator or Representative must, during the interval between the 4th of March and his resignation of his other office, be either (1) subject to occupation, or (2) absolutely vacant, or (3) in abeyance. If the office of the State senator is subject to occupation by the governor, while he is governor, so also is the office of Senator or Representative in Congress subject to occupation by the holder of another Federal office while he holds such office. If the office of Federal Senator or Representative becomes absolutely and permanently vacant so also does the office of State senator become absolutely vacant. If the office of the Federal Senator or Representative is in abeyance, and the right to exercise it suspended, so also is the office of the State senator in abeyance and the right to exercise it suspended.

The law provides for the payment of the salaries of the Federal Representatives from the commencement of their terms on the 4th of March. This means that they hold their office from that date, provided they hold no other Federal offices. But they are not sworn and do not exercise their office until Congress meets after the lapse of eight months. If they hold other Federal offices on or after March 4, their office of Representative is not absolutely vacated, but is only placed in abeyance. It is then in abeyance for precisely the same reason for which the office of State senator is in abeyance when he exercises the office of governor. In each case the office is in abeyance because of the temporary exercise of another office. The Federal Representative may not be sworn until the expiration of eight months after his term begins. But the oath does not confer the office. It is not a prerequisite to the tenure of the office. It is only a prerequisite to the exercise of the office.

The decisions of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, fixing the status of the office of Senator or Representative during the interval between the 4th of March and the resignation of another Federal office held on that day, will therefore be valuable authorities for the case now under consideration.

James H. Lane was chosen United States Senator by the Kansas legislature in April, 1861. On the 20th of June, 1861, he was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers by the President, and he accepted the office. On the 4th of July, 1861, he took his seat in the Senate, having previously resigned the office of brigadier-general. On the 8th of July, 1861, the governor of Kansas, assuming that Mr. Lane's acceptance of the office of brigadier-general had vacated his office of Senator, appointed Frederic P. Stanton to fill the vacancy. Mr. Stanton presented his credentials and claimed the seat, but the Senate awarded the seat to Mr. Lane. Numerous cases in the National House of Representatives are to the same effect and recognize the same principle.

NO QUESTION OF FACT IN THIS CASE UPON WHICH THE DELAWARE SENATE WAS CALLED UPON TO ACT.

In the case under consideration there is no question of fact upon which the Delaware senate could act or did act, and which action, although erroneous, would conclude the Senate of the United States; upon the contrary, the senate, assuming for the present it passed judgment on the qualifications of Watson, and taking the facts as they were and are, open, notorious, conceded by all, and disclosed as well by the journals of the senate, and in reference to which there can be no dispute, namely, that Senator and Speaker Watson was then governor, essayed to place him in a seat in the senate which the constitution on these conceded facts declares to be not subject to occupation, any more than would be a tenth seat in the senate when the constitution declares the senate shall consist of but nine members. Hence this is such a judgment, it is believed, as is not binding on the United States Senate. The Senate is not concluded by such a judgment any more than it would be concluded by a judgment which on its face disclosed the fact that the senate of the State of Delaware had on the 9th day of May, 1895, instead of admitting Governor Watson to a seat, had admitted President Cleveland or a tenth member to that body.

While it is the exclusive right of the senate of Delaware to determine, or, in the language of the Constitution, judge, as to the qualifications of a Senator, this does not include the right or power on the part of such senate to declare the kind or number of qualifications a person must have to entitle him to a seat in the Senate. These are determined by the Constitution itself. The senate can neither add to nor detract from them, can neither increase, reduce, nor modify their number or character. What the senate can do, what it has a constitutional right to do, is to judge whether a particular person is possessed of the qualifications which the Constitution and the statutes have prescribed. Hence it is if the Constitution declare that a certain person for any reason is ineligible to a seat in the Senate, and the judgment of the senate discloses on its face this fact of constitutional ineligibility, and the senate thus admits to a seat a person whom the Constitution declares is debarred, then such judgment, however formal or solemn, it is submitted, does not conclude the Senate of the United States.

As bearing upon and in support of this view, your committee attract attention to the following authorities:

AUTHORITIES.

In Prouty v. Stover (11 Kans., 235) the validity of the election of a State printer by a joint assembly of the Kansas legislature was assailed. The question arose whether the action of the State senate, admitting and retaining certain senators, was made conclusive of their right to sit in the senate and vote in the joint assembly by the constitutional provision which made each house "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." This action of the senate practically construed the law of Kansas to recognize certain seats in the senate as subject to occupation. It was claimed that this was conclusive on the courts. But the court held that the power of the senate to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members did not include the power to conclusively construe the law to recognize the seats as subject to occupation, or to admit or retain the occupants of those seats. Judge Brewer, now an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Defendants claim that this court can not look beyond the action of the house to inquire whether persons, admitted as members, were legally entitled to seats. Article 2, section 8, declares that each house "shall be judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." Its determination is not the subject of repeal or review. It is final and concludes everyone. But what is included in this power? Does the power to judge of the qualifications of its members include the power to increase such membership? Can it enlarge its members without limit? Is it like an academy of science, or a lodge of Odd Fellows, capable of indefinite expansion? If the law fixed the number of senators at twenty-five, could those twenty-five admit twenty-five more, on pretense of judging "of the elections and qualifications of its own members," and thus create a senate of fifty members? If this power exists, how easily could a partisan majority secure to itself a two-thirds vote, by simply admitting new members. To create a representative, or senatorial district requires a law—the consent of both houses. Neither house, by itself, can create a district and then admit someone to represent it. The district must exist before it can be represented."

In State v. Frances (26 Kans., 724) it was contended that a certain act of the legislature had failed to receive a constitutional majority of votes, and was, therefore, void.

The question was whether four of the representatives whose votes were decisive in favor of this act, in the house, were lawful members of that body. The house of representatives, by its action admitting and retaining these four members, had construed the law and constitution to recognize their seats as subject to occupation at the time. The court overruled this construction, held that there were no seats in the house for these four representatives, and declared the act in question to be void. The court said:

"Therefore, whenever the house of representatives consists of more than one hundred and twenty-five members some of such members must be there illegally. Such was the case in 1879. The house of representatives, at that time, consisted of one hundred and twenty-nine members. Four of these members, to wit, the four from Rooks, Rush, Harper and Kingman counties, who were not provided for by law, and who were the last members admitted to seats, were not entitled to their seats. And the act in controversy was passed only by the assistance of their votes. Except for their votes, or at least three of their votes, the act would not have received a constitutional majority of the votes of the members of the house; and, not counting their votes, the act did not receive a constitutional majority. Now, we do not think that their votes should be counted; and, therefore, we think the act in controversy must be held as not having passed the house of representatives, and as void."

In Yard v. Meeser (44 Penn. St., 341) the common council of Philadelphia, which was invested with the power to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, had construed the law to recognize two seats as subject to occupation by representatives of the Fifth Ward, and had admitted a second member from that ward. The court, in an action to restrain the payment of the salary of the second councilman from this ward, overruled the construction given to the law by the common council, held that the law did not recognize the second seat, and declared that its occupant was not a lawful member of the common council. The court said:

"This court has no authority to judge whether the election was regulary conducted or not, for that duty is assigned by law to the councils. Our duty must be confined to the decision of the question whether there was an office or vacancy to be filled."

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, pages 52–55, says:

"It follows, therefore, that every Department of the Government, and every official of every Department, may, at any time when a duty is to be performed, be required to pass upon a question of constitutional construction. Sometimes the case will be such that the decision, when made, must, from the very nature of things, be conclusive and subject to no repeal or review, however erroneous it may be, in the opinion of other Departments or of other officers; but, in other cases, the same question may be required to be passed upon again before the duty is completely performed. The first of these classes is where, by the Constitution, a particular question is plainly addressed to the discretion of some one Department or officer, so that the interference of any other Department or officer, with a view to the substitution of its own discretion or judgment in the place of that to which the Constitution has confided the decision would be impertinent and intrusive. * * * But there are cases in which the question of construction is equally addressed to two or more Departments of the Government, and it then becomes important to know whether the decision by one is binding upon the others, or whether each is to act upon its own judgment. * * * But setting aside now those cases to which we have referred, when from the nature of things, and perhaps from explicit terms of the Constitution, the judgment of the Department or officer acting must be final, we shall find the general rule to be that, whenever action is taken which may become the subject of a suit or proceeding in court, any question of constitutional power or right that was involved in such action will be open for consideration in such suit or proceeding, and, as the court must finally settle the particular controversy, so also will they finally determine the question of constitutional law."

This is a case, therefore, if there can be said to be any question open to construction in which, in the language of Judge Cooley, "the question of construction is equally addressed to two or more departments of the Government." It is in all respects similar in principle to that class of cases referred to by this eminent jurist wherein action is taken which may become the subject of a suit or proceeding in court. Any question of constitutional power or right that was involved in such action will be open for consideration in such suit or proceeding, and the court must finally settle the particular controversy; so also will they determine the question of constitutional law. Here the Senate of the United States being called to act judicially under the constitutional grant authorizing it to judge of the elections and qualifications of its members—and this necessarily involves a construction of the Delaware constitution—hence, it is not bound, it is respectfully submitted, by any judgment of the Delaware senate on that subject.

If, as a matter of constitutional law, the office of senator and speaker of the senate held by Watson became absolutely vacant when he succeeded to the executive office, any judgment of the State senate seeking to clothe him with power to hold or exercise the office of State senator would be a mere brutem fulmen, an act in all respects ultra vires, for the plain reason it would be a judgment assigning him a seat in the senate which, under the constitution, is not assignable or subject to occupation. Such an act upon the part of the Delaware senate would be something infinitely more in scope and effect than simply to judge of the qualifications of a person to a seat in the senate. It would be to declare a seat subject to occupation which the constitution declares shall not be occupied.

And this view is equally applicable to this case whether the office of senator becomes absolutely vacant on the speaker of the senate becoming governor, or whether the right to exercise the office of senator while exercising the office of governor is merely held in abeyance and suspended. And any such judgment, it is respectfully submitted, is not binding on the Senate of the United States, and can not deprive that body under its power to judge of the qualifications of its members, of determining whether under the constitution of the State of Delaware the governor of that State can be permitted to hold or exercise the office of senator at the same time he holds and exercises the office of governor.

AT COMMON LAW THE SAME PERSON SHALL NOT HOLD OR EXERCISE SIMULTANEOUSLY INCOMPATIBLE OFFICES.

In support of our first proposition that it is a well-settled rule of the common law that the same person shall not exercise simultaneously incompatible offices, and, further, that the acceptance of an office incompatible with the one held is ipso facto a resignation of the other, we attract attention to the following authorities:

In the case of Milward v. Thatcher (2 T. R., 81) it was held that accepting the office of town clerk vacated the office of jurat of the corporation of Hastings, although the office of clerk was inferior to that of jurat, the jurats sitting as judges of a court of record; and the court, Mr. Justice Bulwer, in announcing the opinion said:

"Now, if the offices be incompatible, his being a jurat before is no objection to his election; and if they be incompatible, the election to the latter office is good, because the acceptance of the second vacates the first office. * * * The case of the King v. Sir W. Trelawney, so far as the question was entered into, is an authority. There the court did not distinguish between a superior and inferior officer; but Lord Mansfield expressly said that 'if the two officers were incompatible the acceptance of the latter would imply a surrender of the former.'"

Mr. Justice Bulwer further, in the opinion in that case, said:

"If two offices can not be held by the same person at the same time, the acceptance of the latter office vacates the former."

In the King v. Pateman (2 Durnf. and East, 777), Lord Chief Justice Kenyon said:

"If an alderman be also a magistrate, and the town clerk act ministerially under him, then, indeed, these two offices can not be held by the same person. Now, here is a question whether the town clerk's accounts are not allowed by the alderman; if they are, I think the two offices are incompatible, and this information should be for the purpose of trying that fact."

In The King v. Tizzard (9 B. and C., 418), Mr. Justice Bailey gives the following as one definition of incompatible offices:

"The two offices are incompatible when the holder can not in every instance discharge the duties of each."

And further says Mr. Justice Bailey:

"The acceptance of the second office therefore vacates the first. So a man shall lose his office if he accepts another office incompatible."

Can it be said that any man can in every instance discharge the duties of both governor and State senator, much less those of governor, senator, and speaker of the senate?

Chief Justice Appleton, in Stubbs v. Lee (64 Me., 195), decided in 1874, in discussing what constituted incompatible offices, and also the effect of the acceptance of an office incompatible with one already held, referred to the common law doctrine, and citing the foregoing English authorities, says:

"'The offices in question must be regarded as incompatible. I think,' remarks Baily, J., in The King v. Tizzard (9 B. and C., 418), 'that the two offices are incompatible when the holder can not in every instance discharge the duties of each. * * * The acceptance of the second office therefore vacates the first. * * * So a man shall lose his office if he accepts another office incompatible; as if one be under the control of the other; as if the remembrancer of the exchequer be made a baron of the exchequer.' (5 Com. Dig., tit. 'Officer' (K. 5.) The appointment of a person to a second office incompatible with the first is not absolutely void, but on his subsequently accepting the appointment and qualifying, the first office is ipso facto vacated. (The People v. Carrique, 2 Hill, 93.)

"A vacancy may arise in an office from an implied resignation, as by the incumbent's accepting an incompatible office (Van Orsdale v. Hazard, 3 Hill, 243). The acceptance of the office of constable of a town by a person holding at the time the office of justice of the peace is of itself a surrender of the latter office (Magie v. Stoddard, 25 Conn., 565)."

Mr. Justice Appleton, in further discussing this question in case supra, says:

"Where one has two incompatible offices, both can not be retained. The public has a right to know which is held and which is surrendered. It should not be left to chance or to the uncertain and fluctuating whim of the officeholder to determine. The general rule, therefore, that the acceptance of and qualification for an office incompatible with one then held is a resignation of the former is one certain and reliable as well as one indispensable for the protection of the public.

"The defendant having been appointed and sworn as a deputy sheriff must be regarded as having accepted that office. By that acceptance he surrendered the office of trial justice, a judicial office incompatible with that of a deputy sheriff. His judicial authority, therefore, as a trial justice was at an end."

Justice Cowen in discussing the question as to the effect of the acceptance of one office upon the other, in The People v. Carrique (2 Hill, 97), says:

"This is an absolute determination of the original office, and leaves no shadow of title to the possessor, so that neither quo warranto nor a motion is necessary before any other may be elected (vide Millcock on Municipal Corporations, 240, pl. 617; to the same point Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Trelawney, 3 Burr., 1616; Butler, J., in Milward v. Thatcher, 2 T. R., 87)."

Also in Van Orsdall v. Hazard (3 Hill, 248), the court said:

"A vacancy sometimes arises from a mere implied resignation by accepting an office incompatible with that which is claimed to be vacated."

THE AMERICAN RULE IS THAT LEGISLATIVE AND EXECUTIVE OFFICES ARE INCOMPATIBLE.

Your committee recognize the doctrine as enunciated in the foregoing authorities as being the well-settled common law and American rule upon the subject of incompatible offices, both as to what constitutes incompatibility and as to the effect of the acceptance of an incompatible office in operating ipso facto a resignation of the former. A vacancy in such case is at once created, and it is not necessary there should be any legislative or judicial declaration to that effect. It is such a vacancy as may be filled at once by the proper appointing power. And your committee further hold that the American rule is that legislative and executive offices are incompatible; that this general rule, so far from being weakened, is strengthened and confirmed by the fact that in a number of instances, for special reasons, the same person, and sometimes the same legislative body, is, by specific constitutional or legislative provision, clothed partially with both legislative and executive powers.

John M. Clayton, a leading and influential member, as stated by counsel in their brief in opposition to Mr. Du Pont, of the constitutional convention of the State of Delaware of 1831, recognized and strongly urged recognition of this doctrine by that convention. He said:

"I have a high opinion of the Senators as men; but I object to the principle of conferring on them executive powers. It is highly important to keep as distinct as possible the legislative and executive departments. This principle is recognized in all our bills of rights. But here we should be blending legislative and executive powers."

THERE IS NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED AUTHORITY IN THE DELAWARE CONSTITUTION FOR THE SIMULTANEOUS EXERCISE BY THE SAME PERSON OF THE OFFICES OF GOVERNOR AND STATE SENATOR.

There is no express or implied authority in the Delaware constitution for the simultaneous exercise by the same person of the offices of governor and senator. On the contrary, the constitution expressly inhibits such exercise of those two offices, and therefore, at the time Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes in the joint convention, Mr. Watson being then governor of the State, holding and exercising that executive office, was incapable of exercising the office of senator.

Section 12 of Article II of the Delaware constitution, among other things, provides as follows:

"SEC. 12. * * * No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia holding no disqualifying office shall, during his continuance in Congress, or in office, be a senator or representative."

Your committee regard this provision as absolutely disqualifying the governor of the State of Delaware, whether elected by the people or having succeeded to the office to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the governor, from being a senator, or from exercising any of the functions of a senator. The provision is clear and specific, open to no ambiguity in its declaration that no person holding any office under the State, or of the United States, with certain exceptions, which are stated, shall "during his continuance in such office be a senator or representative."

Mr. Watson was, on the 9th day of May, 1895, confessedly the governor of the State of Delaware. He was therefore on that date holding an office under the State of Delaware. As the governor is not named in the exceptions, namely, "the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia holding no disqualifying office," he was therefore disqualified from being a senator in the senate of the State on that date. In other words, there was a place made vacant in the senate, either absolutely, or for and during the time the speaker of the senate should continue to exercise the office of governor, which, by express constitutional provision, he, the governor of the State, was prohibited from filling—a vacancy such as was open only to occupation, if at all, by a person elected by the qualified electors of Kent County.

But not only so. It is further provided, in section 5 of Article III of the Delaware constitution, as follows:

"SEC. 5. No member of Congress nor person holding office under the United States or this State shall exercise the office of governor."
